From New England mills, from Pennsylvania factories, from plants in the Middle West and South, manufactured goods began to flow as brooks, streams, and rivers of freight into the eastbound railway systems of the country. On top of this came the natural products of the country—wheat and citrus fruits from the West, lumber, and a thousand and one things—to feed and shelter Europe's war-busy peoples.

The port of New York had to serve as the great dam behind which all these products were to be impounded before being turned into the subsidiary channels. The docks were the sluices through which this enormous mass of export material must be passed down into the holds of waiting ships. So many ships came to carry goods away there was no room for them, the freight began to pile up on wharves and terminals, and freight cars began to lengthen their lines on sidings until the present climax came.

NEEDS FOR SHIPS.

At the present time there is five times as much freight ready for export in the port of New York as the waiting ships can take. In and around the city there are 50,000 freight cars standing, which is twice as many as the amount of freight-car shortage reported for the rest of the country.

Wherever one goes around the waterfront of Manhattan, Brooklyn, Jersey City, Hoboken, and Staten Island there is the same picture, repeated over and over again, of a lot of pygmies toiling away at removing mountains of freight on which they seem to make no impression whatever. And conditions are so bad that traffic managers are asking for all kinds of extensions of time for delivering local freight.

GERMAN DOCKS ARE IDLE.

A broken journey northward through the freight terminals make this panorama of freight congestion even more impressive. Passing backward and forward across the ferries, the enormous amount of traffic going on in the North River was noticeable, the only blank spot in all this maritime activity being along the Hamburg-American and North German Lloyds piers, where interned ships are lying idle.

West Street, up to Fourteenth Street, in Manhattan, is a vast jumble of freight, trucks, exasperated drivers, and traffic policemen, trying to keep something like order in the welter of vehicular movement.

The upper West Side of Manhattan's river front has two evidences of crowded condition of the harbor, for north of the Fort Lee Ferry there are two Hamburg-American liners tied up at a pier there for the first time in history, the company having moved them from its South Brooklyn docks to rent the space to a line of neutral ships that can carry cargo to Europe which the German-owned boats can not.

Down along the East River waterfront the mass of freight and trucks seems quite as bad as along West Street, while the confusion of river craft is much worse.

Owing to the fact that there are more ocean-going ships berthed along the Brooklyn waterfront than ever before, there is an extraordinary number of lighters and car floats in and around those docks.

Over on the Manhattan side of the East River there was a swarm of river craft in front of the Ward Line piers that looked as if some terrific storm had thrown the tugs, barges, and lighters there in inextricable confusion.

All sorts of expedients have been suggested by freight-traffic managers to relieve this situation, including embargoes on eastbound goods from the Far and Middle West, and the fixing of charges for cars held in New York terminals longer than 15 days.

OCEAN CARRIERS REQUIRED.

But no one knows whether the last-named expedient will help the situation much, while the mention of the word embargo in connection with freight movements raises objections by shippers and railways.

Only one cure for the situation seems possible, and that is the coming into the port of New York at once of five times as many empty ships as are here now. And with present conditions in the ocean-carrying trade that possible cure is impossible.

So long as the present enormous export and domestic business exists, just so long will the freight congestion around New York continue to remain the worst it has ever known.

Mr. WALSH. The threatened embargoes anticipated by the article have been laid by practically every line entering the city of New York. The article just read advises us that about November 26 as many as 50,000 cars were standing on the sidetracks in the yards about that great port and that no impression was being made upon the congested condition. The New York World of December 25 asserts that on that date the number had increased until it had reached the enormous total of 150,000 cars. Can we appreciate, can we comprehend, what that means? It signifies the equivalent of a train of cars reaching from the city of New York to Chicago. So many and more are congregated in the terminals and yards about New York awaiting disposition.

The conditions are detailed in a dispatch from New York to the Chicago Tribune under date of December 17, which reads as follows:

Practically every railroad connecting Chicago with the Atlantic seaboard yesterday placed an embargo on all shipments for export purposes. Only perishable goods, such as fresh meat and other foodstuffs, are exempt.

Lack of ocean-going vessels and an unparalleled congested condition of the freight yards and docks at the principal seaports in the East are given as the reason.

Loaded freight cars by the thousands are standing on every available siding for miles outside of New York. Warehouses and elevators at the eastern ports are choked up with grain, and freight houses are packed to the roofs with shipments of all kinds.

The embargo is placed principally against grain, 4,000 cars of which are said to be awaiting shipment at eastern ports.

THESE LINES ARE AFFECTED.

The railroads which have issued embargoes out of Chicago are: New York Central, Wabash, Pennsylvania, Erie, Lehigh Valley, Norfolk & Western, Baltimore & Ohio, Lackawanna.

OCEAN EQUIPMENT SHORT.

"The fault does not lie with the railroads," explained J. S. Browne, head of the traffic department of the board of trade, "but with insufficient ocean shipping facilities. The warehouses and elevators at Philadelphia, New York, Baltimore, Buffalo, and Newport News are overloaded. The eastern terminals are so choked it will be impossible for the railroads to handle any more shipments from the Central West until things are cleared up. The embargo not only applies to grain, but has been extended to steel, flour, and other exports by some of the roads as well."

And of similar import is a dispatch sent to the Louisville Courier-Journal, under date of December 21, as follows:

The committee representing all trunk-line railroads leading into New York announced to-day that the freight embargoes declared by the many roads have failed to ameliorate the traffic congestion, there being approximately 50,000 cars destined for New York on lines or at terminals.

Acting on this, the Pennsylvania, New York Central, and Lehigh Valley to-day declared additional stringent embargoes on freight consigned to New York for export or coastwise shipment.

The Pennsylvania extended its recent embargo on virtually all freight for export, coastwise or domestic deliveries, except dressed meats, other perishable freight and food products to include shipments originating on the Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Baltimore & Washington, and West Jersey & Seashore Railroads.

The New York Central declared an embargo on all carload freight except live stock, grain, fresh meat, provisions, and munitions.

The Lehigh Valley declared an embargo on all eastbound freight from connecting lines excepting flour and grain products, live stock, dressed meats, perishable freight, coal, coke, fuel, oil, and provisions.

That the evil and the loss extend to all parts of the country and is not confined to any particular section is disclosed by the substance of a later telegram from Baltimore to the New York World, under date of January 3, as follows:

The Western Maryland Railroad to-day issued an order, effective at the close of business to-morrow, placing an embargo until further notice on all shipments of grain to this port for export. There are nearly 2,000,000 bushels of grain in storage here awaiting ships.

Mr. President, while it is perfectly obvious that the principal factor in this remarkable congestion is the want of necessary ships for carrying the export trade, the conditions can not be assigned altogether to that cause. Indeed, they are to a very large extent somewhat obscure. I have a communication from a leading railroad man conversant with the situation who has this to say concerning the conditions and the causes——

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I simply rose to say that there is general complaint among the farmers of my section as to the lack of shipping facilities for cotton. A large farmers' organization, the Farmers' Union, is sending a delegation here now to see if something can not be done to relieve the situation.

Mr. WALSH. The letter contains the following. It is under date of January 4:

We see no immediate change in the condition, as the surplus has not yet been absorbed, and the exporting is about the same rate per day as formerly, and it requires several days, or even weeks, for an embargo to afford material relief owing to the long distances to the originating points of the freight. It is difficult to give an analysis of the causes to determine to what extent the embargo is occasioned by lack of ships. That appears, of course, to be one of the primary causes. There appear to be, however, many other causes beyond our knowledge. You appreciate, of course, that many of the ships belong to the belligerent nations, and they are sent to the various ports to obtain certain commodities for their particular needs, and there appears to be considerable delay in doing this. Instead of taking on a general cargo and departing, the ocean shipping is for the foreign interests, and it is beyond our power to expedite it.

An inquiry into certain features of the problem is now being conducted by the Interstate Commerce Commission. A preliminary report has been received by the commission, containing a paragraph advancing views that are interesting and important to have in mind at this time. It is as follows:

The present congestion is the result of a combination of circumstances. It began with the freight handlers' strike of last September. The closing of the Panama Canal has been a contributing cause. But the most important cause is the unprecedented volume of export traffic, a large part of which has been consigned to New York without space having been previously engaged on the steamers. War munitions are being sold cash f. o. b. bill of lading, by which is meant that the shippers receive cash for the goods as soon as they obtain the bill of lading from the railroad. This, of course, tends to encourage shippers to unload the freight upon the railroads, which in turn causes congestion. There is also an unusual amount of freight consigned to foreign ports to which there are no regular sailings, most of this commerce having been heretofore handled by England, Germany, and France. Much of the trouble is due to the lack of lighterage facilities in New York Harbor, and it is quite generally believed that the lighterage facilities were inadequate even in normal times. While a great many steamers have been overbooked and are consequently unable to take all the freight for which they contracted, there are many cases where steamers with ample space have been delayed because no lighters could be secured to deliver the freight to them. In New York the railroads as a rule furnish the lighters and are required to deliver the freight at shipments. They can not deliver to steamers, however, until permits or orders are issued. It has even happened that after permits have been issued by the steamers they have declined to take the freight tendered, because of later instructions received from certain foreign Governments to take only war munitions. It is rumored that some of these orders are based upon cable advices received through J. P. Morgan & Co.

The situation seems to be particularly burdensome in New England—so much so that the President of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co. recently addressed to the Interstate Commerce Commission a communication which is substantially a confession of total inability to deal with the situation. It is so important in many aspects that I am sending it to the desk, and ask that it may be read for the information of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE NEW YORK, NEW HAVEN & HARTFORD RAILROAD CO., EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
South Station, Boston, December 28, 1915.

To the INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION; PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION OF CONNECTICUT; PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION OF MASSACHUSETTS; PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION, FIRST DISTRICT, OF NEW YORK; PUBLIC SERVICE COMMISSION, SECOND DISTRICT, OF NEW YORK; PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION OF RHODE ISLAND:

I desire to submit to you on behalf of the New Haven Co. and its allied lines a statement about present conditions due to congestion of business on its own lines, congestion in and around New York Harbor, and on many of its connecting lines, conditions which have been made much worse by the great storm of December 13–14, which seriously reduced the ability of the railroads to give a maximum amount of service with the facilities at hand, and by the storm of December 26, which did much damage and destroyed and retarded the work of restoring wire communication by telegraph and telephone, and of clearing the road of delayed freight. Prior to the great storm of December 13–14 the New Haven road, with facilities that in many places are wholly inadequate, had been doing the largest volume of business in its history, and has been performing a task in handling that business which is taxing its physical facilities. The volume of business may be evidenced by the following figures showing the number of cars of freight loaded locally on New Haven rails and the number of loaded cars received from connections for the first eight days of a number of months in 1915 as compared with the same eight days in the same months in 1914 and 1913:

September	42,484	39,626	39,487
October	47,361	43,360	44,673
November	47,766	39,176	45,621
December	50,677	37,748	44,198

The New Haven road has on its rails to-day nearly 46,000 freight cars, which is about 8,000 cars more than it had a year ago and 12,000 more than in December, 1913. The result is that its tracks, terminals, and other facilities are congested at many places. There are more than 12,000 loaded cars awaiting the discharge of their freight, but the owners of the freight are having some of the same difficulty that the New Haven is having, because their own facilities are inadequate in places and cars are not released promptly. To-day, on account of storms and congestion, connecting lines have more than 8,000 loads for delivery, mostly at New York and via the Poughkeepsie Bridge, as soon as this company can handle them.

It is interesting to note that the New Haven, with 4,535 miles of tracks, including main-line running tracks, side tracks, and yards, had during the first eight days of December 50,677 new loads, while the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy system, extending through 10 States, with 12,869 miles of trackage, during the same week had 48,230 cars. These figures indicate how large the New England freight business is. In addition, the passenger train service is much heavier than on a railroad like the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, and makes the problem of furnishing transportation in sufficient quantity and of satisfactory quality under the present unusual and congested conditions that much more difficult.

For reasons that need not be outlined in this letter the New Haven has not been able to add materially to its facilities during the last few years, particularly during the last two, when the company has been going through a period of depression, investigation, readjustment, and reconstruction of its financial and corporate status. Improvements have been authorized, not including equipment, which are being made as rapidly as men, material, and weather will permit, that will cost nearly $5,000,000. In addition to this, very large sums should be spent, if money can be obtained, for additions to tracks, bridges, terminals, engine facilities, and motive power, both steam and electric.

In spite of financial troubles the freight equipment of the company is in much better shape than it was a year ago. A year ago there were 4,800 freight cars in bad order, and now there are less than 1,600, a marked improvement, and a number not far from the minimum that may be expected with 46,000 cars on the road. The company has placed orders for 33 powerful freight locomotives, to be delivered in January and February, and 500 coal cars, which are promised in March, costing about $1,500,000.

The company has tried to relieve its rail lines just so far as it could by diverting busineses to its boat lines, but here again it has not been able to add to its facilities because of the uncertainty surrounding the future of the boat lines. The company considered very seriously placing an order nearly a year ago for two additional freight steamers to run on Long Island Sound, but it did not feel that it had the right to borrow the large sum of money necessary, considering the fact that within a comparatively short time the company might be ordered, under the Panama Canal act, to dispose of all its water lines. The relief, therefore, given by the boats is not as great as the company would like.

There comes a time when the volume of business that is being done by a man, a steel mill, a hotel, and a railroad is more than the physical ability of the man or the enterprise to carry on successfully, and in such cases the part of prudence is to state the case frankly to customers and patrons and to explain why there is delay in furnishing goods, accommodation, or service. It looks to-day as if for the time being the New Haven road can do no more than it is doing, and that it may have to withdraw temporarily from some kinds of business.

The management of the New Haven earnestly hopes that the result of the efforts now being made on its own road and on its connecting lines will permit the present large volume of business to continue and that it will be necessary to put out so-called "embargoes" and curtail service for only limited periods of time, but it feels that it should state to you the situation that is confronting it at the present time, a condition brought about by causes that are beyond its control. The management will be glad to receive any suggestions from you, who represent both the public and the railroads, as to steps that can be taken.

Respectfully submitted.

HOWARD ELLIOTT,
Chairman and President.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the business loss the country has already suffered by reason of this deplorable condition can be very readily imagined to have run into the millions. The testimony submitted speaks so eloquently it is quite unnecessary, I am sure, to say anything to move the Senate to take some action in the premises. Obviously, full information is the first requisite of any attempt, by legislation or otherwise, to relieve the situation. It is, I dare say, simply a question as to the channel through which this information ought to be sought. While many of the causes apparently fall within the scope of investigations that may be very properly carried on by the Interstate Commerce Commission, it seems to be conceded upon all hands that the primary cause is the want of ships. That cause seems to be continually acquiring force and strength. Into that field, I take it, the ordinary powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission will not permit it to go.

I likewise feel, Mr. President, that the condition requires immediate action, and therefore it was my opinion that it could be more effectually and more speedily secured through a special committee charged with this duty and that would have no further duties to divert its attention from the subject.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think unquestionably this situation is a very serious one not only with regard to commerce in New York and Boston and Philadelphia and other ports in that region, but it is important to the whole country. It really assumes the dignity of international importance.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has furnished sufficient evidence, I think, to show what the situation really is, but perhaps it would not be out of place to add just a few facts in connection with what he has said by way of verifying statements which have been made in the newspapers, and also furnishing additional corroborative statements by those who have investigated the subject.

I find that on November 30 last the collector of the port of New York, in reporting to the Secretary of the Treasury, after mentioning the number of cars on the sidetracks there, says:

The cars above referred to may be said to contain general merchandise, chiefly of American production, steel products and war munitions predominating. This large number of cars constitutes a practically unprecedented congestion which may be ascribed to different causes, but the great predominating cause is the lack of vessels to carry the freight. This lack is caused by the withdrawal of vessels ordinarily engaged in commerce; the complete withdrawal of the German and Austrian commercial fleets; and in a smaller degree the destruction of commercial vessels by mines and submarines. An expert shipping authority at this port has estimated the losses from the above causes as at least 60 per cent of the commercial tonnage of the world.

The collector further stated at that time that—

It should be realized that the actual conditions of to-day would be duplicated to-morrow or the next day, since there are held outside of the immediate district of New York thousands of cars awaiting opportunity for entry here. Under the circumstances it is my opinion that the present export tonnage facilities do not meet more than 25 per cent of the present demand. Experts state that the congestion at this port will increase in the near future, and that ocean freight rates will be higher than ever before.

I will add that the collector of the port at Boston also, as late as December 15, 1915, submitted a report on conditions there, and among other things he says:

That exporters and the secretaries of commercial organizations interested in foreign trade are practically unanimous in declaring that the opportunities for American merchants to engage in overseas commerce were never brighter than at present, and the local Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce reports that it is estimated that at least 100 firms previously not interested in foreign markets for their products have gone into this branch in earnest, and that about 10 commission houses have been established during 1915 for exporting New England made goods.

* * * * * * *

Exporters complain of the exceedingly high freight rates quoted by steamship agents, the percentage of increase from July 1, 1913, to December 1, 1915, being on provisions, 309 per cent; on cotton, 400 per cent; on flour, 400 per cent; and on grain, 1,166 per cent.

Six of the seven steamship agents admit that there is a shortage of ocean steamer tonnage at this port.

Of course that undoubtedly has a great deal to do with the situation, but it goes back further to two fundamental fallacies which, unfortunately, found lodgment in the minds of the people of this country and which, unfortunately, had a certain basis of truth. One was that our people could better employ their capital in something else than in shipping, and that it was cheaper and more economical to let the foreigner furnish the ships to carry on our foreign trade. The other was that the consignee paid the freight; that it made no difference about the rate, because the party who received the goods and bought the goods and had them delivered to him always paid the freight. These, I say, are two original fallacies to which we may trace, in a large measure, the present situation.

Referring to this subject in a recent article in the Scientific American, Mr. Herbert T. Wade, after discussing the conditions in the ports which I have just mentioned, says, among other things:

With their New York freight yards and sidings filled with cars they could not dispose of, the railways adopted the heroic measure of declaring embargoes or refusing to accept freight. Thus the Lackawanna applied its embargo to all shipments free on board at New York for reshipment abroad, because on its line between Scranton and New York, when the order was issued, there were not less than 6,000 cars loaded with export freight, as compared with less than 2,000 cars which would have been between these points under normal conditions. Later in the month it was announced that embargoes had been declared on flour and timber for export under through bills of lading by the New York Central, the Erie, the Central Railroad of New Jersey, the Lackawanna, the Lehigh Valley, and the Pennsylvania.

The congestion was not confined to New York. The Pennsylvania also found it necessary to place embargoes at the ports of Philadelphia and Baltimore on export grain. In addition to the 1,000,000 bushels of grain in the new and spacious Girard Point elevator at Philadelphia on the evening of November 28, there were 1,778 cars, 2,600,000 bushels of export grain, on hand to go through the elevator. Of these cars 453 were standing in the Girard Point district, and the others were held at points west of Philadelphia. At this time there were six ships at the port of Philadelphia loading grain, six waiting to load, and four others were expected. Likewise in the Baltimore elevator of the same railroad there were 2,000,000 bushels of grain in storage, and 2,629 cars with 4,240,000 bushels of export grain on hand, destined to go through that elevator. Of this number 940 were at Baltimore, while the remainder were held at various points on the Baltimore and other divisions.

On December 15 the railways declared further embargoes chiefly affecting export shipment, but dealing also with freight requiring lighterage in New York Harbor.

This is an article on that subject in the Scientific American of December 25, 1915; and the author, Mr. Herbert T. Wade, further says, in which it seems to me we ought to agree, that it is a matter not merely of local interest but of Nation-wide interest. In discussing the subject further, he says:

During the months of November and December there has been experienced on the eastern seaboard and especially at the port of New York and on the railways entering the various terminals about the harbor a serious condition of freight congestion to an extent never before realized. At the middle of December it was reported that some 45,000 cars, over twice the amount of the car shortage for the entire United States, were tied up in the vicinity of New York City, and that there was ready for export at New York Harbor five times as much freight as available vessels could take. Grain elevators were filled to capacity, piers and docks were piled high with merchandise, and thousands of cars were used as warehouses at a time when there was a general shortage of cars throughout the United States.

This congestion of freight cars laden with commodities designed both for foreign shipment and for home consumption in the freight terminals in and about New York City, as well as along the rail approaches to the metropolis, involves a situation full of broad significance and possesses far more than local interest.

* * * * * * *

In addition, there is a national question of no small commercial importance, for this congestion of freight prevents not only the movement of material from interior points to seaboard but, by producing a shortage of cars and curtailing distribution, it tends to cripple the normal commerce of the country, which, after a period of depression, is now increasing to a most satisfactory degree. Any shortage of freight cars at this time is a matter of widespread and serious national interest.

The exports to Europe, it must be understood, have not been exclusively war material. Grain cargoes have been large and frequent, and there has been a demand in excess of the supply of steamers for grain as well as for coal, timber, and general cargo.

This condition extends, as the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] has mentioned, even to that State—in fact, to the whole country—and instead of getting better it seems to be getting worse. I think it is quite proper that Congress should investigate the subject, inquire into the reasons for this situation, and endeavor to find the proper remedy.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, no doubt this is a very important subject and should be immediately investigated. The question is, By what agency of the Senate? We have here a resolution that reports a congestion of interstate commerce as the result of an interruption of foreign commerce. Interstate commerce is under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate. Foreign commerce is under the jurisdiction of the Commerce Committee of the Senate. It seems to me that the resolution ought to be referred to one of those two committees, or possibly to both, with a view to determining upon a proper method of inquiry, one which will be fruitful of results and educational to the Senate itself. As the matter of legislation must ultimately come before either the Interstate Commerce Committee or the Commerce Committee, it seems appropriate that the resolution should be referred to one of those two committees.

I invite the attention of my friend, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], to the fact that the resolution relates both to interstate and to foreign commerce; but it is claimed that the interruption of interstate commerce is due to the fact that foreign commerce has been interrupted, and therefore the ultimate jurisdiction would seem to be in the committee of which he is chairman.

Mr. President, this brings my attention to one question, and that is that the divided jurisdiction of commerce between these two committees has thus far prevented any full and comprehensive adjustment of the transportation system of this country. The world now admits the superiority of Germany in regard to all methods of efficiency that relate to militarism. We must also admit the superiority of that country with reference to the regulation of its transportation. There they have built up a perfect system of river transportation, a perfect system of rail transportation, and a perfect system of ocean transportation, each dovetailing with the others in such a way as to promote the transportation and the commerce of that great country.

We have thus far paid attention only to interstate transportation and that form of it which relates to railways, and we have not yet taken up the question of the development of our rivers, which would mean that all our great waterways, properly developed as instrumentalities of transportation, would dovetail with the railways of the country in meeting the demands of commerce, particularly with reference to those coarse and bulky products which require cheap transportation.

If there were a perfect system of river and rail transportation in this country, we would not have a system as the result of which two or three trunk lines would be called upon in conditions of great emergency to supply almost all the transcontinental transportation of the country. This congestion is now upon three or four lines of the country, lines conducted from the West to the East, and does not relate to any part of that transportation which runs from the North to the South.

Mr. President, for some years I have been endeavoring to secure through a river regulation bill the proper consideration of this question and the question of transportation. The question of transportation has come up and is now before the Senate with reference to a bill I have introduced upon that subject, which is entirely devoted to rivers and does not include harbors. My view is that that bill should go to the Interstate Commerce Committee instead of the Commerce Committee, which has jurisdiction over foreign commerce and to harbors as instrumentalities of foreign commerce; that the Interstate Commerce Committee has jurisdiction over all matters relating to interstate transportation, including the instrumentalities of commerce themselves; and through that committee and its general jurisdiction over the subject of interstate transportation a proper system of river development can be worked out. I am perfectly willing, so far as that committee is concerned, to have it cooperate with the Commerce Committee in the accomplishment of that purpose; but it does seem to me that it is a matter that chiefly belongs to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Committee. I cheerfully concede that, so far as the question is concerned, the jurisdiction mainly relates to the Commerce Committee, of which my distinguished friend is the chairman. Undoubtedly the cause of this congestion is the want of carrying ships, and that subject is now before the Commerce Committee of the Senate. It seems to me that it would be better for that committee to take up the investigation than a new and untried special committee that has no accumulated experience upon the subject.

I may say here that the cause is perfectly apparent. This tie-up of transportation is caused, first, by the absolute withdrawal from commerce of the interned ships of the German nation, and, second, by the diversion of the other carrying ships of the world to the service of the war itself. Obviously, therefore, there must be a shortage of tonnage.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The Senator from Nevada has stated some of the reasons explaining the present shortage of ships. Has the Senator considered the large number of neutral vessels that have been taken out of commission from time to time during the past 16 months because of the London orders in council?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have not. I have not enumerated them, at all events, although, of course, that point should be held in mind.

Mr. O'GORMAN. It has been stated that more than 200 vessels belonging to neutral countries have been taken out of commission temporarily by virtue of a policy which has been pronounced by our State Department, and correctly so, as violative of well-established principles of international law and in disregard of the rights of neutral nations.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. If Senators will examine the report of the Commissioner of Navigation they will find that, next to Great Britain, the greatest amount of ocean shipping is that of Norway. If you add to that the shipping of Denmark and Sweden you will find that their merchant marine altogether exceeds every other merchant marine to-day afloat on the ocean except that of the British. I know to my certain knowledge that what the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] states, that they have eliminated 200 vessels of neutral shipping from commerce is not accurate, and for this reason: I know that every Norwegian vessel, from a motor boat up, is as busy as can be in carrying products from abroad. As a matter of fact, within the last six months more Norwegian, Swedish, Scandinavian, and Dutch shipping has been sunk by torpedo boats than has been the case with the shipping of Great Britain. It is true that most of these ships have been freighters, but the lives of the seamen and officers on those vessels are as dear to them as are the lives of the people who have the ability and the means to travel on the great liners to them.

It is not true that the shipping of these neutral countries in the north has been interfered with in its operations by the orders in council. Those vessels have been injured and interfered with solely by the operation of submarine boats and occasionally by mines. That is what has interfered with the traffic of the shipping in those Scandinavian and neutral countries, including Holland, and not the British orders in council.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Do I understand the Senator from Minnesota to question the accuracy of the statement that during the past 16 months 200 neutral vessels have been taken into British ports and kept there, and their business activities interrupted?

Mr. NELSON. With the permission of the Senator from Nevada, I will answer the Senator from New York. There are two steamship passenger lines plying between the Scandinavian countries and this country—the Danish Line, which has four or five large ships, and the Norwegian Line, which has two large new ships. These lines, since the North Sea and the British Channel have become obstructed by mines and by other methods, have usually taken a course north of Scotland between the Orkney Islands and the Shetland Islands, and gone through the pass south of the city of Kirkwall, in the Orkney Islands. It has frequently happened that British vessels have held up those vessels temporarily for the purpose of searching for contraband; but, as a rule, very few of them have been held up; and when they have been held up the British have simply taken out the contraband goods and allowed the vessels to proceed on their journey. There has been very little interruption of the Norwegian Line and very little interruption of the Danish Line. The vessels of those passenger lines have not, as you know, been torpedoed. The work of the German submarines has been mostly confined to the freighters of those neutral countries. So all the delay that has occurred has been only of a temporary character, occasioned by the searching of those vessels for contraband. As a rule, they have been allowed to proceed on their journey after they have been searched and the contraband removed. So they have not been eliminated from the trade. Those are the facts of the case.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator from Minnesota mean to say that no goods have been taken?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There must be some little order in the Senate. In the interest of the stenographers the Senate can not have more than two Senators talking at once.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to ask——

Mr. NELSON. I am on my feet by the favor of the Senator from Nevada, and of course I shall refrain from any further statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. But there were two other Senators on their feet at the same time.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I yielded for what I supposed was to be a question; I did not intend, of course, to yield to general debate. I assume that the Senator from New York will not contend that these 200 vessels have been continuously detained out of the commerce of the world.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I have not made that statement; but I should say in this connection that I recently read in some publication that during the period of the war upward of 200 vessels of neutral countries have been taken into British ports from time to time and there held, frequently for months, before an opportunity was afforded to have the questions tried out before a prize court. If I mistake not, protests have been made by this Government from time to time regarding those unusual and unprecedented delays. Of course, we know that in the old days, when a belligerent sought to examine the contents of a neutral ship the examination took place on the sea where the capture or seizure occurred. Such customs have been entirely disregarded as a rule during this war, and ships have been taken some hundreds of miles into British ports and there confined for weeks, and sometimes for months, before they received their clearances. Only recently it was the subject of comment that some of these neutral ships which were brought into British ports under protest to enable the British authorities to investigate their cargoes were required and compelled to pay port charges after they were discharged and before they were permitted to leave the British port.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I assume, however, that the Senator will not contend that these 200 ships have been under continuous detention, but that that number have probably been detained at different times, many of them for short periods and some for long periods—of course that is unquestioned—and to that extent the carrying trade of the world has been affected by the delay.

Now, Mr. President, we are endeavoring, as we have been endeavoring for the last two years, to meet this question of deficient transportation. We had, in the first place, a measure pending before us for an auxiliary navy, with a view to purchasing a number of carrying ships for the auxiliary navy and using them in times of peace in opening up new routes of commerce. That was followed by a shipping bill, under which the United States was to enter into the business of constructing and operating ships, and such a measure is now pending. This investigation, I imagine, will throw some light upon that legislation, and it seems to me very proper that the resolution should go, therefore, to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, as a matter of historical accuracy, I think the Senator from Nevada should say that long prior to the legislation to which he alludes bills were introduced and passed this body which, in the opinion of some of us, would have rehabilitated the American merchant marine to such an extent that this present embargo would not exist.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Of course it is a part of the history of the country that under the able leadership of the Senator from New Hampshire a measure has been urged for years, called the ship-subsidy bill, and doubtless that bill, if it had been carried into operation, would have resulted in an increase of American shipping; but there never has been a time when such a bill could pass, and, in my judgment, there never will be, for the Senator has never been able to obtain the full support of his own party for a bill involving a subsidy. It is therefore absolutely essential for us, if the Government is to act at all, either to act in a limited way, by the immediate construction of the needed auxiliary ships for the Navy, which would supply in part our commercial requirements, or to go into Government construction and operation, and even then it would be a long time before we get the ships. The mere purchase of existing ships engaged in the carrying trade of course will not add to the existing facilities for commerce. It will be absolutely essential to construct new ships. So far as private enterprise is concerned in this connection, without Government aid of any kind, it means that private individuals would be obliged to go extensively into the construction of ships to meet a pressing extraordinary demand, with the possibility that, upon an abrupt conclusion of the war, all the carrying ships now engaged for military purposes would be thrown into the commercial area, and thus imperil the investments of private capital.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will pardon me, in a moment I will yield.

It seems to me absolutely essential that the Government should act in some way. I believe that the way it should act would be in a way that would receive almost the unanimous support of both parties in Congress, namely, by providing for the acquisition of a large number of ships—fifty or sixty million dollars' worth or more—as a part of the Federal Navy, with a view to aiding our fighting ships in case of war, with the power to utilize them whilst we were at peace in general commerce by lease to operating companies upon terms fixed by the Government, thus doing away with the necessity of compelling any legislator to so act as to settle the contention in favor of Government operation of ships, a policy to which many Senators both on the other side and this side have serious objection. We could at the very commencement of this war, if the Senate had adopted an amendment which I offered to the naval appropriation bill providing for the purchase and construction of auxiliary ships by the Navy, have had by this time a large portion of the ships required. It seems to me that we ought to act promptly upon that subject, remove from debate all moot, all contested questions, and simply, patriotically act in the interest of the country upon a line that would meet the candid support of both sides of this Chamber.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Further, in the interest of historical accuracy, I desire to remind the Senator from Nevada—and I trust we shall not get into a partisan discussion on this question—that the bills which have been introduced and which several times passed the Senate received the almost unanimous approval of the Republican side of the Chamber and the unanimous disapproval of the Democratic side.

Mr. NEWLANDS. They certainly did.

Mr. GALLINGER. They were defeated, Mr. President, under the cry, the bugaboo of "subsidy," which is now being revived in the ship-purchase bill that the administration proposes to force through Congress, if it can, in a more obnoxious form than it ever was presented to the people of the country in the past.

Mr. NEWLANDS. But, Mr. President, the Senator will admit that his ship-subsidy measure was pressed for many years whilst the Republican Party had full control of both the Senate and the House of Representatives, and that bill failed because it did not have enough Republican votes to support it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Ah; but, Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. So I have been entirely justified historically in saying that the Republican Party has not been a unit with reference to that measure.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, Mr. President, one of those bills passed this body and passed the other House with an amendment. We desired to have that amendment concurred in, but it was filibustered to death by two Senators on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Now, Mr. President, I will say that the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce has to-day been considering a resolution—Senate resolution 60—regarding an investigation by a committee of all the questions which relate to transportation in interstate and foreign commerce, with a view to full and comprehensive legislation upon the subject. That committee is authorized to report the resolution which I introduced, with some amendments, and it is to be reported within a few days. If the House concurs in that action all these matters would come, I imagine, or might come, before such a committee; but, as the action of the House on this subject may be problematical, I will not expect the Senate to defer action upon this subject until that matter shall have been determined. I think that the resolution introduced by the Senator from Montana ought to go to some standing committee of the Senate; and, unless the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] is disposed to request its reference to the Committee on Commerce, I shall ask for its reference to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Committee on Commerce is one of the instrumentalities by which the Senate conducts its business. That committee is not willing to relinquish any jurisdiction that by common consent and universal practice has been lodged there; neither is it disposed to go out into the unsettled domain to demand jurisdiction of everything that has a remote connection with water transportation.

This particular resolution partakes of the nature of the jurisdictions, respectively, assigned to the Committee on Interstate Commerce on the one hand and the Committee on Commerce on the other. It might appropriately go to either. It is altogether probable that it should go to one or the other. The Committee on Commerce is at this time pretty well supplied with business and it is not disposed to enter into competition or a race of diligence with any other committee. It is entirely satisfactory to me to have the resolution go to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. That committee is made up of able Senators who have been for years dealing with some of the questions involved in this particular inquiry. But if, on the other hand, the Senate sees proper to send the resolution to the Committee on Commerce, I can give the assurance of that committee, based upon its past efficiency, that it will do the best it can with the subject matter.

This particular resolution, however, is not now in a condition to be referred to either of those committees, for the reason that, under a mandatory statute of the United States and the specific rule of the Senate, it must go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go there whenever the discussion is over.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I shall not pursue the subject until it comes before the Senate again.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am not enamored with the work of special committees or commissions. I think we are overloaded with that kind of work. With a view to having this matter go to a tribunal that I think is eminently fitted to consider it and to make a report to the Senate, I offer as a substitute for the resolution the matter which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed substitute.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby directed to investigate and report upon the existing freight blockade and embargoes on the trunk-line railroads entering the port of New York City and other ports where like conditions may be disclosed; the extent of and the reasons for such blockade and embargoes; the effect of the same upon the foreign and domestic commerce of the United States; the extent to which the same is occasioned by a lack of ocean transportation facilities at and from such ports; the reasons for such insufficient shipping or ocean transportation facilities; the ocean freight rates now being charged as compared with the rates existing at the time of the outbreak of the European war in 1914; the extent, if any, to which discriminations are being practiced by shipowners and carriers as between American products and commodities, and the reasons therefor; and, also, to investigate the shipping conditions as related to any and all of the ports of the United States, and as between said ports and foreign countries; report to be made to the Senate at the earliest practicable day.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether, in a case like this, where a resolution is pending which must go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, an amendment or a substitute can be offered which would take it out and away from the jurisdiction of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

If I may be permitted, I will make just a single remark. I feel that it is very important that an investigation of this kind should be made. The honorable Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] thinks so. His opinion is expressed in the substitute which he has offered. Therefore, so far as he and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], who has offered the pending resolution, are concerned, and so far as the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], the chairmen of the Committees on Interstate Commerce and Commerce, are concerned, the difference between them concerns the agency to be employed in making the investigation.

I have not any doubt that the Interstate Commerce Commission, for example, are eminently qualified to conduct the investigation. I concede that they are so qualified by reason of the ability of the commission, the experience of the commission, and their general knowledge of the subject to be investigated. I have not any doubt that the Committee on Commerce, the Committee on Interstate Commerce, or the special committee suggested by this resolution, could conduct the investigation. The one thing above all others that interests me is, what agency is most likely to prosecute an investigation of this kind with a due degree of speed, and return a report to the Senate before the Sixty-fourth Congress adjourns?

I am not going to discuss the matter. I simply say that is the chief question that concerns my thought at this moment.

It occurs to me that the resolution offered by the Senator from Montana ought to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate; and I submit to the Chair whether any other disposition of it can be made by the offering of an amendment or a substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks this is a point of order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it a point of order? I understood——

Mr. STONE. I will make the point of order, in order to bring it clearly before the Chair. It was really a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask to be heard on the point of order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will consent to hear the Senator from Massachusetts, but the Chair's mind is made up.

Mr. LODGE. I should not expect to convince the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not on that proposition.

Mr. LODGE. I was only going to suggest, for my own satisfaction, that a resolution involving a charge upon the contingent fund of the Senate is not unamendable. It can be amended at any stage. It can be amended in such a way as to remove the clause which brings it under the statute and the rule. I have seen that done on this floor. It may be amended by the Senate in other ways and then go under the rule and the statute as representing the opinion of the Senate as to the form of the resolution. If it goes with an amendment pending, the Committee to Audit and Control do not pass on the pending amendment, because it is not before the committee. It is pending here on the resolution as originally introduced, but the fact that a resolution carries a charge on the contingent fund does not remove it beyond the power of amendment in the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts will pardon an interruption——

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course the Senator is perfectly right in saying that the Senate, when the resolution is before it, even if the resolution must go to the Committee to Audit and Control, can amend the scope of the resolution itself; but not even by unanimous consent can the Senate send to another committee of the Senate for consideration, or even pass itself, a resolution which requires payment out of the contingent fund.

Mr. LODGE. That is absolutely true. I do not question it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, then, does or does not the original resolution, to which the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire applies, require payment out of the contingent fund? If the original resolution does, then, if the Senate amends the original resolution, of course the original resolution as amended must also go to the Committee to Audit and Control.

Mr. LODGE. But if the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire should be adopted by the Senate, or if an amendment simply to strike out the clause making the charge were adopted, that would at once take it from under the rule and the statute.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, of course.

Mr. LODGE. Exactly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If an amendment were adopted which struck out the charge against the contingent fund of the Senate, then the jurisdiction of the Committee to Audit and Control would terminate.

Mr. LODGE. My sole contention is that the amendment is not out of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But does the amendment offered propose to do that?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; it strikes out the charge, because it carries the work to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. STONE. At all events the original resolution, before it can be considered by the Senate, must go to the Committee to Audit and Control.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, Mr. President, that is the point I am against. The resolution is amendable in the Senate. We are not deprived of our right of amendment by the fact that it has to go to the Committee to Audit and Control.

Mr. STONE. I understand; but does the Senator agree that the original resolution itself can not be considered by the Senate until it is referred to the Committee to Audit and Control?

Mr. LODGE. It can not be passed. It can be considered, and it is constantly done. I have seen resolution after resolution which made a charge on the contingent fund amended by the Senate before it was sent to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Massachusetts cite the Chair to a precedent where the point of order was made that the resolution should go first to the Committee to Audit and Control, and the point of order was overruled, and the Senate amended the resolution without sending it to the Committee to Audit and Control? Has the Senator from Massachusetts in mind or at hand an instance of that kind?

Mr. LODGE. An instance?

The VICE PRESIDENT. A ruling of that kind; yes.

Mr. LODGE. Have I in mind an instance where a resolution carrying a charge on the contingent fund was amended?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Amended over a point of order that it should go to the committee.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know that after the point was made that it should go to that committee it has ever been amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the point. The Senator from Massachusetts is just as likely as the Chair to be right, and more so; but the Chair is clearly of the opinion that under the statute of the United States, when a resolution calls for an expenditure from the contingent fund of the Senate, that resolution must first go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, that it may determine the question as to whether it will report back the resolution favorably or unfavorably, and whether it will amend the resolution in any way. It is a regular committee of the Senate and there is a statute requiring that such resolutions shall be referred to it. Until that action has been taken the Chair rules that the resolution is not subject to be amended in the Senate of the United States, although it is amendable after the report is made.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I will yield to the Senator from New Hampshire in one moment. If I may be permitted to say so, I have not any question that I can find plenty of cases where a resolution has been amended before it went to the Committee to Audit and Control.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has not any doubt about that, either.

Mr. LODGE. But if the point of order is made that it must go to that committee, that, I confess, I have never considered—whether, after that, it could be done; that is, whether that point of order cuts off debate and amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have had very slight experience in presiding over this body, and I know that when I did preside over this body I made some bad rulings.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is not unusual for any presiding officer.

Mr. GALLINGER. Exactly. Some of those rulings have been reversed by the Senate, as have some of the rulings of the present occupant of the chair been wisely reversed. I think the decision of the Chair is not well founded, but I am not going to appeal from it. I have no disposition to enter into a controversy about this matter.

I had a double purpose in offering the amendment. One was to send the resolution to a body that has all the equipment for making an immediate investigation. The Interstate Commerce Commission has a vast army of men who have special fitness for this kind of work. My other reason was that the revenues of the Government are in a very bad way; and I thought by getting rid of this provision which puts the investigation in the hands of a special committee that would cost the Government something and therefore require sending the resolution to the Committee to Audit and Control, we might do a little something toward rehabilitating the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. President, I am sorry the ruling has been made; but to the ruling I submit, and will simply say that I hope the resolution as originally offered will go, as it will go, to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. When it comes back here, if I happen to be in the Chamber, I shall then offer the amendment that I presented to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire understands that the Chair is clearly of the opinion that when the resolution comes back, if it does come back, any desired amendments may be offered.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; there can be no question about that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

IMPORTATION OF LOGWOOD EXTRACTS.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the morning hour expires, I desire to say that some time ago I called the attention of the State Department to the logwood situation in this country. Our textile manufacturers are suffering great hardship because of the fact that they can not get dyes from abroad, or logwood with which to make dyes. I called that matter to the attention of the State Department, and about 10 days ago Secretary Lansing wrote me a letter, which I wish I had in hand at the present moment, saying that he thought the matter had been so arranged that we could get a sufficient supply of logwood from Jamaica; but there was a little trouble about it, inasmuch as they first wanted to supply Canada, which I presume is well enough. That letter was published in the press of New England and to some extent in the press of other parts of the country and seemed for the time being to satisfy our manufacturers. This morning I received this telegram:

BOSTON, MASS., January 7, 1916.

Hon. J. H. GALLINGER,
Washington, D. C.:

Is there anything official with reference to the embargo situation on logwood? Kindly telegraph fully, my expense.

F. C. DUMAINE.

Mr. Dumaine is the treasurer of the great Amoskeag Co., of New Hampshire. I immediately communicated with the State Department, and am in receipt of this telegram, which I was requested to transmit to Mr. Dumaine:

State Department is endeavoring to have manufacturers of logwood extract reduce their price to Canada, which will overcome British objections and release supply from Jamaica. In the meantime supply can be obtained from Haiti by addressing United States consul at Port au Prince and from British Honduras by addressing Messrs. C. Mulhado & Sons or Robert M. Steele, at Belize. Bureau Foreign and Domestic Commerce will send you pamphlet giving further details.

I desire simply to put this matter in the RECORD in order that the great manufacturing industries of the country, not only of my own part of the country but in other parts of the country, may be officially apprised of the present situation. I am afraid it is not going to give them the relief they are seeking; but, at any rate, there is some encouragement in the dispatch.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, Senate bill 381.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the pending bill provides for a more autonomous government in the Philippine Islands, and promises ultimate independence to the people thereof.

As the determination of the problem involves such great responsibilities and consequences, not only to our Government and people, but also to the government and inhabitants of the islands, the subject should be most carefully considered and analyzed.

I wish to discuss the question from, first, the political, second, the commercial, and, third, the military viewpoint.

I. FROM THE POLITICAL VIEWPOINT.

What I mean by the political viewpoint is, how will legislation upon this question affect the great principles and policies of our own Government and of theirs?

Mr. President, in the formation of our Republic we put forth to the world new principles of government, which seemed so plain to us that we declared them to be self-evident truths. We declared that all men are created equal, not in intellect, not in height, not in strength, not in color, and not in many other respects, but equal in rights. We declared that man is entitled, as an unalienable right, to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. We said in that declaration that so sacred are these rights against tyranny that they not only shall not be invaded by others, but they can not be bartered away even by ourselves. We further declared as our fundamental principle that, in order to secure these unalienable rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers not from kings, not from presidents, not from parliaments, not from congresses, but from the consent of the governed. We further said, "that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness."

These principles, according to our ideas of right, constitute the ethics of organized society called government.

Sir, the one thing above all others for which we and all human beings yearn, compared to which all gifts and favors are as nothing and contrasted with which great wrongs seem light and trivial, is liberty. In order to eradicate that sentiment from our hearts it is necessary to turn back the hands of the clock of civilization, to nullify the self-evident truths of our own Declaration of Independence, and to announce that some people have the right to govern others without their consent. If we attempt to hold the Philippines permanently, these fundamental truths will continually and persistently rise in our minds and in theirs to show our violation of the law of our own being.

Mr. President, if the happiness of the inhabitants of the Philippines be the determining factor in the question of their government, then independence of that people is the only solution.

This arises from the fact that no people of any intelligence, after being conquered, are willing to be ruled by an alien race. There is born in the breast of every human being a love of independence, liberty, and freedom, not only for himself, but also for his nation, people, and race. All questions of efficiency in government are, and always have been, considered subordinate in the minds of those to be governed to the principle of self-government. Every people who aspire to independence honestly believe their government will be better than any foreign government imposed upon them; but even if they knew that their own government would not be as efficient, economical, or progressive as the government of them by another race, they would prefer their own government and get more satisfaction and happiness from the same. Yea, more, they would by self-government develop a manhood and character which in the end would produce a greatly superior people. We know that we have the best government of this continent, but we do not find any of the South or Central American countries petitioning to have the benign rule of our Republic extended to them.

Lord Elphinstone, in trying to convince an Afghan chief of the benefit of English rule over his province, asked him, "Do you not think there are benefits, compensations, on the other side of the border in the way of peace and tranquillity? Here you have disturbances so frequently; homes are being invaded and people are being killed, and there is always disorder." The chief answered, "While peace and tranquillity are my ardent desire, I will bear with all the disturbances and evils of my country; but there is one thing that I will not bear, and that is a master."

Mr. Oscar T. Crosby, in his statement before the Senate Committee on the Philippines (220), referred to this incident and said:

Now, if that does not express what the race that we belong to has stood for in the past, I do not know what language would. And why in the world we should be surprised to discover anyone else with those sentiments I can not understand. It is our pride to have lived up to those sentiments ourselves, and we would have killed anybody who, with let or hindrance, stood in the way.

This same truth was expressed by the great Daniel Webster when he said:

We may talk of it as we please, but there is nothing that satisfies mankind in an enlightened age unless man is governed by his own country and the institutions of his own government. No matter how easy may be the yoke of a foreign power, no matter how lightly it sits upon his shoulders, if it be not imposed by the voice of his own nation and his own country he will not, he can not, and he means not to be happy under its burdens.

How much more convincing must be the statement when it is applied to a conquered nation governed by an alien race?

AIR OF SUPERIORITY ASSUMED BY CONQUERORS PREVENTS CONTENTMENT.

There are two reasons why a conquering nation can never obtain the hearty good will and love of an alien people as long as it forcibly holds possession of their country:

First. The usual arrogance and supercilious conduct of the officers and citizens of the conquerors stationed or residing in the subjugated country is always offensive to the inhabitants.

Second. That the families of the military and civil officers of the conquering nation hold themselves aloof from even the most refined and highly educated of the alien race must create a spirit of resentment. Under similar circumstances we would feel the same way.

Mr. Carl Crow in his book entitled "America and the Philippines" uses this language:

We can give them law and order and prosperity, educate them and train them to be self-governing, but we can never give them happiness while we refuse to receive them socially.

INDEPENDENCE THE ONLY LOGICAL SOLUTION.

Independence for the Philippines is sure to come, because it is logical, and any other course will destroy the very fundamental principles upon which our own Government is founded.

We must treat the Filipinos either as subjects or citizens. If we treat them as subjects, we will always have their enmity, produced from a knowledge that, according to our own theory of government, they are deprived of their rights. We can never gain their affection so long as we deprive them of what they conceive and what our principles of government declare as self-evident truths to be their rights. They may be quiet through fear, or by reason of hoping for the redemption of promises which have been made to them, but there can be no genuine affection until the promises are fulfilled. Government by force may produce a peace, but it is the quiet caused by fear. Such condition makes cowards of men and destroys the very elements of manhood which we most admire. God forbid that our benign Government, in order to maintain our rule, should destroy the nobler impulses of their nature.

We will never treat them as citizens, because as such they will be entitled to statehood. No one here has ever suggested that they be given statehood, with 40 Representatives in the Congress of the United States, to which they would be entitled, according to their population, under our Constitution.

DID WE PROMISE ULTIMATE INDEPENDENCE?

Mr. President, considerable opposition has been made to the preamble of the bill because it promises independence to the Filipinos when, it is argued, no such promise was ever authoritatively made, and some have contended that as the present Congress can not bind any future Congress, the promise should not be made.

When statements are made to a people which can fairly be interpreted as a promise, expressed or implied, it is not fair to invoke technical rules of construction that might be contended for in a court of law in the interpretation of an instrument drawn by skilled attorneys to express all the agreement between the parties.

Taking into consideration the circumstances attending our occupation of the islands, our principles of government, and what was said at the time and afterwards by those in authority, it seems to me no one can doubt that the natives understood they were to have their independence.

Could the Filipinos forget the words of President McKinley, at the beginning of the Spanish-American War, when he said:

Forcible annexation can not be thought of; that, according to the American code of morals, is criminal aggression.

From those words, would not the people of the Philippines have a right to understand that to forcibly annex their islands would be criminal aggression? Would they have aided us in conquering Spain if they had dreamed we would subjugate them?

Again, President McKinley said:

The Philippines are ours not to exploit, but to develop, to civilize, to educate, to train in the science of self-government.

Mr. Taft, when Secretary of War, in April, 1904, in a speech used this language:

When they have learned the principles of successful popular self-government from a gradually enlarged experience therein, we can discuss the question whether independence is what they desire and grant it, or whether they prefer the retention of a closer association with the country which, by its guidance, has unselfishly led them on to better conditions.

In 1907 Mr. Taft, in opening the Philippine Assembly, made this statement:

The policy looks to the improvement of the people, both industrially and in self-governing capacity. As this policy of extending control continues, it must logically reduce and finally end the sovereignty of the United States in the islands, unless it shall seem wise to the American and the Filipino peoples, on account of mutually beneficial trade relations and possible advantage to the islands in their foreign relations, that the bond shall not be completely severed.

In the special report made by Mr. Taft when Secretary of War, on January 23, 1908, he succinctly stated what, in effect, he told the General Assembly of the Philippine Islands. He said (p. 484):

It necessarily involves in its ultimate conclusion, as the steps toward self-government become greater and greater, the ultimate independence of the islands. * * * Any attempt to fix the time in which complete self-government may be conferred upon the Filipinos in their own interest is, I think, most unwise.

Ex-Gov. Gen. James F. Smith, in an article in the Sunset Magazine of December, 1911, used this language:

The evolution of a government by Americans assisted by Filipinos into a government of Filipinos assisted by Americans, and the education and preparation of the people for popular self-government, was the broad policy of President McKinley, of President Roosevelt, of Gov. Taft, of Gov. Gen. Wright, of Gov. Gen. Ide, and of all their successors. It is the policy to-day.

What does popular self-government mean? Self-government with a string to it is not self-government. It evidently means government by themselves, without any interposition on our part, and that means independence.

Ex-Gov. Gen. W. Cameron Forbes, in a farewell speech before leaving the islands, made the statement that—the policies of both parties reached the same general conclusion in regard to the granting of independence when a stable government should be established.

Mr. WORKS rose.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to ask the Senator from Colorado a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand the statements which the Senator has been making, they are not different from the attitude which some of us assume at the present time. Does the Senator take the position that the Filipinos ought to have their independence now?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I think as soon as they reasonably can get under way there in the exercise of functions of government. I believe in their having it in two or three years.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator contends, in the first instance, that they should not have it until they are prepared for it, then the difference between the Senator and me would simply be a question as to when they would be prepared for it, would it not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir; I think so. I do not believe that the Filipino people would establish a government such as we have in the United States. I do not believe that there is any people on earth who can have a government equal to ours. But they will have a government satisfactory to them, and they will maintain law and order there, and, in my judgment, they can do it now. Of course it is not the uneducated persons who will do that. As I stated on yesterday, it is the fact that the Filipinos elect men to office who are capable of doing these things, who are educated, and who can pass laws that would be a credit to any government.

Mr. BORAH. But neither Mr. McKinley nor Mr. Taft has made any pledge, according to anything which has been read in the Senate Chamber, that they should have independence at any time prior to their being fitted for it through the experience of local self-government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Roosevelt has, but Mr. Taft has not. Mr. Taft has always said that it should be in a generation or two, but Mr. Roosevelt in a recent article in Everybody's Magazine has said that they should have independence now, inasmuch as we have made to them a promise of independence.

Mr. BORAH. Did not the ex-President say that there were only two courses open, either to give them independence now or to enter faithfully upon the proposition of educating them to a point where they would be really fit for self-government?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; in that recent article he said if the Filipinos had been misled, if they honestly believed from the representation that they were to have independence, we ought to give them independence right away and retain nothing in the islands whatever. I will get to that statement in a few minutes.

Mr. BORAH. All right.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I may as well read it now.

Mr. BORAH. I do not care to take the Senator out of the course of his remarks.

Mr. KENYON and Mr. WORKS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield, and to whom?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield first to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. If the Senator will read the article from President Roosevelt, I will not make the suggestion I have in mind. I think the notion was expressed by him that inasmuch as the Democratic Party had now declared for independence the country owed it to them to give it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will read that, because I want to read also some of the statements of the Democratic officials.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. I was about to ask a question similar to the one submitted by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I should like to ask whether the Senator himself believes that the Filipinos are capable of establishing and maintaining a government fitted to their condition.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think they are. Of course it can not be done to-morrow. The government should be turned over probably after trying a governor general appointed from the Filipinos, and a demonstration that they are capable of maintaining a government. I am satisfied that they will be able to prove their capacity for the responsibilities.

Mr. WORKS. I understand the Senator takes the position that the ultimate right of the Filipinos is absolute independence and self-government. What I am afraid of is that we are going to fix too high a standard for those people and will withhold from them the right that they should govern themselves until they can do it in a way that we think is the best way. That is one of the troubles, I think, about the bill now before the Senate. I am one of those who believe that the Filipinos are entitled to their absolute independence and a government of their own, but I should like to see them have it just as soon as possible. Just as soon as we can surrender our rights there and turn it over to the Filipinos themselves decently I should want to see it done.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I agree with the opinion of the Senator in every particular. I will read, because I want it in the RECORD, the statement of ex-President Roosevelt, and then I will get to the other statement in just a moment.

President Roosevelt, in a message to Congress in 1908, said:

Hitherto this Philippine Legislature has acted with moderation and constraint—

He was commenting upon the conservative nature of the legislature—and has seemed, in practical fashion, to realize the eternal truth that there must always be government, and that the only way in which any body of individuals can escape the necessity of being governed by outsiders is to show that they are able to restrain themselves, to keep down wrongdoing and disorder. The Filipino people, through their officials, are therefore making real steps in the direction of self-government. I hope and believe that these steps mark the beginning of a course which will continue till the Filipinos become fit to decide for themselves whether they desire to be an independent nation. * * * All we can do is to give them the opportunity to develop the capacity for self-government. * * * We can not give them self-government save in the sense of governing them so that gradually they may, if they are able, learn to govern themselves.

Can that language have any other meaning than a promise of ultimate independence to those people if they desire it?

In a message to Congress, delivered on the 6th of December, 1912, President Taft said:

We should * * * endeavor to secure for the Filipinos economic independence and to fit them for complete self-government, with the power to decide eventually, according to their own largest good, whether such self-government shall be accompanied by independence.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I gathered from what was said by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] yesterday that the government of the islands at the present time is about as good as our own. He likened the conditions there to conditions in the State of Iowa, for example. I should like to know to what extent the Senator thinks that kind of a condition is maintained by our own forces and our own control over the administration of affairs there.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state that since Mr. Harrison has been Governor General of the islands a policy somewhat different has been pursued, especially with respect to what are called the uncivilized people, the Moros. Formerly the United States troops were quartered there because of the fear that if they were withdrawn anarchy and insurrection would immediately prevail. Gov. Gen. Harrison appointed Frank Carpenter governor of the Mindanao district. He went down there with instructions to try to get the Moros interested in government. Soon the American troops were withdrawn and Gov. Carpenter called the chief datos together. He said to them, "We are going to let you help in the government." He appointed a number of Moros to positions, some of minor importance but many of them bearing commissions signed by the governor, in which they took a great deal of pride. From that time there has been an amazing improvement in the observance of law and order in the Province. There has been no revolt nor any large disturbance. It was said that the Moros would immediately subjugate the entire country. Instead of that it is perfectly safe to go through the Moro country without any guard whatever. Three or four of us went across the island of Jolo in an automobile with no concern. It would have been absolutely reckless 10 years ago, or even 5 years ago, to have gone without an armed guard.

Mr. WORKS. Does the Senator think we should withhold independence from the Filipinos until the Moros are civilized?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no.

Mr. WORKS. And capable of self-government?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am satisfied the Moros are going to cooperate with the Filipinos. There had been attempts to arouse antagonism between the Moros and the Filipinos, but since Gov. Gen. Harrison entered upon a policy which was the establishment of colonies composed of Christian Filipinos in the heart of the Moro country there has been no indication of any friction between them.

We visited certain colonies that had been planted from Cebu down on one of the rivers in Mindanao. Some of those colonies consist of Filipinos, and three of them consist of half Filipinos and half Moros. They were each placed almost alternately upon 40 acres of land, and they have been getting along all right. The committee which went upon that occasion arranged to be there at a certain time and were well received. The natives mingled together; there was no one hurt; there was nothing in the way of a disturbance of any kind. The three other colonies consist of Christian Filipinos from Cebu, who were located upon tracts of land right in the heart of the country of the Moros, but not on alternate 40-acre tracts. There has been no trouble there; there has been no disturbance. Those people have been there for two years now, and the result is, as Gov. Carpenter stated to me, that there never had been such good order in that island as existed in those two years.

Mr. BORAH. I want to ask the Senator from Colorado a question in order that I may find out what the difference of opinion here is in regard to this matter. I ask, Does the Senator from Colorado believe that the Filipinos would be capable of self-government and fitted for independence as soon as, in the order of things, the government could be turned over to them?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think so.

Mr. BORAH. And that would perhaps take a year or two?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It would probably take two or three years.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, the only delay which the Senator sees as being a necessary delay is such delay as would be required to transfer the machinery of government into their hands?

Mr. SHAFROTH. And perhaps to test it a little by an experience of several months in seeing that they discharged their duties.

Mr. BORAH. I do not see, then, why there should not be at least in this bill a definite proposition as to when these Filipinos shall have their independence.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I would rather have it in that way; but, Mr. President, the difficulty is that all men do not agree on that. I will tell the Senator from Idaho why the provision that was contained in the House bill was not adopted by us. There was a suggestion made in the committee that it was the language of the Democratic platform, and if we put it into the bill it would be considered a Democratic measure and would, therefore, meet with opposition. I do not know whether that would occur, but we did not want it to be a partisan matter, because there were Republican members of the committee who had been voting for the measure, and we did not want to criticize the administrations that had been in charge over there. So we felt that it would be better to change the language. My belief and conviction is that if we get the word "independence" in the bill it will not be long before the people of the United States will feel that they should give the Filipinos an opportunity to have independence as soon as practicable.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to say that the apparent partisanship might be obviated by simply putting in what is already there with the definite statement as to the year, say 1925 or 1920.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There was a suggestion of that kind. I believe in putting in a definite date. I should like very much to do so; but the objection was urged that we might be at war at the date fixed, and it might be very impolitic for that reason to set a time. So it was said that it would not do to fix a definite date. That seemed to be the prevailing opinion of the majority, although that very majority wanted to fix a definite date if no interference of the kind suggested was likely to occur. We have had discussions of these matters; we have tried to solve them as best we could; and the language which we have adopted seemed to be the language that would meet with no opposition or comparatively little opposition in the committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. In view of the statement just made about the Democratic platform, may I ask whether the Senator from Colorado has knowledge of the views of the Democratic Senators upon that point?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No. I can not state them, though the members of the committee expressed themselves, and some of the Democratic members of the committee did not feel that it was safe to fix a definite time.

Mr. CUMMINS. Does the Senator from Colorado believe that a provision in the bill that would put an end to the sovereignty of the United States in the islands within a few years would meet the approval of the Democratic Senators?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, I can not say as to that, Mr. President. It would meet my approval; but I can not say as to others.

Mr. CUMMINS. Has there been any dissent from the Democratic platform upon that point?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; because the Democratic platform is rather indefinite, for it says, "when a stable government is established." The answer to that was that a stable government is there now; and, accordingly, you would have to turn the government over to the Filipinos to-morrow.

Mr. CUMMINS. I simply want to advise the Senator from Colorado that, if he would alter his course in any way, there are some Senators upon this side of the Chamber who would be very glad to join in a proposal of that kind or in legislation of that kind.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think when the time for amendment arrives perhaps some kind of an agreement can be reached. Of course I joined in this report, and, consequently, I feel somewhat bound by it; but my individual feelings, as I expressed them in committee, were as I have indicated them to the Senator.

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President, I am not going to interrupt the Senator again. I want to say, however, that my questions to the Senator might have indicated that I believed that a definite time should be fixed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I did not so take them.

Mr. BORAH. I do not want to be so understood. I simply wanted to get the view of the committee.

Mr. SHAFROTH. President Wilson appointed to the position of Governor General Hon. Francis Burton Harrison, a man whose views in favor of the independence of the islands were well known, who in his inaugural address said:

> The President of the United States has charged me to deliver to you the following message on behalf of the Government of our country:
> "We regard ourselves as trustees, acting not for the advantage of the United States but for the benefit of the people of the Philippine Islands.
> "Every step we take will be taken with a view to the ultimate independence of the islands and as a preparation for that independence; and we hope to move toward that end as rapidly as the safety and the permanent interests of the islands will permit. After each step taken experience will guide us to the next.
> "The administration will take one step at once and will give to the native citizens of the islands a majority in the appointive commission, and thus in the upper as well as in the lower house of the legislature a majority representation will be secured to them.
> "We do this in the confident hope and expectation that immediate proof will be given, in the action of the commission under the new arrangement, of the political capacity of those native citizens who have already come forward to represent and to lead their people in affairs."

Have not the Filipinos the right to construe that message as a promise of the administration to grant independence to them?

President Wilson, in a message to Congress delivered December 2, 1913, used this language:

> * * * But in the Philippines we must go further. We must hold steadily in view their ultimate independence, and we must move toward the time of that independence as steadily as the way can be cleared and the foundations thoughtfully and permanently laid. * * * By their counsel and experience, rather than by our own, we shall learn how best to serve them and how soon it will be possible and wise to withdraw our supervision. Let us once find the path and set out with firm and confident tread upon it, and we shall not wander from it or linger upon it.

It must be remembered that the people of the Philippines know no political parties in the United States; they take the words of the duly appointed and elected officers as those of the Government itself and not those of any political party.

I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the quotation I am going to make from ex-President Roosevelt's declaration.

In the January, 1915, number of Everybody's Magazine ex-President Roosevelt indorsed this contention, and said:

> If we act so that the natives understand us to have made a definite promise, then we should live up to that promise. The Philippines, from a military standpoint, are a source of weakness to us. The present administration has promised explicitly to let them go and by its action has rendered it difficult to hold them against any serious foreign foe. These being the circumstances, the islands should at an early moment be given their independence, without any guarantee whatever by us and without our retaining any foothold in them.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. To what end and for what purpose does the Senator quote the statement of Col. Roosevelt?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I quote it for the purpose of showing that the Filipinos had a right to believe that these promises were made when ex-President Roosevelt said that if the Filipinos had understood them in that way it was our duty in good faith to carry them out.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely; but Col. Roosevelt says "if they have been given to so understand."

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. And then he goes further, and says the Democratic Party having made the pledge, it should keep it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, whether or not the Filipinos understand it is a matter about which we might differ.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. But there is not any difference of opinion about the pledge the Senator's party made.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No.

Mr. BORAH. And upon that I understand Col. Roosevelt bases his declaration that you should live up to the pledge.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No. I think he bases it upon the declaration made by Gov. Gen. Harrison in his message to the legislature there and in the message delivered by President Wilson to the Congress of the United States in December, 1913. Those were explicit declarations of an intention to grant independence. Then Col. Roosevelt assumes in this that the Filipino people look upon the declarations of high officials of the Government as governmental promises, and that, if they had been led so to believe, independence should be given them immediately.

Mr. BORAH. Without any guaranty or looking after them whatever?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir; without any guaranty or looking after them whatever.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the junior Senator from Colorado yield to the senior Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it seems to me—and I have been of this opinion for a long time—that all of the guaranties or pledges which have been given through the expressions of officials and of party declarations lack that certainty which they should have; that definiteness as to time of performance which would make it a binding promise susceptible of performance. The difficulty with the assurances that have been given is that for the most part they are conditioned upon performance, when in our opinion the Filipinos shall have reached that stage of moral and mental development that in our opinion justifies investing them with the right of self-government.

Now, that happy moral and intellectual condition may, in my opinion, have been reached; in the opinion of the Senator from Idaho it may be some years before the development will be sufficiently obvious to justify the discharge of our trusteeship, so called—and, of course, if we are trustees, we are trustees ex maleficio, and all trusteeships of that kind should be ended as soon as possible.

I think that this bill, or some bill to be enacted by the present Congress, should be so drawn as to fix some definite time, and that as soon as possible in the near future for the emancipation of those islands from the thraldom of the United States, whether they are fit for self-government or not. Of course, we concede—we must concede, because it is ours—that the form of government we desire to give them is the best of all forms of government. The Filipinos may not think so; they may desire, and the characteristics of the Filipino and the other tribes which inhabit those islands may be such as to justify, the imposition of some other form of government. Hence it seems to me that we are not exactly consistent in our views of the right of people to govern themselves when in our treatment of the Filipinos we give them promises of ultimate independence at such time as in our judgment they are fitted for self-government. Why not let them go? We must retain them as citizens, or we can not retain them at all without doing violence to our form of government, and I think it would be much better and much more in keeping with the spirit of these assurances and promises to say to them by legislation, "You shall after a certain date be given the right to govern yourselves as you please." That will end our responsibility, which ought never to have been undertaken.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I agree with the senior Senator from Colorado that it would be wise to fix a definite time; but the objection was made in the committee that if the United States were at war when the date fixed for independence had arrived there might be a condition of affairs that would get us into very serious complications. It seemed to be such a valid objection that after that time there was hardly any pressing of that suggestion.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. You could provide for the contingency of the United States being at war by an exception in the bill, could you not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, we might do that.

Mr. CUMMINS. Just one other question. If the Filipinos are capable of determining what kind of government they desire to have and were to determine it, that would be self-government, would it not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think so.

Mr. CUMMINS. Self-government, I take it, simply involves the privilege of those who are governed to determine how and by whom they shall be governed.

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from Colorado yield? Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have finished.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well; I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to see if I understand the Senator from Iowa. He does not take the position, I presume, that if 2 per cent or 4 per cent of the people of the Philippines should determine the kind of government they want that would be self-government of the people of the Philippine Islands?

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, no; I take no such position as that. I am speaking of the Filipino people as a whole, and assuming that they exercise that privilege, if it may be called a privilege, as generally as we exercise the privilege of government here.

Mr. BORAH. I agree with the Senator, if that is the basis of his statement.

May I read a brief letter from Col. Roosevelt in connection with what the Senator from Colorado read a few moments ago?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly; I have no objection.

Mr. BORAH. The letter is as follows:

NEW YORK CITY, December 4, 1914.

MANUEL QUEZON, Esq.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. QUEZON: I thank you for your letter and appreciate it. You have put the case in a nutshell when you say that in view of the attitude of the present administration and of the American people in indorsing that administration, the proper course to follow now is "to grant the Filipinos their absolute independence without any responsibility on the part of the United States in guaranteeing such independence."

Sincerely, yours, THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Colorado before the interruption took place was discussing the question which was suggested by his colleague [Mr. THOMAS] as to fixing a certain date for granting independence to the Filipinos. I do not know that the Senator remembers the fact, but he himself asked that question of Dean Worcester when he was before the committee, and he raised another objection to fixing a specific date further than the objection which the Senator has suggested. I would like to put that in the RECORD here, if the Senator does not object.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well; I should be glad to have it go in.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Colorado asked him that question.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Asked whom?

Mr. KENYON. Dean Worcester, who, of course, is a great authority in Philippine questions; and in answer to the question he said:

That is a pretty hard question to answer. If it were not that any promise we can make is subject to misrepresentation and misinterpretation, and may do more harm than good, I should believe in promising independence when the people were ready for it. This has one very great advantage, that it gives them a stimulus to better things. If we were to say, "You are going to have your independence in 1935," or at some other time, this stimulus is taken away. They would say, "Very well, we will establish our own kind of a government then," and would let down meanwhile. If they are kept on their good behavior, if they are, so to speak, under bonds to keep the peace, if they know they are under observation, the chance of their walking straight is very much better.

Mr. BORAH. May I say a word there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. This statement of Mr. Worcester's embodies the real proposition, if I understand the situation correctly, which we contend for, and that is that these people have no conception of self-government. They simply have a conception of obedience to some superior power, and so long as that superior power is above them they will walk like a man in the presence of a policeman, but as soon as the policeman has departed from his beat they will begin to do something else. That is precisely the position which Mr. Worcester takes in regard to it, and, instead of arguing for self-government, it proves conclusively, according to his own statement, that they are unfit for self-government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not believe that Dean Worcester is in favor of ever giving them independence. I will state that to the Senator. I am convinced that, no matter what the conditions at any given time, according to his opinion they would be incapable of self-government. I believe that.

Mr. KENYON. What is suggested by the Senator from Idaho is true of a good many people, that they walk differently when in the presence of the policeman. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHAFROTH. The bill, which in the preamble promised independence to the Filipinos as soon as a stable government could be established in the islands, passed the House of Representatives in the last Congress by a vote of 3½ to 1.

It may be that these promises, in the technical sense, are not legally binding on the Government, but they are morally binding. What do we think of the man who verbally agrees to a contract required by law to be in writing but who refuses to carry it out?

The Government authorizes the appointment of a Governor General for the very purpose of having him go to the islands and exercise his judgment as to what is best under the conditions prevailing. Such declarations made by such officials are regarded by the world as governmental promises. The people of the Philippine Islands have relied upon them as promises and have governed their action upon such confidence.

IS IT WISE FOR CONGRESS TO CONFIRM THE PROMISE?

Mr. President, some contend that if Congress promises independence to the Filipinos unless that result follows immediately they will become dissatisfied, and violence and insurrection may follow.

The difficulty in the situation is that they are alarmed now, because of the contention that no absolute promise of independence has been made, when they understood there was no question about it.

If what we understand as a promise has been made to us, do we not want it expressed clearly and by the proper authority? If it is indefinite, do we not want it specific? If the party refuses to make the promise more definite, do we not immediately have our suspicions that he is trying to evade his promise? Do we not then lose confidence in the promiser? Do we not know that if the promise of independence is stricken out of this bill the Filipinos will take that action as an expression upon the part of the United States that she does not intend to grant independence? Would we not so conclude if we were Filipinos? When people are deceived, is it not natural for them to resent the deception? Can we hope that they will be pleased or satisfied? Human nature is the same in the Filipinos as in the Americans, and the fulfillment of this promise will make much better conditions than will its repudiation. It would so affect us, it will so affect them.

The refusal, therefore, to confirm what they have understood to be a promise to grant independence will naturally make the Filipinos resentful, which may develop into open hostility. There may be no general revolt, for such unavailing action would undoubtedly retard the advance of their cause for many years. We ourselves have taught them that men should be willing to die for freedom. They will remember the Battle Hymn of the Republic, as we have sung it on many a field:

In the beauty of the lilies,
Christ was born across the sea,
With a glory in his bosom
That transfigures you and me;
As He died to make men holy,
Let us die to make men free.

Many Americans in the islands have been continually attempting to force an iron-hand policy upon these people, which all history teaches would produce discontent, disturbances, and even insurrection. Ex-Gov. Gen. Taft admits this in a speech on December 17, 1903. He said:

There are many Americans in these islands, possibly a majority, and this includes all the American press, who are strongly opposed to the doctrine of "The Philippines for the Filipinos." They have no patience with the policy of traction, no patience with attempts to conciliate the Filipino people, no patience with the introduction into the government as rapidly as their fitness justifies of the prominent Filipinos. They resent everything in the government that is not American. They insist that there is a necessity for a firm government here rather than a popular one, and that the welfare of Americans and American trade should be regarded as paramount.

The attitude of the American press and of the American merchant in his hostility to the Filipino and in the consequent hostility to the civil government was led into the error at one time of emphasizing in every possible way, by letters and representations of all sorts, that the condition of the country as to tranquillity was so bad that the whole of the islands was still in a state of war. Every small ladrone fight, every discomfiture which the constabulary suffered was exaggerated and made the basis for inference that the conditions in the country were retrograding rather than improving. Such incidents were seized upon and made as much of as headlines and general statements could make them.

When one's feelings of enmity are very much aroused, it is difficult to set the limit to the expression of them. So it is that we have the young lions of the American press, of the three newspapers who are supposed to speak the American public opinion in these islands, holding the Filipino up to contempt, exposing all his supposed vices and giving him no credit whatever for any virtues, and it may be that this represents the feeling of the majority of the resident Americans in Manila. But can we not in the end be just and give to the whole Filipino people their due? Should we wish the Filipino people to judge of Americans by the drunken, truculent American loafers who infest the small towns of these islands, living on the fruits of the labor of Filipino women, and give us more trouble than any other element in the islands? Should we wish the Filipino people to judge of American standards of honesty by reading the humiliating list of American official and unofficial defaulters in these islands? I think not.

In view of such conditions, is it not plain why the Philippine people want the word "independence" placed in the preamble of this bill, and if we were Filipinos, would not we be anxious for that expression?

I am interested, as an American citizen, in the preservation of the fundamental principles of our Government, and I am as anxious, on that account, as any Filipino of seeing the word "independence" expressed in this measure. I want it so that in warlike times, when men dream of universal empire, the Congress of the United States will not be carried off its feet with a desire for colonial possessions, and forget the principles of liberty and freedom, which have made us the most equitable Government on the face of the earth. I want it there for the Filipino, so that in the future if an iron-hand policy should obtain the ascendency in our Government, the Philippine Islands would not be ours to feel the effect of such policy.

DO THE PHILIPPINE PEOPLE WANT INDEPENDENCE?

It has been said that the Filipinos do not want independence; that they are satisfied with the government we have given them. There is nothing but the baldest assumption in that statement. That is the same contention every monarch makes as to his people who are protesting against being denied their rights. It must be remembered that King George III said the inhabitants of the Colonies were satisfied, except a few who were misled by their chiefs. Palliative measures as to human rights never satisfy. It is one of the traits of human nature that laws increasing the liberty of a people simply whet the appetite for absolute freedom.

It is absurd to assume that men who had the courage to defy the greatest nation on earth to be independent have lost that spirit which all peoples deserving freedom possess.

The test as to a people's desire for independence is in the sentiments that are expressed and the resolutions adopted at public meetings, in the platforms of political parties, and in the memorials and petitions of provincial, municipal, and legislative bodies. Almost the only question discussed at public meetings of Filipinos is that of independence, and the expressions are unanimously in favor of the same. Petitions for independence have repeatedly been presented to Congress by their citizens and by their provincial, municipal, and legislative bodies; no counter petitions by Filipinos have ever been presented.

When the general assembly was created in 1907 there were two political parties in the islands; one, called the National Party, was for immediate independence, the other, called the Federal (later Progressive) Party, was for statehood. Notwithstanding all the Americans and the officeholders, both American and native, were in sympathy with the Federal Party, it met with a crushing defeat at the first election for assemblymen, the National Party electing all but 15 of the 81 members. Now all the assemblymen are for immediate independence.

We sometimes hear it said by an American that an influential Filipino merchant told him in a private conversation that he did not favor independence, but that he dare not so publicly express himself. The very fact that they will not express publicly this opinion shows that the overwhelming sentiment of the people is against them.

Commissioner QUEZON, in his statement before the Senate Committee on the Philippines, said the sentiment of his people for independence was so strong that if he were to tell them they should not have independence he could not get followers anywhere from one end to the other of the archipelago.

The General Assembly of the Philippines, elected by the people, have time and again unanimously, by resolution, declared for independence. If there were any considerable number of people in the islands against independence, petitions and resolutions expressing such sentiment would soon find their way to the Congress of the United States. At all their public meetings banners are displayed declaring for independence and expressing laudatory sentiments in behalf of those who are prominent in the effort to obtain the same.

At nearly all the school exhibitions there is a speech or two in English pleading for independence. I attended several mass meetings held in honor of Commissioner QUEZON and Speaker Osmeña. The attendance at each was large and every reference to their work in behalf of independence received the hearty applause of the people. It is true that most of the Americans there are opposed to independence, but it can not be possible that this Government would keep the islands in the interest of 3,000 or 4,000 of our citizens outside of the officeholders and their dependents when practically all of the people to whom the islands belong desire independence. It seems to me that no one who has visited the islands can truthfully assert the people do not want independence.

After the passage of the Jones bill in October, 1914, the Philippine Commission and General Assembly, in joint session assembled, unanimously passed a resolution expressing to the House of Representatives of the United States their high appreciation of the passage of the Jones bill and requesting the same approval thereof by the President and Senate. How can anyone fairly maintain after the unanimous passage of that resolution that the Philippine people do not want independence?

But some, driven from their contention by such overwhelming evidence, say that the sentiment for independence is the result of the agitation of politicians and they slur at and denounce them as agitators. Why, Mr. President, Patrick Henry was an agitator. Thomas Jefferson and John Adams were agitators. Have we gotten to that pass, in order to sustain our action as to the Philippines, we denounce men who agitate for human rights? Agitation in a righteous cause is the highest form of patriotism.

WHAT IS OUR PHILANTHROPIC DUTY?

There are some who seem very much alarmed that we will not do our duty to the Philippine people if we withdraw our sovereignty from the islands now or at any time in the near future. They claim that Providence placed the islands in our custody as a trust, which we can not in equity surrender until it is clear to us that the Filipinos are capable of self-government.

As history demonstrates that most of the acts of usurpation were justified by monarchs on the ground that they were best for the people "whose necks they bestrode," so it is easy for a conquering nation to violate human rights under the plea that it is best for them. Let us not determine all these things from our standpoint, but let us place ourselves in the position of the Filipinos and do unto them as we would that they should do unto us.

Likewise there are some who seem to think that having undertaken the education of the Filipinos we can not stop at partial education, but must continue indefinitely until all are educated. Why, no one seems to give any good reason. If it were a charity, one might say it would be appropriate but not a duty. When one gives a contribution for charity it may be very appropriate for him to give another, but no one can fairly claim there is an obligation to do so or that he should be blamed for not doing it. If it is charity, it is a blessing no matter to what extent it goes. But it must be remembered that every cent for this education, including the cost of all school buildings, has been paid by the Philippine people in taxes upon their property in satisfaction of appropriations cheerfully made by the general assembly elected by the Filipinos. There is no likelihood, therefore, that such appropriations would cease or that education would stop. Even the Aguinaldo constitution of January 20, 1899, provided that "popular education shall be obligatory and gratuitous in the schools of the nation."

There is an intense desire for education upon the part of the Philippine children. There is no compulsory-education law in the islands, but 500,000 children are now attending public schools there and fully as many more would be in attendance if there were sufficient schoolhouses. In my recent trip to the islands I visited a number of schools, but never found any vacant rooms or unoccupied seats. At Jolo the Moro children were attending school in large numbers, and there was a demand for 60 more schools on that island. They were being taught in English, and a Moro boy delivered the address of welcome in our language.

Vice Governor Martin is the head of the department of public instruction in the Philippines, and before the Senate committee he confirmed that statement in the following declaration:

Senator SHAFROTH. Is there seemingly a desire upon the part of the Filipinos to obtain an education?

Mr. MARTIN. The children are the most eager I have ever seen. * * * Some weeks ago I asked the director of education to take me to some of the night schools. It happened to be a very bad night. It rained. In fact, it poured. He took me to a large school building with two wings and with a driveway between them—a great open way where an automobile could drive through, perhaps two abreast—and as we approached the building I saw the driveway was crowded with people. The driver stopped, and the director got out and made a way, so the automobile could be driven in under the shelter. I said to him, "What is all this mob here?" He said, "They are boys hoping that some of the boys who have been admitted will not be here and that they can get the vacant seats." * * * I have always been interested in the schools, and I have never seen any such interest at home in the schools as I have seen in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. William Morgan Shuster, for three years one of the commissioners of the Philippines, in his testimony before the Senate committee said:

I have seen them almost take the shirts off their backs to contribute money to schoolhouses and to the payment of school-teachers where there was no pressure whatever upon them to do so. I never knew a municipal council or a provincial board to refuse to give their last dollar for education, and I was superintendent of instruction there for years; that was my portfolio.

With such a strong desire and demand for education among the inhabitants, there is sure to be increased appropriations by the general assembly for school purposes, and the good work of education is certain to continue under a Philippine Republic.

EFFECT OF EDUCATING THE FILIPINOS.

Popular education is very essential to the citizenship of a Republic, because such education gives the ability in the electorate to correct the errors of legislators and to pass upon and determine what laws are best for the country. It is extended for the purpose of making the people self-governing. On the other hand, the monarchs see clearly that to educate the masses of their colonies is to educate them as to their rights, which is sure to breed discontent when they are governed without their consent. It is ordinarily by reason of the ignorance of the masses and the strong display of force that the colonies of monarchies are administered. Monarchies believe in educating the aristocracy and the well to do, but not the masses. When we inaugurated in the Philippines a system of popular education we sowed the seeds of equality of rights which must culminate in either independence or statehood.

The boy and girl of the Philippines can not read the history of the American Revolution without receiving the passionate ardor for liberty which inspired our own patriots in that momentous struggle. They can not read the self-evident truths of our own Declaration of Independence without applying them to themselves.

It was Abraham Lincoln who, referring to that immortal document, said:

All honor to Jefferson, to the man who, in the concrete pressure of a struggle for national independence by a single people, had the coolness, forecast, and sagacity to introduce into a merely revolutionary document an abstract truth applicable to all men and all times, and so to embalm it there that to-day, and in all coming days, it shall be a rebuke and a stumblingblock to the very harbingers of reappearing tyranny and oppression.

And again, in another speech, he said:

What constitutes the bulwark of our own liberty and independence? It is not our frowning battlements and our bristling seacoasts, the guns of our war steamers, or the strength of our gallant and disciplined Army. These are not our reliance against a resumption of tyranny in our fair land. * * * Our reliance is in the love of liberty which God has planted in our bosom. Our defense is in the preservation of the spirit which prizes liberty as the heritage of all men, in all lands, everywhere. Destroy this spirit, and you have planted the seeds of despotism around your own door.

It is impossible for the school children, the attendants of the colleges and universities, and the educated men of the islands to read such patriotic expressions without quickening the pulsations of their hearts, without infusing into their veins an intense love for liberty and independence.

The only way we can logically hold the Philippines against the will of their people is to repudiate the expressions of Jefferson and Lincoln and the spirit of our Government as expressed in the Declaration of Independence. When we have done that we will have changed our form of government; we will have entered upon a career for colonial empire; we will have brought about the very conditions which Abraham Lincoln so eloquently described.

ARE THE FILIPINOS CAPABLE OF SELF-GOVERNMENT?

Mr. President, some people who are opposed to Philippine independence often refer to photographs of natives in a seminude condition as examples of the Philippine civilization and ask if such beings are capable of self-government. Such pictures are exceptional and are usually of what are termed the uncivilized inhabitants, which in population bear no greater proportion to the Christian Filipinos than the American Indians did to the people of the Colonies at the time of the Revolutionary War. The census of 1903 gives the number of Christian people as 6,987,686 and the uncivilized population as 647,740.

The Christian Filipinos, constituting nine-tenths of the population of the islands, wear more clothes and have less exposure of the person than the people of any other tropical oriental country. That was the uncontradicted testimony before the Senate Committee on the Philippines, and in my recent trip to the islands, China, and Japan I repeatedly noticed the fact.

If the American standard of general intelligence is necessary, it may well be said that no other people in the world are capable of self-government.

It has not been many years since the monarchs thought that no people were capable of governing themselves. King George III thought that in establishing this Republic we had exchanged law and order for anarchy, whereas we had exchanged tyranny and oppression for freedom and liberty.

Of course, all countries, not excepting our own, have a considerable number of illiterate inhabitants, but these are not the people who conduct the affairs of government. The very purpose of holding elections is to select those who are intelligent and most capable of administering the duties of the offices. Ignorant people would never be selected for that purpose. No better illustrations of that truth can be found than in the results of the elections of legislators in the Philippine Islands since the creation of the general assembly in 1907. Not one of the ignorant or half-naked class, but men of a very high order were selected for this body. I believe the Philippine Assembly is the only legislative body in the world where every member is a graduate of a college or university. The electors have at least set the example to the nations of the earth of requiring such a high standard for lawmakers, some of whom are lawyers, doctors, college professors, merchants, farmers, and representatives of the laboring class, but all are college men. In visiting the southern islands I traveled for two weeks with a committee of the general assembly, consisting of the speaker, Mr. Osmeña, and 13 members. They were intelligent and dignified, and all were fine public speakers. Is it possible that men of such education and learning are incapable of enacting laws to govern themselves? What presumption it is in many citizens of our States to contend that such a body in the Philippines can not legislate wisely for its own people, but that the legislatures of our States, composed of not a third as many educated men, are fully capable of so doing. Only about 60 per cent of the members of our national Senate and House of Representatives have been graduated from a college or university. Would any of us like to be adjudged incapable of performing the duties of our office because some, or even many, of our constituents could not read or write?

The work of the general assembly has been creditable. Both Presidents Roosevelt and Taft have commended the conservative action of the legislators.

Gov. Gen. Harrison in October, 1914, said:

The past year has been one of progress and reform. The record of the first legislature in which Filipinos have been in complete majority is one in which all may well take pride. It is not my purpose to rehearse here all the accomplishments of the last session. Suffice it to say that they compare favorably with those of the most progressive States of the American Union.

Nor are the courses of their universities and colleges inconsiderable. I was told that the law course at the Santa Tomas University, at Manila, required seven years' study, of which two years were devoted to the Roman civil law and five years to the Spanish, English, and American law. There is no university in the United States that requires such long preparation. Santa Tomas University is older than our own Harvard.

In a speech I delivered in the House of Representatives 14 years ago, after a visit to the islands, I made this statement:

The general impression exists among many Americans that the Philippine people are savages. * * * When I find behind the prescription desks of the numerous drug stores of the islands, even when kept by Americans and Englishmen, Filipinos compounding medicines, taken from bottles labeled in Latin; when I see behind the counters of banks, having large capital, natives acting as bookkeepers and receiving and paying tellers; when I find them as merchants and clerks in almost all lines of business, as telegraph operators and ticket agents, conductors and engineers upon railroads, and as musicians rendering upon almost all instruments high-class music; when I am told that they alone make the observations and intricate calculations at the Manila Observatory, and that prior to the insurrection there were 2,100 schools in the islands and 5,000 students at the universities of Manila; when I find the better class living in good, substantial, and sometimes elegant houses, and many of them pursuing professional occupations, I can not but conclude that it is a base slander to compare these people to the Apaches or other American Indians. Even the civilizing test of Christianity is in their favor, as a greater proportion are members of the church than among our own people.

In my recent visit to the islands I found not only that the same conditions prevailed, but that there had been great advancement by the Filipinos, especially in occupations requiring technical knowledge.

The assistant director of education told me that in Manila alone there were more than 600 efficient native stenographers who could take dictation in either English or Spanish, and that there were thousands who daily did good work as typewriters.

Native electrical engineers, civil engineers, public accountants, architects, dentists, pharmacists, lithographers, and all of the professions have increased in large numbers.

The census of 1903 showed that of the males 21 years of age and over 32.2 per cent at that time could read and write Spanish, English, or some other language, and that 44.5 per cent over 10 years of age could read some language. Gen. McIntyre, before the Senate committee, estimated that now 50 per cent could either read or write some language; that census, containing very full statistics, was taken by 7,627 Filipino and 125 American canvassers.

According to the World Almanac of 1916, compiled from statistics furnished by the United States Census Bureau, illiteracy of all over 10 years of age prevails in the following countries in the appended percentage:

	Per cent.
Philippines	55.5
Bolivia	82.9
Bulgaria	65.5
Argentina	54.4
Brazil	85.2
Chile	49.9
Greece	57.2
Guatemala	92.7
Russia	69.0
Roumania	60.6
Spain	58.7

It must also be remembered that of the soldiers of the Revolutionary War more than one-half signed the roll mustering them out of the Army with a cross mark. Yet they were the constituents of those who established the most equitable government ever devised by man. The illiteracy of the Filipinos was taken from the last census of 1903, before they had received much benefit from the educational system of the islands; the percentage now would be much less.

Can anyone with fairness contend that Argentina, Brazil, Bolivia, and Chile are incapable of self-government, although they do have such a high percentage of illiteracy? Are we to say that Russia, Roumania, Bulgaria, Portugal, Spain, and Greece should not be independent? Yet they have a much larger percentage of illiteracy than the Philippines?

There are in the islands 538 American and 9,306 native schoolteachers, instructing the children in all the branches of education in English. How many of our teachers could conduct all the classes in the various grades of our schools in a foreign language? Of course they could learn to do this, but it would take work and ability. Why not concede that the Filipino teachers are civilized and possess education and ability which fit them for citizenship in any country? The Filipinos have a considerable native press in both daily and weekly papers.

There are now in the classified service of the Philippine Government 1,987 Americans and 7,394 Filipino officers. These were appointed under civil-service examinations. Is there any suggestion that these Filipinos are incapable or do not discharge their duties as faithfully and as well as the Americans? Would they not be equally as capable and as efficient under a government of their own?

The chief justice of the Supreme Court of the Philippines is a native, as are also two other members of that court, all of whom are recognized as able and learned judges.

Of the judges of the courts of the first instance 22 are Filipinos and 14 are Americans.

The municipal courts are presided over almost entirely by Filipinos.

The attorney general and nearly all his staff are Filipinos.

Of the nine commissioners, who now constitute the upper house of the legislature, five are natives and four are Americans.

Is it possible that these capable, efficient native officers, as soon as their appointment or election is provided for by their own government, would become incapable or inefficient?

The Philippine people for many years have been electing the governors of their Provinces. Has there been any contention that the governors selected were not good and capable men, or that their administration did not compare favorably with those of similar officers anywhere?

They have been electing their municipal officers ever since civil government was established. Has anyone even suggested that the mode of selection be changed? I venture the assertion that their municipal officers have given better satisfaction to their electors than ours have to us.

Practically all of the officers and employees of both the provincial and municipal governments are Filipinos.

As it is the interest in and love for the family which causes the father, even in lowly circumstances, to do far better for his children than more enlightened and wealthy people to whom they might be apprenticed would do for them, so it is that the interest and love of a people for their country and each other will produce ordinarily far better government than the rule of an alien race.

It was Henry Clay who said it was impossible for him to conceive of a people who were incapable of self-government.

John Hay, in his preface to Castilian Days, wrote:

> There are those who think the Spaniards are not fit for freedom. I believe that no people are fit for anything else.

The Philippine people are capable of self-government because they have a deep interest in their country and great love for her and possess a large highly educated class, thoroughly identified with the best interests of the islands, who under the educational qualification now prescribed by law will be elected to legislate and administer the affairs of government.

The Filipino people are not nomadic. They do not live in tents or caves and rove for their subsistence; they live in houses and have farms which they cultivate. They own nearly all the real estate of the islands; only 6 per cent are renters. They love their homes. Their children are a pleasure to them, and the devotion of children to their parents continues through life. They are generous to their relatives; they will share with them their household and divide with them the last morsel of their food. Pauperism is almost unknown. According to the last census only 1,668 paupers were a public charge. They are honest, industrious, and moral. Such men if left alone are sure to work out a splendid destiny for their country.

It was Alfred Noyes who wrote:

> Who are the empire builders? They > Whose desperate arrogance demands
> A self-reflecting power to sway
> A hundred little selfless lands?
> Lord God of battles, ere we bow
> To these and to their soulless lust,
> Let fall thy thunders on us now
> And strike us equal to the dust.
> But he that to his home is true,
> Where'er the tides of power may flow,
> Has built a kingdom great and new
> Which Time nor Fate shall overthrow.
> These are the empire builders; these
> Annex where none shall say them nay,
> Beyond the world's uncharted seas,
> Realms that can never pass away.

FILIPINOS NOT INCLINED TO INSURRECTION.

Why do men assert that if independence is granted to the Filipinos they will act as the people of some of the Latin American Republics in fomenting revolutions? Is there any evidence upon which to base such a conclusion? Are we going to assume that they are incapable of acting for their best interests? Are we going to deprive them of human rights, declared by us to be inalienable, upon a mere guess? While some of the Central and South American Republics have been revolutionary, many of them have not had insurrections for many decades. I am confident that as a whole the Spanish American Republics have had better government and their people are happier and more prosperous than they ever were under Spanish sovereignty. The Spanish population of the Philippines is too small to assume leadership there.

The Filipinos are not of the same temperament or even of the same race as the inhabitants of those Republics. The evidence is overwhelming that they are a quiet, peaceable, forbearing, law-abiding people, not inclined to insurrection. The fact that only one revolution of any magnitude against Spanish oppression took place in 300 years demonstrates their peaceful nature.

Gen. Frank McIntyre, Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, who has had large experience in the Philippines, in his testimony before the Senate committee clearly showed this fact:

> Senator SHAFROTH. I want to ask you a question in reference to the nature and character of the Filipino people. Have they any of the elements of a good many of the Latin American Republics tending toward revolution and insurrection?
> Gen. MCINTYRE. Well, we can judge that by the record; for the 300 years that they were under Spain the Filipinos had, we might say, no revolution.
> Senator SHAFROTH. They submitted to law and order, did they?
> Gen. MCINTYRE. They submitted to law and order.
> Senator SHAFROTH. Even if the orders were somewhat tyrannical?
> Gen. MCINTYRE. That was generally the case. The insurrection of 1896 was the most serious insurrection, and, of course, we met the continuation of that.
> Senator SHAFROTH. Well, in the conduct of the average Filipino individual, is he hard to manage?
> Gen. MCINTYRE. Not at all; very easy.
> Senator SHAFROTH. He obeys orders, does he?
> Gen. MCINTYRE. He obeys orders; and they are a people that are taught, and have been taught for ages, and it is well inculcated in them, to respect authority, and the exceptions to that are limited.

Since the provincial governors, municipal officers, and assemblymen have been elected by the people there has been no indication of a resort to violence, either during the election or over the result.

Much is made in the hearings before the Senate Committee on the Philippines of the fact that only 235,000 out of a population of 8,000,000 voted for assemblymen, but when you take into consideration that the law does not permit a man to vote unless he possesses a certain amount of property or can read or write the English or Spanish language, you can readily see why the number is so small. When the qualification is extended to those who can read and write their native language it is estimated that between 700,000 and 950,000 will vote. That contention, therefore, is no argument against their want of desire to vote, but is an illustration of how harsh is the law which requires them to read or write a foreign language before they can vote. Suppose our laws should prescribe that no one could vote who could not read or write a certain foreign language, how many votes would be cast in this country? The Filipinos are eager to exercise the elective franchise. The fact that 95 per cent of those who are registered vote demonstrates that assertion. In the last election there 235,786 voted out of a total registration of 248,154. In no State in the Union does such large percentage of electors vote. In Colorado 83 per cent of the men and 80 per cent of the women vote.

The estimate of the cost of the Philippines to the United States, including the expense of suppressing the insurrection, has varied from $600,000,000 to nothing. If you count as part of that cost the necessity for a larger Army and Navy to be ready to defend the islands, so often argued when the bills making appropriations therefor were before Congress, the cost would exceed the highest estimate.

It is absurd to say that the maintenance of our sovereignty in the islands costs us nothing. The fortifications at the entrance to Manila Bay, on the Island of Corregidor, Carabao, Fraile, and Cabanos have already cost $12,000,000, and if the fortifications are completed they will cost $22,000,000. On Corregidor alone we maintain 4,000 American troops. Gen. McIntyre has testified that we have reduced the number of American soldiers in the islands, but that there are still 12,000 men, besides three or four thousand native scouts in the service of the United States. Ex-President Taft, who was Secretary of War in 1906, in an article in the Saturday Evening Post of June 5, 1915, said:

> Our regular military establishment in 1906, with 60,000 effective men, cost us $72,000,000.

That is $1,200 a year for each soldier. The cost for those in the Philippines is more, on account of distance to transport, limitation of service, greater pay in the Tropics, and higher cost of subsistence. In reply to a Senate resolution, the Secretary of War reported that the cost of the Army of the Philippines to May 1, 1902, was $169,853,572; from May 1, 1902, to June 30, 1907, $114,515,155.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to ask my colleague a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to his colleague?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. Do the figures which have been given show any balance? In other words, are they subject to any deduction either from taxation or revenues from any other source?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no, Mr. President; the cost of maintaining civil government there is paid out of the revenues of the Philippine Islands. They have various sources of revenues there, but all that money goes to the maintenance of the Philippine civil government. These figures are not subject to any deduction. These are estimates made by the Secretary of War.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado if the entire expense of running the civil government is not derived from that source?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, yes; there is no doubt about that. The civil government, including their school system, is being maintained now by taxation upon the Philippine property and customs dues, which are collected, and formerly by export duties which they imposed upon some of their products.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I am interested in knowing, and possibly the Senator knows, the entire expense to the United States in acquiring and keeping the Philippine Islands up to the present time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There are many who contend it is from $600,000,000 to $1,000,000,000, but there are many who say, "Well, we would have our soldiers anyway, and they are just stationed over there, and consequently they cost nothing more." That is the theory upon which some of the estimates are based. I have not the statistics from the 30th of June, 1907, to the present time, but I imagine the cost is about $26,000,000 a year.

Mr. KENYON. As to the entire cost of acquiring the Philippine Islands and maintaining law and order and carrying them on to this time, has the Senator any estimate or any notion in his mind as to what it amounts to?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No, I can not tell; but it is about $300,000,000 or $400,000,000.

Mr. KENYON. Senator Hoar said in this Chamber on the 22d of May, 1902:

> The conflict in the Philippines has cost you $600,000,000, thousands of American soldiers—the flower of your youth—the health and sanity of thousands more, and hundreds of thousands of Filipinos slain.

Senator Hoar was rather a conservative man, but I assume those figures must be rather high.

Mr. SHAFROTH. They are not high if you take into consideration the increased cost that followed the Spanish-American War, because every increase of appropriations for the Army and Navy was largely justified by the fact that we held these possessions so far away, and it took a large Navy and a large Army in order to sustain our sovereignty there.

Mr. KENYON. There was very great expense in the conflict there when we were shooting civilization into the Philippines.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir; that is one of the conditions; and if Senator Hoar's estimate were carried out to the present time, taking into consideration all that he claimed, with the indirect expenditure, it would no doubt be double the amount which he named, although it has annually been decreasing.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I was only speaking with the courtesy of the Senator from Colorado. Probably it is a safe, conservative estimate, then, that the United States has spent something like $800,000,000 in acquiring and governing and subjugating the Philippine Islands up to this time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Directly and indirectly, I should think so.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to his colleague?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely rose to suggest that my understanding of the Senator's figures just stated have reference to the cost of maintenance as distinguished from the cost of acquisition.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; it includes acquisition.

Mr. THOMAS. Then there is great disparity between the estimate of Senator Hoar in 1902 and the estimate of the Senator from Colorado as derived from the reports of the War Department up to 1907.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But the War Department did not count any of the enlargements; it only counted the cost of the soldiers who were actually there, figured upon a basis of so much per soldier and the amount of supplies that were shipped there and not any Navy increase. Senator Hoar's statement included indirectly the increase of the Army and the increase of the Navy, and he charged it all up to the fact that it was made necessary by the acquisition of the Philippine Islands.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator take into consideration the additional cost it has been to this country in entering upon a system of a much larger Navy and possibly a larger Army in order to protect the possessions of a foreign people in another section of the world, how much this adds annually to our budget?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It does unquestionably; and those matters were taken into consideration by Senator Hoar when he made his statement.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator from North Dakota practically offered the suggestion I rose to offer. Of course, neither Senator Hoar nor any other man on earth could ascertain exactly what it has cost us to acquire and hold the Philippine Islands. I believe Senator Hoar's figures were far under rather than above the actual amount. As the Senator from North Dakota has suggested, from that day to this, and from now to the end of this Republic, if we retain the islands the fact that the islands are in our jurisdiction will be a reason rather than a cause for expenditures beyond the power of any man to calculate. They are vague and indefinite. They have been made and are made to-day and will be made to-morrow the reason for expenditures that are absolutely unnecessary.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have no doubt the Senator's statement is correct.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the very exhaustive statement of this question by the Senator from Colorado, but I was called from the Chamber, and I do not know whether he discussed this phase of the question or not. Has the Senator any data on the question as to what extent the lands, the resources of the Philippine Islands have been exploited by American citizens? Have investments been made there, and to what extent have the great opportunities been seized which a great many enterprising American citizens thought they would have when the islands were acquired?

Mr. SHAFROTH. They have unquestionably invested considerable money in the Philippine Islands, not so much as was expected, but there are several very large enterprises in the Philippine Islands, and that is one of the sources from which objection comes for Philippine independence.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I rather thought so.

Mr. SHAFROTH. They fear they will not have the protection which the United States Government will give them, and therefore they are unwilling to surrender the islands, but insist that we shall hold them perpetually to be a colony of the United States.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the Senator know the extent of such investments there?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not. They were encouraged to go there, and naturally it would tend to develop the islands. I do not think there has been any tabulation as to the exact amount. At least I have seen none.

The Jones bill last year estimated the annual cost to the United States there was $26,000,000 a year.

Suppose it is $24,000,000 a year, and that is a moderate estimate, can we ever hope to be reimbursed for that outlay? No one has ever suggested taxation of the Philippine people for that purpose. It would be futile, even if it were suggested, as they are poor and for years ran behind in maintaining their civil government. Are the people of the United States willing to expend $24,000,000 a year forever unless some great benefit, direct or incidental, will be received?

It is said, however, that great benefits to our commerce will result. Let us examine that contention and see if it is sound.

The imports from the United States to the Philippines during the year 1914 amounted to $24,020,395. The profit made in the export trade by our merchants, on the average, does not exceed 10 per cent, after paying freight and insurance. Hence the profit to our commerce does not exceed $2,402,039 a year. But who gets the profit? Does the Government, which expends at least $24,000,000 a year to maintain our sovereignty there? Oh, no; the Government does not get a penny of it; the merchant adds it to his own fortune. It is contended, however, that our exports to the islands will increase. No doubt they will. But suppose they double, treble, or quadruple, and it would take many years to quadruple our trade, the profits to the merchants could not even then exceed $10,000,000 a year, while the cost to the Government would continue at $24,000,000, and if we had any disturbances over there it might double or treble that sum. How long will the Government be willing to expend $24,000,000 a year in order to give a profit to some one else of half that amount? What an absurdity in trade economics.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator's argument would indicate that it was in the mind of some one at least, not of himself, that we can only retain our trade with the Filipinos under the cloak of the sovereignty of the Philippines. If that is true, it strikes me that it is a criticism which of itself is only the suggestion of further sovereignty over any alien race.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I believe, Mr. President, that the Filipinos would deal with us much better if we were to give them their independence.

Mr. CLAPP. Of course they would.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Much better than if we were to hold them with an iron hand in subjection. I believe that men are grateful in this world.

If we give to the Filipinos their independence, it will not diminish our exports to them. A grateful people will always give the preference to their benefactors, other things being nearly equal. The boycott is never started against those who deal in a spirit of friendship. It is the weapon of resentment. If the Philippine people should feel that the promises of independence which they understood were made to them had been violated, is there not infinitely more reason for a boycott against our products than if we gave them their independence?

It seems to me clear that we can not increase our trade nearly so much by governing the islands without their consent as by giving them that for which their hearts yearn, namely, their liberty and independence. Cuba's trade with us is several times greater than it ever was before its independence.

MANILA CAN NEVER BECOME DISTRIBUTING PORT FOR ORIENT.

To contend that Manila can become the distributing port for the commerce of the Orient is to deny the axiom that the shortest distance between two points is a straight line. Those who make such predictions ignore the fact that the shortest distance from the United States to Manila is by the course nearest to a straight line in navigation, namely, by the arc of the great circle which goes near the great Japanese and Chinese ports before Manila is reached. The freight rate now is $4 per ton more from San Francisco to Manila than to Chinese and Japanese ports. To expect that merchant vessels which always take the short course to carry their cargoes by the oriental ports to Manila and then unload and reship to China and Japan is to indulge in a dream that will never be realized. You might as well expect that England could make one of the Bermuda Islands the distributing point for her commerce with the United States. She realized this principle when she acquired Hongkong, an island at the entrance to Pearl River, and made it a free port and when she obtained a concession in the city of Shanghai, near the mouth of the Yangtze River, the great artery of commerce for the Chinese Empire. Hongkong and Shanghai are the natural points for the transfer of freight from ocean vessels to river boats, whereas Manila is 640 miles from the nearest Chinese port. We have a concession at Shanghai, and for distribution to China of the commerce of the United States it is worth infinitely more than any port we have in the Philippine Islands.

THE ISLANDS OF NO VALUE TO AMERICAN FARMERS AND WORKMEN.

The islands, though rich for the Filipinos, are of no value for purposes of settlement by our people. It is not a white man's country. The heat of the tropical sun is too great for manual labor in the fields by men reared in the Temperate Zone. We have occupied the islands for 16 years, yet there are practically no American tillers of the soil there except a colony of 56 ex-soldiers who married Filipino women. The Philippine government about two years ago agreed, if they would take up homesteads on public lands, that it would lend to each ₱1,000 with which to make improvements. They located their homesteads in Mindanao, near Camp Keithly, on very high ground, where the heat will not sap their vitality. They are doing very well. Outside of this one settlement, there are practically no Americans farming there. The islands, therefore, can never be of value to our people for purposes of settlement.

American workmen in the Philippines can not compete with the natives because of the low wages prevailing there.

Now, I wish to discuss for a few minutes the situation from a military viewpoint.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Before the Senator takes up a new point I should like to ask whether he thinks if we should withdraw from the islands now the Filipinos are sufficiently well organized to conduct a government of their own and to maintain peace and order there, and whether they have sufficiently a common language to enable them to communicate with each other upon matters of general interest?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, it is true there are different dialects, but not more so than I have observed among the peoples of European countries. The Filipinos can understand each other and have almost as free intercourse as do the people of European countries.

As to when independence should be granted, I want it granted just as soon as we can within a time which, in my judgment, would be sufficient to have the affairs of government turned over to them, probably retaining the Governor General for a while, afterwards putting in a native Governor General and providing that, after six months' or a year's time those people should be given their entire independence, provided that the President felt that they were maintaining their government in a stable form. I believe in their independence; I believe in giving it to them just as quickly as they can exercise the duties of government, and not after the manner of one who desires to hold back the declaration of independence.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I entirely agree with the Senator from Colorado in the view that we should withdraw from the islands immediately, if possible, and I have no doubt at all that it would be to our interest to withdraw; but we are also considering the interests of the Filipino people. When I was there, some 10 years ago, as a member of a party headed by Mr. Taft, my observation at that time was that there was a great variety of language—not simply a variety of dialects, but a variety of language—and that there was no common language. I recall upon one occasion, when Mr. Taft was making a speech—one of singular nobility of sentiment, one which ought to have aroused the enthusiasm of his auditors, some 5,000 or 10,000 people—there was no response, although his speech was interpreted by the secretary of the commission, who was an accomplished Spanish scholar. His voice was strong and loud and could be heard to the utmost limits of the crowd. I remarked to a provincial judge, an American, who sat next to me, that I was amazed that there was no response. His reply was that the audience there could understand neither English nor Spanish. I became convinced at that time that there was not such a common language there as would enable them to exchange ideas, and that in order to conduct government, and particularly a democratic government, in which the people are to think and act, it would be necessary at least to have a common language.

Of course I understand that education has extended since that time, and training in the English language, but I should very much doubt whether that training has reached the extent that it would give them a common language. Has the Senator from Colorado been in the Philippine Islands recently?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes, sir; I was there last summer.

Mr. NEWLANDS. What is the Senator's observation with respect to that?

Mr. SHAFROTH. My observation with respect to the matter was this: It happened that there was a committee of the General Assembly of the Philippine Islands that was to visit the southern islands. I went with that committee, consisting of Speaker Osmeña and 13 of the representatives. Public meetings were held at which speeches were made in English and Spanish and Visayan. There are two dialects which are spoken by, I should say, three-fourths of the people of the Philippine Islands. Those are the Visayan and the Tagalog. They generally called upon members of the party I was with to make some expression. Whenever we said anything in English we could find an appreciable response in the audience; without any question whatever many could understand, and they would applaud. When Mr. Osmeña and Mr. QUEZON spoke there was recognition immediately of what they said.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Are there any statistics as to the number of people who can speak the English language in the islands? Of course, they rely upon that, I imagine, as the common language.

Mr. SHAFROTH. They are pursuing the study of English to a greater extent than any other language, because it is being taught in all the schools. Whenever you go to a school, or when you want to get information, if you go to the young pepole on the streets you can get it, and get it in English, but the Spanish Government never wanted, or seemingly never wanted, their language extended. They did not establish schools among the masses. There were a good many schools there, but they were not established for the purpose of studying the Spanish language. Spanish was the language of the merchant; it was the language of the trader and used in the conduct of court affairs. The American Government is the only one that has attempted to introduce a language among the great masses of those people. The fact that 9,000 Filipino teachers are teaching the various grades of schools in the English language is evidence to my mind that enormous progress has been made in that respect.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I want to ask the Senator another question, if he will permit me. Assuming that in the interest of the Filipino people it would not be wise for us to withdraw and immediately turn over the government of the islands to the Filipinos, does not the Senator think that we are making too rapid an advance in giving the Filipino people control immediately of their upper house? As I understand, under the pending measure the Governor General will have the appointment of only 2 out of 24 members of the upper house, while now he has the appointment of all the members of the upper house. Would it not be better, if this process of training the Filipinos in government is to be a gradual process, and if our preparations for withdrawal are gradual, to at first simply increase gradually in the upper chamber the number of representatives that the people themselves are to elect, reserving for some considerable time the majority control? The Senator speaks of "intelligent legislation" on the part of the lower house, but I am sure that in the early sessions of that body there were some very foolish and absurd performances, which I fear would be emulated unless some larger control is exercised.

Of course the Senator from Colorado will understand that I fully realize the beneficent character of the administration of those islands. I think it has been wonderfully conducted. I think that Mr. Taft's greatest work was the work that he accomplished in this building up gradually of local self-government in the Philippines, and I believe that he deserves the highest commendation for the splendid spirit that animated him throughout; yet when I was there the apparent hopelessness of their making a substantial democracy of those islands oppressed me; and whilst I was eager to withdraw, I felt that immediately upon our withdrawal, even if we should withdraw within a hundred years, at the expiration of the hundred years the result of our withdrawal would be a chaotic condition of the islands themselves.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, well, probably the result is that the Senator does not believe in withdrawing at all.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not say that. On the contrary, I am rather inclined to think that we should protect our own interests and withdraw, whether that withdrawal shall result beneficially to the Philippine people or not. I am for legislating for America first.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; that, it seems to me, is a very strong position; but when the Senator talks about delays, he should put himself somewhat in the position of the Filipino. The Filipino has now waited 17 years. How much longer is he to wait? Is he to wait 100 years, when you can not say that he will be prepared for independence? Is it possible that we are, on the mere question of a guess, to prevent those people from having the rights which our own Government, in its Declaration of Independence, says are "inalienable rights"? It will take several years yet to transform that government into a republic; it can not be done immediately, no matter what our desire may be that it should be done immediately.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. Before the Senator from Colorado proceeds with the next phase of his discussion, I should like a little information along this line: I believe that the American incentive for holding the Philippines is a fear that if we now leave them to their own independence they will probably be taken possession of by some powerful autocratic government, and all of the labors that we have expended upon them would be lost. My own view is that we could secure an agreement of all of the great nations of the world, if we set forth to do so, to maintain the independence of the Filipino government. Has the Senator from Colorado thought of that matter, and has he any information to give us on that subject? I am satisfied that the American people would be very glad to give independence to the Philippine people to-day if they felt sure that they would not fall into the hands of some other powerful government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator's question, I will say that I also visited Japan. That is the only country that I have heard suggested as likely to take the Philippine Islands. I looked at the question with a view to ascertaining whether there was a belligerent feeling in Japan. I must say that I found nothing but the friendliest feeling there. I found, further, that there was an uneasy feeling at the time of the acquisition of the Philippine Islands, a fear that it was an act of aggression upon our part for the acquisition of more territory in the Orient; but that since the policy has been almost reversed, since it has become known that our intentions there were benevolent, there has been a tendency the other way. The Japanese Government feels almost exactly with respect to the Orient as we feel with respect to the Western Hemisphere. Let a European power or any other great power come to this continent, and we immediately feel alarm. When not long ago one of Japan's battleships was stuck in the mud off the coast of California, immediately the newspapers stated that the Japanese were trying to establish a naval base there. Senators will remember the news articles and editorials that were published and the alarm that then existed among the American people; and it was not until two other battleships went there and pulled her out and she sailed away that they were relieved of their apprehensions. Japan, as I have said, feels as to the Orient exactly as we feel in regard to the Western Hemisphere. Every movement that is made there in the way of acquisition of territory is something that she looks on with a jealous eye; and she did have a feeling, I have no doubt, hostile somewhat to the American people when this policy of acquisition prevailed some 15 or 16 years ago, but she has made no effort to get the Philippines. Only 3,000 Japanese are in the Philippine Islands to-day. She has a right to send her people there, but she never has done so; and the reason is that they are not used to a tropical climate, and very high wages must prevail to induce them to go into a tropical country. However, if Japan had any intention of seizing those islands, I imagine many more of her people would have gone there.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, right here let me say that, while we look with jealous eye on any other government obtaining any further territorial rights on this hemisphere, that fact did not prevent us from taking possession of Hawaii; did not prevent us from getting hold of Porto Rico; did not prevent us from acquiring a sort of protectorate over Cuba, and getting as much control as possible over all the territory which we thought it might be to our advantage to hold in case of war with another nation. Why might not Japan, although jealous of any foreign power getting a foothold along the Asiatic borders or in the western Pacific Ocean, nevertheless have a desire to strengthen herself by getting possession of such territory as would enable her to keep off all foreign countries? I am not sure that she would not be actuated by the same sentiments that have actuated the American people.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, that is possible, but, as I have said, there is no movement toward that end. Three thousand Japanese have gone to the Philippine Islands, while 70,000 Chinese are there. The Japanese are a very small fraction of the population in the Philippine Islands and they have shown no tendency to go there now; but if there were any intention on the part of Japan to acquire them, then there would unquestionably be some emigration from Japan to those islands. The truth is, the Japanese do not thrive in the Tropics; and the Philippines are in the Tropics. Some Japanese have gone to Hawaii, but the climate of Hawaii is entirely different from that of the Philippines, and Hawaii is much farther north. For all these reasons it seems to me there will be no attempt upon the part of Japan to seize the Philippine Islands.

Now, I should like to take up the question from the military viewpoint for a few moments, and then close.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him there?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator is very familiar with the situation and condition in those islands and I am not; but is it really an argument that because only 3,000 Japanese are in the Philippine Islands to-day when they are under the protection of the United States, after we do give them their freedom and our protection is practically withdrawn, Japan would not then feel like taking possession of those islands?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, it is possible. I really believe that the proper solution of this matter is to try to get an international agreement to respect the neutrality of those islands, and I have not any doubt that Japan would join in such an agreement.

Mr. GALLINGER. That would be a very desirable thing, if it could be done.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It would be a very desirable thing; but the people of the Philippines are not asking that the protection of the United States be extended to them.

Why not let the Filipinos decide that for themselves? The American people did not seek a protectorate in France when they attained their independence. No nation that has ever obtained self-government has ever been willing that its sovereignty should be impaired in the slightest. Protectorates and suzerainties have too often proved dangerous by forming the excuse for seizure and subjugation.

I believe in an honest effort by this Government to obtain an agreement with the leading nations of the world to guarantee the neutralization of the islands, but if that can not be done, I would not withhold independence from them. They are willing to take independence without a protectorate, and as they run the risk why not let them have it?

Commissioner QUEZON, in his testimony before the Senate Committee on the Philippines, gave the best answer to such objection in the following language:

> We do not want any protectorate if we get independence. You would not want it, because it would be unfair and unjust to the United States; and we would not, because protection can never be afforded without impairment of the absolute freedom of the protected States, and we are more concerned about the substance of freedom than about the word independence. If we are going to have independence, we want real independence and not merely nominal independence.

Mr. QUEZON represents the Filipinos and knows their desires as expressed in innumerable resolutions of citizens, organizations, and official bodies. His answer in behalf of his people ought to be conclusive to us.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. With the Senator's permission, I should like to suggest to him that the passage of this bill would not preclude any effort on the part of this Government to bring about an international agreement to protect the integrity and autonomy of the Philippine Islands, but the passage of this bill would forward a movement of that kind, would it not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think so. I have introduced a resolution asking the President of the United States to enter into such negotiations, and I hope after this bill passes to get some action upon it during this Congress. I am satisfied that the leading nations of the world would readily join in such an agreement of neutrality.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. Before the Senator leaves that subject, I want to ask him this question: It was the testimony before our committee of very eminent citizens of the Republic that in their view as soon as our troops left the Philippine Islands the people of the islands would be—I think this was the expression—"at each other's throats." That is a consideration that has troubled me a great deal. I am not in favor of trying to force our Government upon some other people who may not want it. Suppose it happens that we withdraw from the islands, as the Senator suggests, in a couple of years, and then those people fly at each other's throats, so that there is a condition there similar to that prevailing in Mexico; can we sit back then and say, "We are done; we are free of this burden, and there is no moral responsibility of any kind upon us"?

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is a condition which is presented to them. They have a highly educated class there who believe that it is better for them to run that risk than not to have independence; and when we say "if you are willing, take it," the responsibility is no longer ours, in my judgment; but I want to say to the Senator that all these predictions up to this time have proved absolutely false. The prediction was made that if the American troops were withdrawn from Mindanao the people would begin to get at each other's throats immediately; but they have been withdrawn for more than two years, leaving nothing but Filipino scouts, and there have not been any riots or insurrections or anything that might be claimed even to partake of the nature of an insurrection.

Mr. KENYON. I agree with the Senator that if we withdraw from the islands we ought to go out bag and baggage and be done, letting them work out their own salvation, without any moral responsibility upon us, if we can avoid it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Now, Mr. President, I want to view this matter for a few moments from the military standpoint.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the Senator leaves the branch of the discussion he has been pursuing, as he has just said that there has been no riot in the Philippines in the last two years, I will ask him to listen to the following press report, dated the 6th day of February, 1915:

> FILIPINO ADMITS SEDITION—RUFINO VICENTE, ONE OF THE ACCUSED LEADERS, PLEADS GUILTY.
> MANILA, P. I., February 6.
> Rufino Vicente, one of the leaders accused of instigating the Filipino raid on the governmental offices at Navotas Christmas eve, pleaded guilty on trial here on the charge of sedition. Other Filipinos held on the same charge pleaded not guilty.
> The public prosecutor asserts that the government will prove that the movement was widely organized, and that documentary evidence shows that the rising was directed as much against the Filipino politicians now holding public office as it was against the American officials. The trial of the natives arrested in connection with the rising attempted in Manila and its environs December 24 is pending. These men are to be tried on the charge of brigandage.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator what I know about that. There was a meeting of some cooks of various restaurants and hotels who assembled at the botanical gardens, which are between the Hotel Manila and the center of the town. No one was hurt. There was some violent language used. Gov. Gen. Harrison told me that he drove through that crowd at the time they were assembled and did not know it was an insurrection. It was such a calm, quiet, undemonstrative gathering that the Governor General drove right through the crowd without knowing that it was anything but an assemblage of people upon some political matters. I want to say further that nearly everything that comes from Manila has a certain tinge to it, just as ex-President Taft said was the case in his day. I want to read you a paragraph from an address by him to show you just what interpretation has been put by the American press on affairs over there. He says:

The attitude of the American press and of the American merchant in hostility to the Filipinos, and in consequent hostility to the civil government, has led them into the error of emphasizing in every possible way, by letter and representations of all sorts, that the conditions of the country as to tranquillity were so bad that the whole of the islands were still in a state of war. Every little ladrone fight, every discomfiture which the constabulary suffered, was exaggerated and made the basis for inferences that the conditions in the country were retrograding rather than improving. Such incidents were seized upon and made as much of as headlines and general statements could make them.

The same kind of statements, rumors, and reports are sent out now against the Governor General that were sent out against ex-President Taft when he was trying to establish law and order, and he so stated in Manila on the occasion when he delivered his address.

Now, I will state, Mr. President, that there has been a report by the Governor General as to the so-called insurrection or difficulty or mass meeting, or what not, referred to by the Senator from Illinois. No guns were fired; very few, if any, of the people were armed; and the report was to the effect that it amounted practically to nothing and did not disturb the government over there in the slightest.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I am asking for information, not in order to take up time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will be glad to give such information to the Senator as I can.

Mr. SHERMAN. On January 23, 1915, about a year ago, from Manila came the following press note. Possibly the Senator has some information about what became of this prisoner:

PHILIPPINE REBEL TO DIE—GOVERNOR GENERAL REJECTS PLEA TO SPARE INSURGENT LEADER.

MANILA, P. I., January 23.

Gov. Gen. Francis Burton Harrison, in an order to-day, directed that Gen. Noriel, the insurgent leader, who is one of the most prominent natives of the province of Cavite, be put to death next Wednesday. The execution originally was set for January 12, but Judge Revilla, a native jurist, issued a stay.

Influential Filipinos exerted every effort on behalf of Gen. Noriel, but Gov. Harrison directed that the death sentence be carried out. A pending measure abolishing capital punishment offers the only hope for Noriel.

Does the Senator know what became of this unfortunate gentleman?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; but I do know that there was a man who had headquarters in Hongkong, with a few agents in the Philippine Islands, who would go to some of the ignorant Filipinos and say to them, "For ₱5 I will give you a commission as captain; for ₱10 I will give you a commission as colonel; for ₱20 I will give you a commission as general." It was a means of extracting money from the people, but never resulted in an insurrection, though a great fuss was made about the fact that generals and colonels and majors and captains were taking part in this, that, or the other movement. That amounted practically to nothing. The Governor General tried to stop it. He did, I presume, have some persons arrested who had participated in the fraud, more for the purpose of protecting the Filipinos against deception than for any dangers that might arise to the Government there.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, does the Senator know what became of this particular offender?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; I do not know; but I have not heard of anyone being executed there. I can not say with any degree of certainty as to that.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say a few words upon this question from the military standpoint.

FROM THE MILITARY STANDPOINT.

It is the consensus of opinion of those who are best informed upon such subjects that solidarity of territory is the most invulnerable form of possession.

It was Mr. Gladstone who said:

The United States have a national base for the greatest continuous empire ever established by man. * * * The distinction between a continuous empire and one severed and dispersed over the seas is vital.

When we annex permanently the Philippine Islands we make them targets for the attack of any foreign power with which we may engage in war. Why will they attack us there instead of on the mainland? Because the islands are 7,000 miles from our base of supplies. Every mile of such a distance increases the difficulty of defense in almost a geometrical ratio. When we declared war against Spain we did not attack her on home territory. If we had done so, it would have taken ten times as many men and ten times as many battleships to have accomplished the same result. We fought her in her outlying possessions, 3,000 and 13,000 miles from her base of supplies. The fact that Spain has lost one after another of her possessions in the Western Hemisphere shows how difficult it is to maintain a war so far from home territory.

It was Mr. Frederic Harrison, an eminent English writer, who so vigorously showed the weakness of the Crown colonies of the British Empire in this language:

But an aggregate of dependencies which is forever disturbed and menaced and forever awaiting or forestalling attack, which contributes nothing to the home government in money or men or resources of any kind, is not a strength, but an increasing weakness. It must pull down the strongest race that ever trod the earth, and as it pulls them down it will hurry them from one crime to another.

The coast line of the many islands of the Philippines is greater than that of the entire Atlantic and Pacific shores of the United States. Those islands being the natural points of attack of our enemies must be fortified, if we determine to hold them against foreign aggression. To properly fortify even the more important cities will require hundreds of millions of dollars. Are we willing to make such expenditures when many of our own cities are defenseless?

The Philippines, being our weakest places of resistance, will necessarily in time of war cause us to concentrate our battleships there for a great struggle, leaving relatively unprotected many of our important cities.

Prof. Robert M. Johnston, of Harvard University, a lecturer at the War College at Washington, D. C., used this language relative to the Philippines in his recent work entitled "Arms and the Race":

It is a weak, eccentric military position, fundamentally indefensible against any strong trans-Pacific power, but inevitably a magnet to draw ships and troops away from our shores. A popular clamor might result at any time in a weak administration sending the battle fleet to Manila.

It was Lord Macaulay who so vigorously denied the military advantage of colonies in these words:

There are some who assert that from a military and political point of view the West Indies are of great importance to this country. This is a common but a monstrous misrepresentation. We venture to say that colonial empire has been one of the greatest curses of modern Europe. What nation has it ever strengthened? What nation has it ever enriched? What has been the fruits? Wars of frequent occurrence and immense cost, fettered trade, lavish expenditure, clashing jurisdiction, corruption in governments, and indigence among the people.

Those curses are the very things our great Republic should avoid. It should set its seal of disapproval of conquest and colonial empire by giving to a liberty-loving people their right to independence.

The oriental powers have always looked with alarm upon the seizure of the Philippines by the United States, fearing that it might lead to other acquisitions in the Eastern Hemisphere. Japan naturally feels as to the Orient as we do to the Western Hemisphere. Independence of a small State in Central or South America did not give us the least concern nor create the desire to seize it because it was small and weak, but the attempt of a powerful nation to acquire any territory in the Western Hemisphere has always caused the greatest uneasiness to us. We were very much alarmed a short time ago when it was suspected that Japan was about to establish a naval base on Lower California. Is it not natural that Japan should view with apprehension the seizure and retention of islands so close to her possessions by a powerful nation? It would remove all suspicions if we granted the independence of the islands. Occupancy by an independent government would not be threatening to her. The holding of the islands, therefore, is a perpetual irritation to Japan, and will be the underlying cause of war if we have a contest at arms with her.

Why jeopardize the peace and quiet of our great Republic, when by this act of right and justice we can attach to us a grateful people and remove the main cause of dissatisfaction and jealousy upon the part of the great eastern nation?

Some of the best military experts of our Government, believing it would be impossible for us to defend the Philippines against any nation having large armies and an efficient navy, have said that in case of war our best policy would be not to attempt to defend the islands, but to rely upon the outcome of the war to recover them. All seem to concede that under any circumstances the attack of the enemy would be made there, consequently the loss and destruction would occur there. What a gloomy outlook to the inhabitants of the islands, of death, devastation, and destruction to their fair land. No wonder the Philippine people feel they had rather take the chances as an independent nation of avoiding war through diplomacy of its own officers than to run the risk of invasion by any nation that might get into a conflict with us. As the complications of the Philippine Government with other nations would be far less than those of the United States, their danger of invasion would be less.

A great many small nations for hundreds of years, through diplomacy, have maintained their independence. In fact, most of those that lost their independence did so by reason of being drawn into the maelstrom of conflicts of great nations.

As the Philippine people are the ones most vitally affected, their determination that they want independence should be conclusive.

CONCLUSION.

Mr. President, let us grant to this people the right to govern their own country. It is right and it is also expedient, both for them and for us. It will be a marked example to all the land-grabbing empires of the world of real altruism. It will teach the warring countries of Europe that civilization demands liberal treatment of their colonial possessions. It will impress upon the minds of all peoples that conquest is nothing less than criminal aggression, which in the end will not pay. It will remove the suspicion of the Republics of South and Central America that the United States has designs upon their territory, and will create a friendship which will produce lasting peace and prosperity for the entire continent, and thereby stimulate our commerce and intercourse with them. It will remove the cause for war upon the part of any oriental country, and produce harmony and cordial relations instead of distrust and enmity, which will increase our trade with the far eastern nations. It will inspire every American with pride that the ideals of liberty and freedom, for which our forefathers fought and died, and which resulted in the creation of the greatest Nation in the world, are still cherished by our people; that these patriots of old shall not have lived and died in vain. It will preserve the principles of our Government and thereby save us from the fate of imperialism, which has befallen so many Republics. It will, in these warlike times, make men turn from the horrors of strife and approve the doctrine of "peace on earth, good will toward men." It will so adjust conditions that the only Christian people of the Orient will become the leaders in the movement there in behalf of human rights. It will establish in the Orient, where human liberty is least respected, a new republic dedicated, as ours, to the rights of mankind. It will have a modifying influence upon all monarchies in behalf of a more liberal form of government. It will instill into the Filipinos an ambition to work out their own destiny, and education and learning will attain still greater heights. It will grapple those people to us with hooks of steel and make them in all future ages rise up and call us blessed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have a very illuminating letter on this subject written from Manila a short time ago by Hon. RICHARD W. AUSTIN, a Member of the other House of Congress, he having visited the islands, and I ask unanimous consent to place it in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH in the chair). The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the letter referred to by him may be placed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. May I understand what it is?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a letter written from Manila a short time ago by Hon. RICHARD W. AUSTIN, a Member of the other House of Congress, he having visited the Philippine Islands, Japan, and China. It is full of interesting matter, figures of imports and exports, and all that sort of thing. While from glancing over it I may say that there are some things in it to which I do not agree, yet it occurs to me that it might be a valuable contribution to this discussion.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does it constitute in any way an attack on the Philippine government?

Mr. GALLINGER. Not at all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is not a criticism?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not a criticism.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the request of the Senator from New Hampshire will be granted. The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

AMERICA'S DUTY IN THE PHILIPPINES.

MANILA, P. I.

Congress not being in session, I decided to spend the vacation in visiting our possessions in the Pacific—the Hawaiian and Philippine Islands and Guam and also a journey into China and Japan. After four months in the Orient, I have decided to write down some of my observations and conclusions, hoping the same will receive careful consideration by my fellow Americans in the States. In this period I have covered over 20,000 miles and spent a portion of four months in the cities of Honolulu, Manila, Nagasaki, Yokohama, Tokyo, Kyoto, Osaka, Kobe, Shanghai, Nanking, Hankow, Wuchang, and Peking. Have visited many industrial plants in China and Japan, and in Peking had an interview with the great President of the new Republic, Gen. Yuan Shih Kai, and also met some of the members of his cabinet.

I am going to write first about the Philippines and later take up the Hawaiian Islands, China, and Japan. I found in the Philippines depression in business, general dissatisfaction on the part of the business element, and a condition of doubt and uncertainty as to the future, and unanimous sentiment among Americans of the nonofficeholding element and Europeans against the governmental policy of the Wilson administration as being carried out by Gov. Harrison, under instructions from Washington. Trained, competent, and experienced Americans have been summarily dismissed from a service their energy, ability, and unceasing devotion had made a success, and their places when filled given to a few "good Democrats" from the States, but largely to inexperienced Filipinos.

Many of these men who have been displaced came to the Islands carrying guns in their hands in order to aid the immortal Dewey in finishing his work of redeeming the islands from Spanish misrule. Later on these men rendered valiant service in defeating the insurrection against the United States led by Aguinaldo. They helped put the Spaniards out of the islands, helped put down a local rebellion, and now, after having faithfully served the United States Government in war and in peace, they are unceremoniously kicked out, and their places largely given to those who were indorsed by Filipino politicians, some of whom held commissions in the revolutionary army. At the time this was done the natives were holding not less than 71 per cent of the government positions in the islands. I found the Spanish-American veterans, and there are several thousand in the islands with a number of their posts or organizations, justly indignant at this unfair treatment of their former comrades in arms.

The present administration is the first to introduce politics in the selection of appointees, though two or three Democrats preceded Mr. Harrison in the Governor General's office. In going over the matter with a prominent Democratic attorney in Manila, he expressed the opinion that a majority of those who had been appointed under previous administrations were of Democratic faith, and in the selections made, character, fitness, and ability to do the work had been the only consideration. The splendid achievements accomplished in the islands since the American occupation are the best proof of the wisdom of such a policy. But Gov. Harrison served many years in Congress from New York City, and hence was brought up in the Tammany school of politics, which teaches and practices the Jacksonian theory, "to the victors belong the spoils," even at the expense of maintaining the best, the most progressive government in all the Orient, and one from which Tammany could learn much to the advantage of the taxpayers of New York City.

There is, perhaps, another reason why the new governor should follow such a policy. He has publicly stated his indebtedness to MANUEL QUEZON for the position he now holds. QUEZON is one of the Commissioners from the islands to the American Congress, is very much in politics, and naturally anxious to place as many of his partisans on the Government pay roll as possible. Having served in the revolutionary army against the United States, we can imagine he is not shedding tears when the political guillotine decapitates former American soldiers in the interest of his political supporters or former comrades in the Filipino revolution. Such a Wilsonian policy may delight the Manila politicians, but I doubt if it will appeal to the sense of fairness of the American people who have always believed in fair and honorable treatment of those who have bravely and patriotically come to the Nation's aid in times of stress and storm.

The Americans whose courage and fidelity contributed to the establishment of our sovereignty in the islands, whose energy and capital have been freely used in developing the mining, commercial, and manufacturing interests of the Philippines, and who are amongst the largest taxpayers have no voice in the Government, no influence with the present administration, are not consulted, and are, in fact, absolutely ignored. One noticeable effect of such a policy is shown in the action of the commanding general in not permitting the band to play America's national anthem—the Star Spangled Banner—on the Luneta, or public park. He very properly declines to give the natives opportunity to continue to show their disrespect in refusing or neglecting to salute our flag.

HOW PROGRESS IS HALTED.

Now, what has injured business? What is holding up progress? What is delaying development and keeping prosperity out of sight in the Philippines—the richest undeveloped country on the shores of the great Pacific? The true answer is the Jones bill—the attempt in Congress to carry out the foolish and unpatriotic teaching of William Jennings Bryan to turn the islands adrift without guide or compass: to turn 8,000,000 people, 90 per cent of the adults illiterate, and 1,000,000 wild, over for the time being to the political firm of Quezon, Osmeña & Co. to try out their kindergarten governmental notions and pipe dreams of a great national Philippine Republic until they are taken over by Japan and relegated to the vassal class along with Korea and Formosa. In that event the Filipinos would not only lose all voice in their government, but the very name of their country would be changed, as in the case of Korea and Formosa, and a Japanese name substituted. For 10 days I industriously interviewed Americans in all walks of life, and engaged in every line of human endeavor, Democrats, Republicans, Progressives, soldiers, sailors, civil officials, merchants, professional men, lawyers, physicians, clergymen, editors, bankers, clerks, policemen, scouts and constabulary officials, etc., and upon my honor not a single one, and mark you a majority of them have been in the islands for more than 10 years, many 15 and 16 years, thought the natives prepared, able, or strong enough to maintain law and order, and continue the excellent government created and maintained under American guidance, supervision, and control.

I quote the following from one of those interviewed: "If the United States should withdraw, it would result in a duplication of the situation and conditions in Mexico, Haiti, and San Domingo multiplied many times over." A native government would be powerless to control and govern the many tribes, with 15 or 16 different dialects, pagan, heathen, and Christian, warlike and savage, with bitter and long-standing grievances between them, a million out of total of 8,000,000 non-Christians, wild and uncivilized, and of the 7,000,000 Christians less than 10 per cent of the adults educated. In addition to these serious and complicated local problems, without the aid of the United States, the natives would be wholly unable to protect and defend themselves from without—from foreign selfishness, covetousness, and aggrandizement.

The total government income is less than the cost of a single up-to-date battleship. This means that an army and navy for defensive purposes would be impossible. The Manila native editors and politicians who shout "independence" night and day are so simple that they believe the people of the United States will tax themselves till "Kingdom come" to maintain an army and navy in the Philippines for the benefit and protection of a people whose selfish politicians insist upon severing American control and setting up for themselves. Every intelligent American and European engaged in business in the islands—and I do not hesitate to include the Chinese merchants, who control $160,000,000 of the $267,000,000 wholesale and retail trade—knows and realizes that so long as they have American protection their lives and business interests are absolutely safe, and in the event our flag should come down and another flag of the so-called Philippine Republic appear, it would mean confusion, chaos, and, in a very short time, ruin, pure and simple.

So long as there is doubt and uncertainty as to whether the United States or the Manila politicians are to govern there will be stagnation in business—a suspension of growth and development—so long will capital be timid and men refuse to develop the resources of the islands, build factories, and continue the marvelous work so auspiciously begun and continued during the administrations of Govs. Taft, Wright, Ide, Smith, Forbes, and Gilbert.

BRYANISM IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Ex-Secretary Bryan, three years ago at Baltimore, committed the Democratic Party and the present administration to the folly of turning the Philippine Islands adrift. In his first campaign against McKinley, Mr. Bryan declared the best thing for America was "free silver." Had his advice been followed, would it have blessed or cursed our country? There is only one answer. The defeat of free silver and the abolition of slavery are two of our greatest blessings, and the names of Lincoln and McKinley will always be remembered in connection with these two great deeds.

Dr. Bryan, in his second campaign against President McKinley, had another prescription for the American people labeled "Anti-Imperialism," or turn the Philippines and other island possessions loose. On that, as on the free-silver issue, he was overwhelmingly defeated, and the people at the ballot box decided to retain the Philippine and Hawaiian Islands, Porto Rico, and Guam. After this decision, our Government went forward in spending millions in constructing fortifications—$12,000,000 in the bay of Manila, Army posts and barracks, transporting troops to and from the Philippines for 15 years, and in many ways improving the islands from a military and naval standpoint. Counting this cost, the $20,000,000 originally paid Spain, and the amount necessary to capture and expel the soldiers of Spain and crush the incipient Filipino revolution, we have taken from the National Treasury—the people's money—countless millions in the nature of our country's investment in the islands.

The pending proposition—the Jones bill—the Bryan idea—is to throw this immense investment away—present it first to the noisy, selfish, and ungrateful Filipino politicians, and later to Japan, an unfriendly nation and a strong military and commercial rival in the Pacific. The latter would fully develop the islands, and the wealth they would bring, with Japan's other aggrandizements in the Orient, would easily enable that ambitious nation to drive our commerce out of the Orient—the region of the world's greatest future commercial and industrial development—the great awakening of 500,000,000 people to modern or western ways, methods, and civilization.

The American people having decreed in 1900 that they would retain the Philippines as a part of the United States, several thousands of our citizens who obeyed the country's call in going to Dewey's aid and later in putting down the rebellion led by Aguinaldo, decided to remain in the islands, make it their home, and engage in business, which they had a perfect right to do. Last year there were 207 Americans in the wholesale business in the islands, 371 in the retail trade, and the amount of their annual joint sales was $17,777,330. These Americans had invested last year $3,695,377 in manufacturing lines. If we add the additional amount in new railroads, street-car lines, public utilities, sawmills, sugar plantations, mining, and other operations, the sum total will run high up into the millions.

A majority of these men have been from 10 to 15 years in creating, building up, and extending their business enterprises. In many cases all they possess is invested in their business and in their new homes, and along with it many of the best years of their lives. Would it be just, would it be honorable in the American people to abandon seven or eight thousand fellow Americans in the Philippines, cause them to lose their all, haul down their flag—the one they fought to raise over the islands—withdraw the Army, and turn them over to be absolutely governed by the very men they defeated in the trenches around Manila and at the end of that long, cruel guerilla war inaugurated and prosecuted by a so-called Philippine Republic which gave abundant evidence in its maladministration and conclusively proved, by its official records left behind, that it was unworthy of the name it bore and utterly incapable of wisely governing either white or brown men?

I can not believe the American people will, when the issue is brought home to them, commit such an unjust, unpatriotic, such a contemptible, cowardly act as to betray, desert, and abandon the splendid American men and women who have made good in the Philippines, have upheld high American ideals and principles in this far-away land in the Orient.

Three years ago the apostle of free silver, Mr. Bryan, materially aided in writing the platform upon which President Wilson was elected, receiving 1,300,000 less votes than the combined Taft and Roosevelt vote. The Democratic platform carried a plank favoring "an immediate declaration by Congress of our intention to give the Philippines independence"—or, in other words, turn them adrift—but securing their neutralization. Since that declaration was made, we have witnessed the destruction of Belgium by Germany, one of the nations which signed the treaty guaranteeing the neutrality of Belgium. The United States, the Filipinos, and the rest of the world have at last learned that neutrality treaties are absolutely worthless—without force or effect, and devoid of protection.

Following close upon the violation of the Belgium neutrality treaty, the world has witnessed the action of Japan, taking advantage of China's defenseless condition, demanding and by threats securing, invaluable rights and privileges, which action was in violation of a joint treaty, signed by Japan, agreeing to aid in upholding the territorial integrity of her nearest neighbor, China, and its open-door commercial policy. If China's 450,000,000 people and Belgium's 8,000,000 brave, prosperous, and highly enlightened inhabitants were powerless to have neutrality treaties respected and enforced, what would become of the poor, weak, and defenseless Filipinos, with annual government receipts of less than $17,000,000, and a million—or one-eighth of its population—made up of wild and ignorant tribesmen, many of whom, prior to American occupation, were head hunters and even now practice peonage, or slavery?

Had Mr. Bryan defeated President McKinley on the "anti-imperial" issue in 1900, the United States would have abandoned the Philippine Islands 15 years ago. Had the Bryan advice been followed, the world would not have witnessed the marvelous changes wrought in the islands under the inspiration and guidance of the splendid patriotic men connected with the military and nonpartisan civil governments sent out by Presidents McKinley, Roosevelt, and Taft.

BRIEF RECORD OF 15 YEARS OF CONSTRUCTIVE WORK IN PHILIPPINES.

Now let's note what good fortune, great blessings, fell to the lot of the Filipinos in not being turned adrift 15 years ago as advocated by Mr. Bryan—by not severing their relations with the people of the United States—by remaining beneath the Stars and Stripes:

Free speech; free press; religious liberty; law and order; protection of life and property.

Increase of railroad mileage from 122 to 611 miles.

A much-needed, safe, sound, and satisfactory currency system, the equal of the best in the Orient.

The coming of numerous missionaries, with the establishment of new churches, schools, and free hospitals.

An expenditure for improved health conditions, sanitation, fighting deadly diseases, building modern hospitals of $9,630,000.

The expenditures of the United States Government of more than $15,000,000 for fortifying the islands and providing barracks, Army posts, etc.

Four thousand four hundred miles of well-built roads, better than can be found in a majority of the States, and 1,300 miles of cart roads and trails in the mountain districts or Provinces.

An expenditure of $21,376,000 in the interest of education, including modern school and university buildings. The number of children in attendance showed an increase of 360,000—tuition and textbooks free.

Sanitary improvements, sewerage, pure water supply, banishment of cholera, plague, and smallpox. Construction of new waterworks for Manila and 800 artesian wells for towns and rural districts, reduction of death rate, etc.

Dredging of harbors, building of breakwaters, construction of wharves, lighthouses, telegraph and telephone lines, and the establishment of coast steamship lines, hundreds of new post offices, and a modern postal system, under which postal receipts have grown in 15 years from $484,960 to $1,072,684 per annum, and, in the same time, money orders from $1,526,310 to $8,272,858 per year.

Consider the amount paid out for labor and local material, higher and better wages than ever known in the islands—$15,000,000 on fortifications, military defenses; $7,000,000 for harbor improvements; $6,100,000 constructing good roads; $750,000 for lighthouses; millions on new railroads, street-car lines, government, provincial, and municipal buildings, water and sewerage systems, schoolhouses, hotels, hospitals, telegraph and telephone lines, the opening and operation of lumber camps, sugar plantations, and gold mines, the building of manufacturing plants, modern business and private houses, and finally the creation of the beautiful summer capitol at Baguio, located in the mountains of Luzon and one of the wonders resulting from the coming of progressive Americans.

An examination of the record covering the island's exports and imports at the time when Mr. Bryan first declared in favor of surrendering or giving them up is interesting. Then the Philippines sold to the world produce, etc., to the value of $14,640,162. Last year (1914) they sold $48,689,634, an increase of $34,049,472. The record covering imports—the people's purchasing power abroad, for the same periods, shows $13,116,567, as against $48,588,653, or an increase of $35,472,086. In 1904 we sold in cotton goods to the islands, $278,106, and last year (1914) the sales were $5,826,333. For 1913 and 1914, the last 2 years the amount was $12,911,000, and if we annually average last year's sale, $5,826,333, for the next 10 years, which we will do and even better, if the islands are retained, our total sale of cotton goods for the 10-year period will reach $58,263,330, and our total sales to the islands covering the same period would be $253,881,926. The past 16 years we have sold in the islands goods to the value of $145,315,503. The Filipinos sold and bought abroad from all countries in 1899 a total of $27,756,729, while last year (1914) this total increased to $97,278,287, a difference of $69,521,558.

From the time of our taking over Porto Rico, the Hawaiian, and the Philippine Islands up to December 30, 1914, they have purchased from the American business men goods to the value of $760,773,785. In proportion to size and population, they are the best, the most valuable customers we have to-day. Is it to our interest to give them, or any one of them, up—surrender our trade and legislative control over them to some other authority or power? If the American business men, exporters, and manufacturers wish to retain this desirable trade, they should take the subject up at once with their Senators and Congressmen, for this question will be determined at the coming session of Congress in the consideration of final action upon the Jones bill.

HAVE FILIPINOS BEEN UNFAIRLY TREATED?

Now, as to the claim that the Philippines need independence and have been unfairly treated in the distribution of the offices. More than 71 per cent of the government positions were filled by natives when Gov. Harrison took charge, and since the wholesale removal of Americans under the present administration to make room for Filipinos the latter's percentage of officeholding has greatly increased. The entire membership—81—of the lower house of the assembly, or congress, is composed of natives, and at the present time the upper house is made up of five natives and four Americans.

In addition to the native officeholders mentioned as being in the government service and in the assembly, there should be added the village, town, city, and provincial elective and appointive officers and 10,000 members of the native scouts and constabulary.

When the Spanish were in control there were perhaps 10 or 12 Filipinos who served as justice of the peace, their highest rank in the judicial office-holding line. Now all the justices of the peace are Filipinos on yearly salaries running from $300 to $1,800, except those who serve as ex officio. Three of the seven members of the supreme court, half of the district judges, half of the judges at large, and half of the land-court judges are natives. The attorney general and seven assistants are Filipinos. The prosecuting attorney and the city attorney of Manila are to the manner born. It is hardly necessary to state that the two Resident Commissioners representing the islands in Washington are natives.

In the matter of salaries, a Filipino justice of the peace in Manila now draws a salary of $1,800 per annum, more than the Spanish paid the prosecuting attorneys and judges. There are native judges now being paid annual salaries of $4,500, $5,000, $5,500, and $10,000, which is in excess of those paid for like service throughout the United States. There are Filipinos serving on the commission who draw $15,500 annually; the speaker of the assembly is paid $8,000; while Messrs. QUEZON and EARNSHAW draw more money out of the United States Treasury than their colleagues in Congress, on account of the great amount of mileage (about $3,991.60), which, added to their individual salary of $7,500 each, makes a total of $11,491.60, and as travel on a Government transport is only a dollar a day, this would leave a net balance of $11,281.

But why prolong the story of how the poor downtrodden people of the Philippine Islands have suffered, have been ground down, had oppression inflicted upon them, their wives, and children since the invasion, occupation, and control by the cruel American tyrants! What the Filipinos have gained in improvements of every kind and character—rapid and substantial advancement along the pathway of good government, moral, intellectual, and industrial development during the past 15 years, in spite of Mr. Bryan's advice—if fully enumerated would fill two good-sized volumes, and this has been faithfully and accurately done by the Hon. Dean C. Worcester, who, with President Taft, Gov. Forbes, associates and coworkers, should live forever in the grateful memory of every man, woman, and child in the islands. If their great works and noble deeds are not remembered, then the Filipinos are utterly hopeless.

SHOULD UNITED STATES RETAIN ISLANDS?

Now, let's consider the question whether it is to the interests of the United States to retain the islands—whether we should keep them or withdraw the Army and Navy, wipe off our losses, and let the Filipinos sink or swim. The great majority of the men in and out of Congress who favor surrendering the Philippines do so for two reasons, namely: On the alleged ground that "they will always be a great expense, an unprofitable investment, to the United States," and, secondly, "they are now and will for all time be a menace to us." The answer to the first excuse is: The islands are paying their own way, so far as meeting the expenses of running the municipal local and general governments is concerned. The only expense now borne by the American Government is incident to the presence of our soldiers in the islands. This expense can be greatly lessened, if not practically wiped out, in time by reducing the number of American soldiers and increasing and substituting additional constabulary or the native scouts, paying for their services out of the Philippine treasury, as is being done at this time with the constabulary force of 5,000 men.

To abandon the islands for the reason that they are or may become a menace virtually means that Uncle Sam, who never fought an unsuccessful war, is for the first time going to show the white feather, admit possessing a yellow streak, make a confession to all mankind—to all the world—that our noble ancestors signally failed to transmit to the men of this generation any of their indomitable courage, undimmed loyalty, unceasing bravery, unswerving determination to hold and forever defend our rightful possessions, purchased not only with millions of the people's money under a treaty ratification Bryan favored, but, above all, with the priceless lives of our heroes, many of whom sleep in the very soil they now tell us we must give up for lack of courage, for fear we have a "menace on our hands." God forbid!

With or without these islands there will be a menace to the United States until Congress performs its patriotic duty in providing an Army and Navy so big and strong no nation in the Orient or elsewhere will ever dare menace or attempt to do our country an injury or capture any of our possessions. By making it possible for Japan to succeed us in the Philippines, take over the great and expensive fortifications costing us upward of $15,000,000 and fully developing the rich possibilities of the Islands with countless thousands of Japanese laborers, will Japan as a nation be strengthened or weakened as our military, naval, and commercial rival in the Pacific? Will not the absorption of the Philippines, along with Korea and Formosa and the ever-increasing concessions Japan is securing in China by threats and force, result in her immense commercial growth and power until she will soon be financially able to increase her army and navy to an extent where she will, indeed and in fact, be more than a menace to the United States in the Pacific? To-day her navy is practically the equal of ours and her standing army of seasoned and highly trained men exceeds ours by 175,000, and has lately been ordered increased. Every man in the nation has received military training.

Evidently anticipating our withdrawal from the Philippines, certain Japanese are now negotiating for the purchase of extensive sugar lands in the islands and are quoted in the Manila press as stating that they plan to bring over 100,000 or 200,000 Japs to use in the sugar industry, every man of whom will be a trained soldier.

OUR TRADE WITH THE ISLANDS.

Last year American merchants and manufacturers sold goods to the value of $27,204,587 to the islands, as against $127,804 in 1898, or an increase of $27,076,783 since we took them over. Our sales in the Philippines for 1914 exceeded our exports to China for the same period and are equal to half of the amount we disposed of in Japan and were greater by $2,000,000 than the amount we shipped to all of the following countries in South America during 1914: Venezuela, Peru, Colombia, Uruguay, Bolivia, and Paraguay. Our trade in Chile and Peru combined fell a million and a half dollars behind the Philippines' orders last year. Comparing our trade in the islands with some of our exports to European markets, we have the following: Our Philippine trade last year (1914) exceeded by $3,000,000 all we sold to Greece, Portugal, Switzerland, and Turkey in Europe, and fell short only $3,000,000 in equaling our exports to Russia. Of our exports to the islands, we sold in cotton goods in 1904, $2,827,106, and in 1913 the amount was $6,827,082, more than a million dollars in excess of our sale of cotton goods in China, where at one time—before the Japanese controlled southern Manchuria and drove our trade out—we sold in one year cotton goods to the value of $29,814,000.

We have the advantage of our competitors now in the Philippines, because Congress has enacted trade and tariff laws favorable to our exporters and manufacturers; but withdraw, give up the islands, let others make the laws or make it possible for Japan to succeed us, and it will not be long before our business in the islands will vanish as it did in Manchuria.

Our competitors sold goods to the value of $24,568,258 in the islands last year. I have examined the list covering these importations, and practically every article is manufactured in the United States, and with proper tariff legislation this additional business would come to us and double our trade in the islands—increase it from $24,020,395 to $48,588,653 at the present time.

If we are to care for the islands, furnish an army and navy for their protection, and be responsible for them, our business men should have the market, and not foreign competitors whose countries do not share with us the expenditures, labors, and responsibilities in connection with their administration.

Here is a partial list of articles and their values sold in the Philippines last year by our competitors, which American business men ought to have furnished and can in the future, if Congress will do its duty to our exporters, manufacturers, and employees: Cotton goods, value $4,129,911; coal, $1,629,490; condensed milk, $740,996; silks and manufactures of, $724,704; undershirts and drawers, $703,425; cement, $547,763; passenger and freight cars, $217,631; locomotives and parts of, $209,960; collars and shirts, $162,638; iron bars, rods of steel, etc., $154,027; steel rails, $146,831; enameled utensils, $100,262; handkerchiefs, $91,039; plushes and velvets, $61,024; cheese, $56,870; umbrellas and parasols, $55,160; trunks and traveling bags, $51,097; toys, $44,190; electrical machinery, $39,301.

There is no richer, more fertile, undeveloped country in the world than the Philippine Islands, and with the development of its agricultural and mineral wealth as will follow our continued occupation, in a short time our trade would increase from $27,000,000 to $200,000,000 or $300,000,000 per annum, and this would be far more than our present exports to all South America and the Orient combined. We annually purchase of South American and other countries more than $700,000,000 tropical fruits, goods, produce, etc., which can be produced in the islands and sold to us in exchange for American goods, and thus escape the present heavy balance of trade, $396,000,000, now against us in dealing with these countries, which place the great bulk of their purchasing orders with our European competitors. The live, awake Americans have developed the agricultural wealth of the little Hawaiian Islands, about the size of the State of Connecticut, and as a result last year the 225,000 people of these islands purchased in the United States goods to the value of $25,773,412. These prosperous people—225,000—own more automobiles than the 500,000,000 people in China and Japan. What has been accomplished in the Hawaiian Islands in agricultural development, wealth, and trade can be repeated in the Philippines on a much larger scale, for the islands are as large as all New England and New York State combined, with a population of 8,000,000.

Mr. Bryan urged us to give up our insular possessions, and yet the record proves that we found a desirable market for the surplus of our factories and mills last year in Porto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippines to the extent of $85,646,367. At this rate at the end of 10 years our exports to these islands will exceed $856,463,670. With our great industrial growth we are turning out more goods than our home market can consume. If we are to keep the mills going and our working people fully employed, prosperous, contented, and happy, we must have a market for the full output of our mines, mills, and factories. We must look ahead. We can not turn back. We must hold our own and go forward. Congress will be faithless to the present and future interest of America if it surrenders control of the Philippines—will do a cruel and serious injury to the honest and deserving Americans now residing in the islands; will undo one of the greatest works of the twentieth century, the matchless achievements of American progress and civilization in the Philippines, and bring upon the natives of the islands unending troubles and misfortunes—a greater calamity could not befall them. And, finally, by such action Congress will virtually proclaim, in ordering the removal of our loved flag, that the brave men who willingly gave up their lives to see it triumphantly float over the walls of Manila—over conquered Spaniard and captured Filipino revolutionist—have died in vain and our country has ceased to remember and appreciate their great sacrifice to maintain her honor and glory and make her a great world power.

From such enduring shame, humiliation, ingratitude, and disgrace may we as a people and an enlightened Nation be spared.

If the administration in power succeeds in its attempt to haul down the American flag in the Philippines, an outraged people will inflict the same punishment upon President Wilson and his party which was administered to President Cleveland for attempting to lower the flag and abandon the Hawaiian Islands in 1893. History will repeat itself.

FINAL WORD TO FILIPINOS.

Now, having had my say to the American people, I will close this lengthy communication by submitting a prediction to honest, sincere, and thoughtful Filipinos devoted to the best interests of their country and having its welfare close at heart. If you quietly and tamely permit the demagogues, excitable editors, and unworthy politicians to drag your country from beneath the protecting folds of the American flag, you will at no distant day find yourselves compelled to acknowledge allegiance to another, offering less protection, fewer liberties, and exacting tribute for whatever may be given you. You will then live your remaining days in sackcloth and ashes, mourning over the supreme folly committed by those who, betraying your best interests, inflicted lasting misery upon your beloved land by severing her relations from the best Government on the face of the earth, which brought to you countless blessings you failed to understand or appreciate.

RICHARD W. AUSTIN.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, as there seems to be no disposition to discuss the Philippine bill further to-day I ask that it may be temporarily laid aside, without prejudice to its position as the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks that the bill under consideration may be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. CHILTON. I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill 2409, for the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River. Unless it is passed at this time a public work will be delayed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2409, the title of which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2409) to authorize the Ohio-West Virginia Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Ohio River at the city of Steubenville, Jefferson County, Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 8, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, January 7, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, our heavenly Father, we pray for a public sentiment which shall place a higher value on intellectual, moral, and spiritual attainments than upon material gains. These are valuable, but we realize that if our Republic lives it must grow; for whenever a thing ceases to grow, it begins to die; its life therefore depends on character, individual and collective. Material values fluctuate, but character built upon intellectual, moral, and spiritual life lives and grows. Inspire us as a people to seek these higher values which reflect Thy glory in the individual and in the Nation. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE TREATMENT OF TUBERCULOSIS.

Mr. KENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD concerning a bill which I introduced yesterday, looking toward the standardization of the treatment of tuberculosis, and toward the elimination of the great evil of the assisted migration of indigent tubercular patients.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. KENT] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on a bill that he has introduced, providing for the standardization of the treatment of tuberculosis, and to devise some means of prohibiting or lessening the assisted immigration of tubercular sufferers into this country. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COPYRIGHTS.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to change the reference of the bill H. R. 588 from the Committee on Printing to the Committee on Patents. It is a proposed amendment to the copyright law. Owing to a defective title on the bill, I think the Speaker very properly referred it to the Printing Committee in the absence of any explanation. I ask for the change of reference.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein some resolutions adopted by our State legislature.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by introducing a set of resolutions passed by the Legislature of Georgia. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. BAILEY, on account of illness.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House the time has arrived when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] is entitled to address the House for one hour. [Applause.]

THE EMBARGO ON MUNITIONS OF WAR.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, on August 12, 1915, Secretary Lansing communicated to the Austrian Government his reasons for upholding the legality, morality, and wisdom of permitting American citizens to export munitions of war to the European belligerents. No statement of the case could be more convincing or more complete. I advise everyone to read Secretary Lansing's letter. It is not long, and copies can readily be had. So admirable is the Secretary's argument that only after very real hesitation have I decided to say something in amplification of his conciseness.

OUR DECLARATION TO AUSTRIA.

If public opinion were in its ordinary rational state, this House would sooner vote to forbid the sale of strait-jackets to confine madmen than vote to forbid the sale of war munitions to the allies. When, however, a nation is in such a frame of mind that it makes Harry Thaw a national hero and fills the front pages of its newspapers with the sailings of a bedlam boat, when, moreover, the times are such that we see strong-minded women and weak-minded men vieing with each other in greeting burglars with bouquets and decorating murderers with mistletoe, then we need not be surprised to find that there are serious adherents to the doctrine that the best way to end the European war is to follow Bulgaria's example and stab the allies in the back. Let me read you a few lines from Secretary Lansing's letter, of which I have just spoken:

The principles of international law, the practice of nations, the national safety of the United States and other nations without great military and naval establishments, the prevention of increased armies and navies, the adoption of peaceful methods for the adjustment of international differences, and, finally, neutrality itself are opposed to the prohibition by a neutral nation of the exportation of arms, ammunition, or other munitions of war to belligerent powers during the progress of the war.

THE HOLY ALLIANCE.

That is a good, stout statement taken from this Government's reply to Austria on August 12, five months ago. Has anything happened to change the situation in 150 days? Yes, indeed. Congress has assembled and three groups of men are demanding the enactment of a law to stop the export of war material—a law prescribing an embargo, as it is called. The German-American demands the embargo out of love for the fatherland, the cotton king joins in the chorus out of love for Mammon, and the pacifist adds his hallelujah out of love for God. Upon my word, I think the German-American is the best man of them all. His motives may be hyphenitic, but they are not neurotic. His performances may skirt on treason, but they are not shabby. Frankly he demands that we shall balance by legislation an inequality achieved by Great Britain's triumph over Germany at sea. His reasoning is simple, and from his point of view it is sound. "Ammunition," says he, "helps the allies; so, by hook or by crook, by laws or by strikes, by gold or by dynamite, by torpedo or by mine, let us do what we can to keep ammunition from reaching our enemies."

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the gentleman's warrant for the charge that he has just made against the German-Americans, that by dynamite or gold they are in favor of preventing the shipment of munitions of war to the allies?

Mr. GARDNER. In all the newspapers of the greatest metropolis in this country you find the substantiation of that statement.

Mr. STAFFORD. I beg the gentleman's pardon. You can not find any substantiation anywhere for the statement that German-American naturalized citizens have engaged in any such actions as those you charge.

Mr. GARDNER. But our pacifist friend. See where his doctrine is carrying him. His hatred of militarism would halt the very arms which are striving to destroy militarism. If he had his way he would paralyze the only force in the universe which stands between him and the tender mercies of armed autocracy.

"Peace," cries the pacifist. "Peace at any price; peace at the German price! Arbitration! Compromise! Anything for peace!"

"Let us arbitrate," said King John of England at Runnymede. "Not so," said the barons, "we will fight it out." So King John was forced to yield, the Magna Charta was signed, and the liberties of Englishmen were gained. "Let us have peace; we will grant you all you ask except independence," said the British Parliament on March 2, 1778. "Not so," said the American patriots, "we will fight it out." So we fought it out, and Great Britain was forced to yield and the liberties of Americans were gained. "This Civil War is a failure," said a great American political party in 1864, "let us compromise our dispute with the Confederacy without settling the question of slavery." "Not so," said the Union, "we will fight it out." So we fought it out, and who is there to-day, North or South, East or West, who says that we did wrong?

MR. BRYAN AND KING COTTON.

Last June Mr. Bryan told us that it was unpatriotic for Americans, be they millionaire travelers or be they penniless hostlers or stokers, to claim their right of travel on belligerent ships. Such a course, in his opinion, endangered our international relations and should therefore be abandoned. Has anyone heard Mr. Bryan repeat that doctrine for the benefit of the great cotton planters? Has anyone heard Mr. Bryan tell the distinguished advocates of an embargo that their threat to enact legislation which our Government itself has recently declared to be unneutral is certain to endanger our relations with Great Britain, and France, and Russia, and Italy, and Japan? Has anyone heard Mr. Bryan chide King Cotton or his courtiers for their lack of patriotism? Has anyone seen our recent Secretary of State stretch out a single finger to check this scheme for garroting sore-beset Democracy? Perhaps Mr. Bryan's heart throbs for poor King Cotton. Mine, I confess, remains calm. There is at least a silver lining to my cloud. In case these cotton gentlemen are obliged to dispose of their product without securing the extravagant prices which a devious traffic with Germany would assuredly bring them, we can comfort ourselves with the reflection that the useful cotton handkerchief can still be purchased at the moderate figure of three for a quarter.

Perchance the American mother, the subject of so much oratory, may even rejoice that the allies permit none of our cotton to be filtered into Germany or Austria. Perchance she feels safer so long as there is no danger lest her darling boy on some future Lusitania or Ancona may be blown up by a torpedo manufactured with cotton grown on his native soil.

THE PLEA OF THE CENTRAL POWERS.

Article 7 of The Hague Convention, No. V, of 1907, reads like this:

A neutral power is not called upon to prevent the export or transport, on behalf of one or other of the belligerents, of arms, munitions of war, or, in general, of anything which can be of use to an army or fleet.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. Does this provision emanate from a desire of the neutral country to sell munitions or from a belligerent country to buy, or both?

Mr. GARDNER. I do not know. It is currently said that it was agreed to by Germany on account of that country's desire to sell munitions. It is impossible to go into the motives of the various countries who ratified that provision.

Mr. FESS. Was it not our position to keep open the markets in order that the belligerents might buy in case we were not in the war?

Mr. GARDNER. I think that our position was shown in Secretary Lansing's August letter to the Austrian Government. Let me read the passage in that letter to which I refer. It shows the danger we shall run if international law shall ever in the future forbid the ammunition traffic between neutrals and belligerents. Listen to this:

But, in addition to the question of principle, there is a practical and substantial reason why the Government of the United States has from the foundation of the Republic to the present time advocated and practiced unrestricted trade in arms and military supplies. It has never been the policy of this country to maintain in time of peace a large military establishment or stores of arms and ammunition sufficient to repel invasion by a well-equipped and powerful enemy. It has desired to remain at peace with all nations and to avoid any appearance of menacing such peace by the threat of its Armies and Navies. In consequence of this standing policy the United States would, in the event of attack by a foreign power, be at the outset of the war seriously, if not fatally embarrassed by the lack of arms and ammunition and by the means to produce them in sufficient quantities to supply the requirements of national defense. The United States has always depended upon the right and power to purchase arms and ammunition from neutral nations in case of foreign attack. This right, which it claims for itself, it can not deny to others.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. It is urged on many hands that the United States ought now to prepare itself thoroughly for defense against any country that may attack us. It is not stated that any particular country has such a design, but it seems to be feared that some country may do that. Does not the gentleman think it would be a step toward this preparedness to lay an embargo on the shipment of arms and ammunition to other countries so that we would not have to fight against our own guns?

Mr. GARDNER. That is the argument of the pro-German. A few minutes ago I read you article 7 of The Hague Convention, No. V, of 1907.

The United States, Germany, and Austria each ratified that agreement on November 27, 1909. If it means what it says, that sentence concludes the whole argument so far as the strict legality of munition exports is concerned. So much is admitted by Austria and not denied by Germany. But neither Germany nor Austria admits that this agreement was intended to cover munition exports of such dimensions as we are beginning to ship.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman if he knows whether or not the gun that was fired across the bow of the Hocking when it was taken to Halifax was fired by a gun that the English purchased in the United States?

Mr. GARDNER. I have not the slightest idea. To continue my statement of Austria's and Germany's position. Austria's protest was formal. Germany's protest, made in an open letter written by Count von Bernstorff, was informal. Considering the Austrian and the German protest together, here is what I believe to be a fair statement of the case of the central powers: They hold that, notwithstanding any right to sell ammunition to belligerents which American citizens may enjoy, clearly the American Government has the authority to prevent the exercise of that right if it so desires. In the opinion of both Germany and Austria, article 7 of The Hague Convention V (1907) was not meant to cover vast increases in production or to protect new industries such as the new American war-material industry. On the contrary, that article, they say, was designed solely for the protection of industries already existing in times of peace. Furthermore, from the central powers' point of view, the amount of American war material exported is growing so large as to be of substantial weight in the international scale, and thus the neutrality of the United States is in fact impaired. In view of the circumstance that only the allies are in a position to insure delivery, the view taken by the American Government that its citizens are as willing to sell arms to one belligerent as to another is dismissed as theoretical.

Both Germany and Austria point out the possibility of bringing the allies to terms by the menace of an embargo. Austria suggests "the possibility of the prohibition of the exportation of foodstuffs and raw materials in case legitimate commerce in these articles between the Union and the two central powers should not be allowed." Count von Bernstorff suggests either that our one-sided war-material export should be stopped or else that it should be used as a "means to uphold the legitimate trade with Germany, especially the trade in foodstuffs."

In answer to our contention that Germany herself has been notorious as a seller of munitions of war to belligerents, the ambassador makes the not very clear contention that these sales were conducted in competition with other nations, whereas at the present time the United States alone among neutrals is in position to furnish war material in vast quantities.

THE ANSWER.

It is not to be wondered at that the Bernstorff letter was informal, for it is in direct conflict with Germany's official note of December 15, 1914, in which the Imperial German Government stated that "under the general principles of international law no exception can be taken to neutral States letting war material go to Germany's enemies from or through neutral territory."

If Germany had desired to confine the scope of article 7 of The Hague Convention V, cited above, so as merely to cover the munition industries of neutral countries as they might exist at the outbreak of war, she had but to say so at the time. She did not say so. She made no intimation to that effect. On the contrary, after two years' consideration, she signed a perfectly unqualified explicit declaration approving munition exports.

I confess that I am a good deal puzzled to understand just why the export of war material in large quantities should be held to be an unneutral act, while the export of war materials in small quantities is held to be a neutral act. Surely in each case the motive of the exporter is the same, to wit, the wish to secure a profit. Surely if the exporter has the right to seek a small profit from a small number of transactions, he has an equal right to seek a large profit from a large number of transactions of the same nature. Equally obviously in each case the motive of the purchaser is a desire to influence the result of the war in favor of his own side. The fact that the exporter in one case more than in the other contributes to his customer's success has nothing to do with the question.

In his letter Count von Bernstorff quoted the following remark, said to have been made by President Wilson in connection with the Mexican situation: "We should stand for genuine neutrality, considering the surrounding facts of the case." Relying on this expression of opinion, the count comes to the conclusion that the circumstance that the British Navy prevents Germany from securing the delivery of ammunition purchases made in our market is a "surrounding fact" which ought to be reckoned with. In other words, because Great Britain can deliver the goods which Great Britain purchases, while Germany can not deliver the goods which Germany purchases, therefore it is our duty to offset Great Britain's naval superiority by seeing to it that there shall be no goods sold here for anyone to deliver. If that doctrine is to prevail, why confine it to war material? Germany can not deliver wheat or clothing or metals or hospital supplies. If strict neutrality means strict elimination of all inequalities, we must stop the export of everything which any belligerent desires.

The German ambassador evidently looks on neutrality as a sort of sporting proposition. Apparently we are expected to act in the capacity of referee and insure fair play. Very well. How far are we expected to go in adopting this doctrine of "surrounding facts"? If we are to eliminate the inequality caused by the British fleet, ought we not to offset the inequality caused by Krupp's German city of ammunition factories? Are we to disregard the fact that for years one of the belligerent teams whose game we are umpiring has been quietly piling up war material on the side lines? Are we to turn ourselves into a court to decide whether all contestants got a fair start? What allowance must we make for the fact that Germany in the first few days, by breaking the rules, acquired control over all of Belgium's and most of France's coal and iron resources? After all, if Germany's idea of strict neutrality is to prevail, we must stop feeding the Belgians for they are making ammunition for their conquerors.

PACIFISTS OF OTHER DAYS.

Widely different as is the path of the pacifist, he, too, has come to the conclusion that the export of ammunition ought to be stopped. He presents the view that abundant ammunition postpones the termination of the war. It is quite true that if one combatant is plentifully supplied with ammunition while the other combatant is entirely destitute of ammunition the war is sure to end quickly. So, in the name of humanity, the pacifists propose to secure for Germany the undisturbed possession of the helpless nation which she has so wantonly invaded. So far as we can do so, the hands of the allies are to be tied, and we are to help the pillager retain his booty. We are to stop the war with the plunder secure in Germany's grasp. For the sake of peace the Nation born at Lexington and preserved at Gettysburg is to encourage pillage, savagery, and infidelity by showing the world that a nation may violate every law of God and man and yet be a gainer thereby. In order to stop the war we Americans, so far as we have the power, are to shear France of her defense against the ferocity which has turned fair Belgium into a charnel house.

THE PRIVATE SOLDIER'S SENTIMENTS.

Ever and anon a feeble cry goes up that the private soldiers want to end the war. Yes; each soldier wants the war to end, always provided that his own side is victorious. If it is true that the rank and file are fighting against their will, how is it that at least four or five million British, according to the press, have voluntarily joined the colors? Read the history of our Civil War. The same misjudgment of the private soldier was prevalent then as now. In 1864 McClellan ran for President on a platform calling on the Nation to sue for peace. Lincoln ran on a platform calling for a vigorous prosecution of the war. Yet the soldiers in the field voted overwhelmingly for Lincoln. Listen to these extracts from a letter written to the President by Horace Greeley, editor of the most important organ of public opinion in the North. Mind you, this letter was written August 29, 1864, just 90 days before Lincoln's triumphant reelection:

> I know that nine-tenths of the whole American people, North and South, are anxious for peace—peace on almost any terms—and utterly sick of human slaughter and devastation. * * * I beg you, implore you, to inaugurate or invite proposals for peace forthwith. And in case peace can not now be made, consent to an armistice for one year, each party to retain, unmolested, all it now holds, but the rebel ports to be opened. Meantime let a national convention be held, and there will surely be no more war at all events.

So wrote Greeley. Do the words sound familiar? Fortunately the pacifists failed to carry the day. By way of contrast to the Greeley letter, listen to this message dispatched on November 8, 1864, by Gen. Francis P. Blair, who was at that time serving with Sherman's army in the field: "The vote in this army to-day is almost unanimous for Lincoln."

Yet, of course, it is true that Germany would rejoice if peace were declared to-morrow. I remember very well in my college days that on a certain occasion my class nine, on which I played, found itself slightly in the lead at the end of six innings. Unhappily for our prospects of ultimate triumph, our opponents were coming strong and our pitcher had developed a glass arm. As might be expected, we wanted the match to stop while victory still perched on our banner, and we nearly mobbed the umpire when he refused to call the game on account of darkness. Our position was precisely that of Germany at the present time.

MURDER V. TRESPASS.

There is a certain class of mind which can see no distinction between an offense against civilization and an offense against private property. Germany has violated international law and so has England, we are told. Therefore both nations ought to be treated in the same way. Murder and trespass are to be measured by the same yardstick. Taking a child's life and elbowing a trader out of a fat market are to be reckoned as equivalent misdemeanors. Turn back and note the newspaper headlines for the last few months. You will find that hitherto we have punished Great Britain more severely than we have punished Germany. If the Washington correspondents are good judges, our notes to Germany were friendly and our note to Great Britain was sharp. But Germany has made amends, we are told. What amends, pray? Count von Bernstorff sent an offhand note to Secretary Lansing disavowing the Arabic attack. In this note and another he tells us that "liners" are to be warned before they are torpedoed. No indication is vouchsafed that any merchant ships except "liners" will receive warning.

What the term "liner" means has not been defined as yet. Mr. Speaker, the life of the humblest American who ships as a stoker on a freighter and the life of the American farmer's boy who tends a dozen mules on a tramp steamer are just as dear to them as the life of Alfred Vanderbilt on the "liner" Lusitania was dear to him. Does the Bernstorff note cover the American stoker on the ammunition ship or does it not? Does the Bernstorff note cover the American hostler on the cattle transport or does it not? Time will show. We promised the same full protection to the American stoker on the ammunition ship which we promised to the American traveler on the "liner." We told the Kaiser in impressive tones that we should exact "strict accountability" for the death of the stoker and the death of the traveler alike. Have we done so? Will we do so? There is still a long, long way to travel between Count Bernstorff's personal Arabic note to Secretary Lansing and our promise to hold Germany to "strict accountability" for the Lusitania. The William P. Frye, the Falaba, the Gulflight, the Orduna, the the Nebraskan, the Hesperian, the Cushing, the Armenian, the Arabic, the Ancona, the Persia—I am not sure that we ought to be especially proud when we note how eagerly official Washington seems to accept and even to suggest each unconvincing excuse for the destruction of these ships. Have we forgotten how sternly we rejected Spain's indignant denials of complicity in the blowing up of the Maine? Are we unconscious of the danger that a censorious world may take note of the fact that Spain was weak while Germany is mighty and menacing?

I can not claim to have a single-track mind, but upon my soul, if I were President, I think I should prefer to settle some of those questions with Germany before I proceeded to impose an embargo for her especial benefit.

THE HESSIANS.

Secretary Lansing has published a statement showing Germany's record in the matter of sales of ammunition to belligerents. It is a singularly extended record. She even sold ammunition to Great Britain when the Boers were blockaded—just what she complains of now when the same medicine is prescribed for her. But when we were fighting for our independence it was not ammunition which the Germans sold to Great Britain; it was men. Germany's sale and Great Britain's purchase of Hessians and Brunswickers for the purpose of suppressing our Revolution was as discreditable a piece of business as modern history relates. I never forgave England her share in that besmirched transaction till at the outbreak of the Spanish War in 1898 she, and she alone, took our part and faced the concert of the European powers. Of course it is all the fashion to reprobate Great Britain now that she is fighting for her life; but if you think we were not glad to have her with us in Manila Bay, why, ask Admiral George Dewey. However, the Spanish War is a thing of the past, and the cotton king deals strictly with the present and the future. He must have a still higher price for his cotton, even if the cause of Democracy is to be sacrificed. Not content with his present splendid profits, he insists on even more. I will do him the justice to say that he does not play the hypocrite about the immorality of the ammunition trade. Give him his German market, and for all he cares you may trade in ammunition forever. He does not even pretend that the embargo for which he shouts is anything else than a weapon for the enforcement of compliance with his demands.

THE FREEDOM OF THE SEAS.

I have listened in vain for a clear exposition of the meaning of the German demand for "the freedom of the seas." To whom in time of peace have the seas been otherwise than free for a hundred years past? It is quite true that Great Britain has been the greatest sea power throughout that time, but only the pirates could justly charge her with using that sea power to destroy "the freedom of the seas." After all, some nation must be the strongest at sea. I wonder whether Germany would prove a more considerate ruler of the wave.

But these are war times, and to-day the seas are by no means free. Great Britain claims the right to prevent supplies from reaching Germany. We can hardly blame her for that. That is what a navy is for. Just as an army besieges a city, so a navy beleaguers a country. The purpose in both cases is to force a surrender as a result of hunger and privation. Nothing so surely as hunger arouses the civil population and the army alike to demand relief. So the Germans found, when in 1871 Paris surrendered to avoid starvation. So the North found in 1863, when Pemberton with gaunt famine staring him in the face, surrendered Vicksburg to Grant. "Hunger will compel a man to do almost anything," so ran a significant sentence in the round robin which the Confederate soldiers in the Vicksburg trenches sent their commander five days before the surrender.

Mr. GORDON. Is it the contention of the gentleman that England has had an effective blockade of Germany since the war began?

Mr. GARDNER. If one of the gentleman's constituents will try to get something into Germany he will see what happens to it.

Mr. GORDON. Well——

Mr. GARDNER. No; I can not yield any further. The gentleman does not want to make a serious argument.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield now? I would like to know whether the gentleman from Massachusetts has exonerated Great Britain for maintaining a blockade of neutral coasts or for her seizing conditional contraband that is consigned to neutral coasts? Is the gentleman exonerating her for that?

Mr. GARDNER. Just at present I do not want to quarrel with a nation which is fighting democracy's battle against Prussian autocracy.

THE PUZZLE OF NEUTRAL TRADE.

But though Great Britain, under the customs of warfare, is entitled to strangle Germany, yet in the process she is not clothed with the privilege of interfering in the legitimate trade of neutrals among each other. The puzzle of neutral trade is how to separate the genuine from the spurious. If in her eagerness to tighten her hold on Germany's windpipe Great Britain has encroached on our rights she certainly should make us ample reparation. I am quite clear, however, that an embargo on our own exports can not be regarded as a wise measure of retaliation, if retaliation is to be our policy.

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. OGLESBY. I would just like to ask if the reparation would consist in the removing of the encroachment?

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman please repeat that question? I did not quite understand it.

Mr. OGLESBY. The gentleman suggests that if England had encroached she should be required to make reparation. I want to know whether the reparation would be to remove the encroachment.

Mr. GARDNER. Not at the present time. Is that a clear answer?

Mr. OGLESBY. It is clear.

Mr. GARDNER. It is entirely certain that the evanescent evils arising from a temporarily restricted market for beef and copper and cotton are not to be compared with the fundamental evils incident to the passage of this legislation. Should the worst come to the worst, we may console ourselves with this thought: If our beef barons and our cotton kings and our metal syndicates find that they can not get the exalted price for their goods which they seek to garner out of a devious trade with Germany, at all events we have the satisfaction of knowing that they will be forced to sell their product in the home market at more reasonable figures.

WHOSE OX IS GORED?

To return to the line of thought suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

I am not a lawyer, much less an international lawyer. In the matter of international law I am ready to follow our State Department pretty closely. I should feel better satisfied, I confess, if international law were not quite so nebulous. Last January Secretary Bryan wrote a letter to Senator STONE on the subject of neutrality. As a layman I could not help being struck by this passage: "When neutral, this Government has stood for a restricted list of absolute and conditional contraband. As a belligerent, we have contended for a liberal list, according to our conception of the necessities of the case." Apparently in the past even Uncle Sam's view of international law depended a good deal on the question as to the ownership of the gored ox.

REMEMBER OUR IDEALS.

If Great Britian violates our rights, our standing as a nation may ultimately require us to go to extremes. But if we must fight, let us fight like men, not like money changers. Let us not become the ally of the crew which seeks to destroy in a twinkling of an eye the results of three centuries' battles for popular government. I do not believe that this Nation has receded so far from the ideals of the fathers that we are ready to cripple democracy in the supreme moment of its agonizing struggle.

To end the war to-day is to perpetuate the empire of military autocracy, because at the present time the autocratic powers are still in the ascendant. Who ever heard of the overthrow of a triumphant scepter or of a victorious dynasty?

Another year of warfare would be bad enough; but the subversion of democracy in Europe would be worse. An inconclusive peace would mean another war. Peace in Europe to-day would be nothing but an armed truce, a mere breathing space. The issue between military autocracy and democracy must be fought out or the world will have no lasting harmony. If by any act of ours Germany's success shall be fostered, God help democracy, and God help our generation's place in the world's annals. Let us see to it that history shall not record the maiming of democracy by the very son of whom she has been the proudest.

Mr. FESS, Mr. FERRIS, and Mr. STAFFORD rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] rise?

Mr. FESS. To submit a request for unanimous consent. I ask unanimous consent that on the 11th of this month, next Tuesday, after the business from the Speaker's table is disposed of, I be permitted to speak one hour upon our rights upon the sea, at which time I would like to pay some attention to the aggressions of Great Britain on the sea.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] asks unanimous consent that on January 11, next Tuesday, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, he be allowed to address the House for one hour on the subject of the aggression of Great Britain.

Mr. FESS. I should like to have that stated "Our rights upon the sea," because I do not agree at all with what Germany is doing. I condemn it, but I do not agree with what Great Britain is doing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Alabama rise?

Mr. HEFLIN. I desire to ask unanimous consent that, following the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], I have one hour in which to discuss the cotton situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS]?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I do it because we are getting along with the session now, and it seems to me there ought to be some reservation for the business of the House, so that we could get along without setting apart hours days ahead for speeches. I have no objection to the speaking at that time. What I thought was that it might interfere with the regular business of the House. I do not know what may come up. If the gentleman from Ohio will accept that modification—that it shall not interfere with the business of the House at that time—I shall have no objection.

Mr. FESS. I shall be glad to modify my request in that way.

Mr. MANN. So as not to interfere with appropriation bills or privileged bills. I suggest to the gentleman that he make it that way.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I accept that. That it shall not interfere with appropriation bills or privileged bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to state to the chairmen of committees that unless we want to stay here until next October they will have to bring some bills in here to be considered. [Applause.]

The request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] is to be modified; that his speech is to be subject to the consideration of appropriation bills or any privileged matter.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the qualification should also include any regular bills coming before the House and having the right to come before the House at that time. It might be on the call of committees.

Mr. MANN. Here is the situation: There is no business before the House practically, and the usual opportunity of addressing the House in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is not given to Members now, because we have not yet reached that stage. I do not think the call of committees ought to interfere with speeches like this.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. FOSTER. I reserve my objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I rise to say that I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] will not make an objection, in view of the fact that the speech just made, although in a neutral country, was as violent as would have been made in the British Parliament. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order. I demand the regular order.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. We should at least give somebody on the other side an opportunity to be heard.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS]?

Mr. FERRIS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker—a thing which I shall not do—I want to remind the House that we have one more bill here that we are anxious to get through. It was reported the first day of the session. I think we can get the bill out of the way by that time, but——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can get his bill up next Wednesday, anyway. He could not get that bill up on the call of the calendar except by unanimous consent. It is a Union Calendar bill.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman mean the bill that is now pending before the House?

Mr. MANN. No. An order has already been made to cover that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to address the House, following the gentleman from Ohio, on the cotton question.

The SPEAKER. Subject, of course, to the same conditions imposed in that case?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] asks unanimous consent that he shall be permitted to address the House for one hour, following immediately after the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] concludes his speech, on the same conditions as those applying to the permission given to the gentleman from Ohio. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. When?

Mr. STAFFORD. Now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes at the present time. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, at the end of that time will the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] quiet the waters by then moving to go into committee?

Mr. FERRIS. I will. I am trying to get recognition now. I am not objecting to that request, but I am trying to get the bill up.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, were it not for what I consider a base libel made by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] on a great number of loyal American citizens in this country, I would not rise at this time to resent the base and false charge that he made, in which he said that the German-Americans of this country, by gold and by dynamite, were purposing the destruction of ammunition factories.

I come from a constituency that has as large a representation of those German-Americans, naturalized citizens, as there is in any part of the country. I know them by reason of brushing up against them. I know they are liberty-loving, law-abiding citizens. In my own district, surrounded by thousands upon thousands of these German-Americans, there are being manufactured to-day, and there have been manufactured for several months past, munitions for the allies without guards and without any question whatsoever that those munitions' plants are safe and secure. And yet we find a distinguished Representative coming on the floor of the House in these troublous times, when we should weigh carefully what we say in the House of Representatives, uttering these base charges against as loyal, liberty-loving Americans as can be found anywhere, based upon some idle newspaper story. [Applause.]

Why, if he wants to improve his standing rather than degrade it to the low gutters of yellow newspaperdom, he would have cited more warrant for such a charge than to say that it is in the headlines of some metropolitan newspapers. There may have been some upon whom, perhaps, the tinge of suspicion attaches as to the destruction of munition plants, but those charges can not be leveled and massed against 8,000,000 of German-Americans who in times past have shown their loyalty to the flag. [Applause.] Who here in whose veins flow any Teutonic blood but what sympathizes with the fatherland? But mere sympathy for the fatherland does not conflict with the loyalty to the Stars and Stripes. [Applause.]

If Germany or Austria-Hungary should attempt by any deliberate act to insult our Government or to invade our rights, I am sure that these German-Americans who in times past have shown their loyalty would respond to the colors nobly, and not as some of the volunteers from effete New England in the Spanish War did when they enlisted in that little war, against a little and crumbling country, when after they enlisted they had their mothers go and beg the governor of Massachusetts, Gov. Wolcott, not to send them to the front. [Laughter.] I know whereof I speak, because I, too, was at Harvard; but I am thankful that I did not have the aristocracy of New England affect my democracy, nor has it affected my true loyalty as an American. I do not come upon this floor to-day advocating the pro-German side [applause], not like my distinguished Spanish-American war veteran, advocating the cause of England in the Halls of Congress more strongly than a Briton could advocate it in the House of Commons. No, Mr. Speaker; I rose merely to resent this base, disloyal charge, and I hurl it back as unworthy of the man, as unworthy of any American, to be arraigned against these millions of men, who in times of danger in the past have always shown their loyalty first and above all to the flag that we all dearly love—the old Stars and Stripes. [Applause.]

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT ON PUBLIC LANDS.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes, with Mr. HARRISON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill for amendment.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to section 1.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, we have read the first section, but the committee amendments have not been agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask that the committee amendments be voted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, after the committee amendments are disposed of, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "or," insert "of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "thereof," insert "or to any State, county, municipality, or irrigation district."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 12 and 13, strike out the words "chief officer" and insert the word "secretary."

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 2, line 15, after the word "not," insert "destroy, materially."

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 2, line 15, after the word "injure," strike out the word "destroy."

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 2, line 21, after the word "municipality," strike out the word "or."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "valuable for" and insert the words "susceptible of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 2, after the word "development," insert the words "including distribution."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, in the amendment to lines 9 and 10, on page 1, to insert the words "or to any State, county, municipality, or irrigation district," it did not seem to me that the Clerk read all the words.

Mr. MANN. He read them all. All the amendments to section 1, except the one last read, have been agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the understanding of the Chair that all of them have been agreed to.

Mr. MANN. What is the reason for this amendment to insert the words "including distribution"?

Mr. FERRIS. That is in the preliminary permit.

Mr. MANN. Yes. Why is it necessary to give somebody the right to occupy land which might be used for the distribution of power, and how far would that go? It is evidently inserted for some reason. I suppose the department has given the reason to the gentleman's committee.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] says he remembers the statement which was made about it.

Mr. RAKER. There might be a tract of land 100 feet wide that the party desired to use for the purpose of investigating to see whether or not he wanted to run his line at that particular place or desired to build his canal there or to use for other purposes strictly connected with the line; and the idea of the committee was that he be given the opportunity to take that land and use it for the purpose of experimenting and surveying and developing to that extent and that only.

Mr. MANN. I understand the reason for authorizing the preliminary occupation of land which may be susceptible of water-power development. That could only occur where there was some possibility of water power; but so far as the distribution is concerned, while the gentleman says the land might be 100 feet wide, it might be 1,000 miles wide. There is no limitation at all. If a man asks for a preliminary permit for the occupation of land for distribution, and says he does not know where the line is going to run, he may have a permit to occupy all of the land within a radius of many miles. Now, is that desirable?

Mr. RAKER. No; that is not the purpose, and if the gentleman will recall he knows that the land used for the purpose of building distribution lines is practically always 100 feet wide.

Mr. MANN. That is when you know where it is going.

Mr. RAKER. And in the case of a preliminary permit the Secretary would not extend it beyond that limit. Now, it is quite important to have the opportunity to make a survey so that a man may know just what land he wants when he gets his permanent lease.

Mr. MANN. No; but the man may not be able to tell where the distribution line is to run, and he may make application for the whole territory for the purpose of preventing somebody else getting in there.

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. MANN. That is what it will result in.

Mr. RAKER. The same thing might apply to taking land for water-power purposes or reservoir sites. He has to take a sufficient tract of land, and then he has to put his surveyors and engineers on it to determine what he can do with it—the size of the dam and where the line will go—and he ought to have permission to use the land for that purpose. That is what it is for.

Mr. MANN. I think I understand that there may be reasons for letting a man have a chance to look over a piece of land where he is going to run a line; but to give him practically unlimited authority, to say that he shall have occupation of all the land in the neighborhood, on the ground that he does not know where he is going to run his line—that is what will happen—it seems to me that goes altogether too far.

There ought to be some limitation there, although I have none to suggest. The gentleman can see that there will be many contests where you give somebody the favor of occupation. It will be a favor granted to one man against another. There may be a dozen looking at it at the same time, and you absolutely cut off the rights of all the others. You may do a great deal of unfair damage.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. This was an amendment not in the original bill but went into it in committee. I do not think it is of any great importance, although I think the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has some ideas upon it. This is the testimony on which it was based. It was brought to our attention by some engineers that sometimes large expenditures, reaching up to a million dollars, are made in making surveys and investigations to determine whether or not it is a feasible proposition to install a plant; taking the water flow at different periods of the year, studying the topographic map; and it was also brought to our attention that frequently quite far-reaching surveys were necessary in order to determine the right of way and questions leading up to distribution. It may be that the amendment does not accomplish that, and that it goes farther than it ought to.

Mr. MANN. I have no amendment to suggest; but we all know that in legislation of this kind, if we insert loose language, in the end some one gets an unfair advantage from it. They make use of every possible syllable in a bill, including the punctuation, in getting favors which sometimes ought not to be granted. I do not know; it is possible that this may be controlled by regulations to be issued.

Mr. FERRIS. I wish the gentleman would withhold his conclusions upon the matter until the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has a chance to say what he wishes.

Mr. MANN. I simply called it to the attention of the gentleman, hoping that he would call it to the attention of the department.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a committee amendment pending that is not yet disposed of. The committee amendment is the amendment, on page 3, relating to distribution.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on this amendment. As to the matter discussed by the gentleman from Illinois, I am not certain that there is very much danger of anyone being denied their rights under the proviso which has been discussed. It has never heretofore been considered necessary to give an applicant for any sort of right of way a permit to survey and investigate. We have been granting railroad rights of way and irrigation rights of way for a great many years, and the grant of rights of way are all preceded by careful investigation and surveys and mappings, and it has never been considered necessary to grant anyone an exclusive permit for that purpose.

There have been places and conditions under which two or three parties were examining the same area at the same time with a view of constructing a railroad, with a view of putting in a power plant, with a view of building an irrigation work, but there have been no serious difficulties between such parties because the work to be done is a work of investigation, a work of engineering, a work of surveying, and several parties can occupy the same territory at the same time without seriously conflicting with each other. As a matter of fact, however, the lease must eventually be granted to the man who has the water right. So that after all, if the Secretary grants a permit of this kind to one who does not have a right to use the water, it could do him little good. It would simply keep the party having the water rights waiting for a certain period of time. At the expiration of the period of the permit he could go on and make his survey. I doubt if there is any necessity for this provision as I suggested last year when the bill was under discussion. This is not the sort of legislation where a permit to prospect is needed because the character of the preliminary work is such that it can be carried on by several parties at the same time without conflict.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I have been in doubt whether I should vote for this bill, but I rather think on the whole that I shall. I regret it because during the years I was in Congress before I used to follow rather implicitly the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] on these questions. I voted with him once when there were only 36 men in the whole House with us. I listened to him the other day with a good deal of sympathy, although it did sound to me as though his attitude was one of sorrowing without hope.

The tendency of this bill ought to attract a little attention. It is not entirely good; it is another step toward a commission government which is doing a good deal of breaking down of our old system. There is only one man in this House that has an absolute right to seriously rejoice in this bill, and that is the gentleman from the twelfth district of New York, because this is a step toward socialism. I am going to vote for it, but I want to say now that I am not wholly in favor of this commission government that we are getting into. It used to be that the word "president" was a strong word in this country, but it is not nearly so strong now as the word "commissioner." We are governed all around and altogether and all too much by commissions, and that is what this bill is doing.

They are putting a tremendous power in this country in the hands of what is substantially a commission. Consider what our daily life is in a great city, so far as commissions are concerned. In a city like Chicago or New York or Boston or almost any large city a man gets up and turns on the water in his bath, supplied by the commissioner of electricity, gas, and water supply, and in our city it takes two commissioners for a man to get a bath.

Mr. MANN. I suppose that accounts for the fact that New York is so seldom bathed. [Laughter.]

Mr. BENNET. It might. We do not have to bathe so often as they do in Chicago, where they have all of that smoke. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. Do I understand the gentleman is supporting the bill because in this case the commission, instead of being within the reach of the party over whom it has jurisdiction, is 1,800 or 2,500 miles away?

Mr. BENNET. I am supporting the bill absolutely without any pride and with very little defense. [Laughter.] I started to say that when a man takes a bath in a big city he has to have the assistance of two commissioners; at least he has in New York. Then he goes in to the breakfast table and eats his breakfast food with milk which is pasteurized, grade 2, certified to by the commissioner of public health. He eats his roll, which is baked in a bakeshop that is licensed by the commissioner of public health. He then rushes out after breakfast and stops on his way to buy a newspaper at a stand on the street, which stand is located by the commissioner of public works. He goes down into the subway, and the exact location of the station has been determined by the public-service commission. If on the way he wants to telephone, he uses a telephone that is regulated by the public-service commission of the second department. He goes down town in a subway regulated by the public-service commission of the first department. If he happens to be a Congressman, after he has gotten through with his day's work he goes to Washington, he rides on a railroad whose rates are regulated by a commission.

The only thing that a man in his hasty process from the bath to his office in the morning does without the assistance of a commission is to kiss his wife good-bye, and now in the State of New Jersey, in certain parts, that is being interfered with by public officers of the law. The tendency is not good. My friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] the other day challenged those who were going to vote for this bill as Hamiltonian Federalists. I am one of those.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, when I was in Congress before I looked very carefully over the provisions of the Federalist, because I saw this tendency, and because we were breaking down the power of the separate States, and in so far as we are interfering with their efficiency as arms of the public service we are doing the whole country an injustice. Why, there is a perfectly terrific provision in the ninth paragraph of this bill, which says to some State in the West—and I understand it is only one State—"Until you establish a public-service commission the Secretary of the Interior is going to run your water power." Imagine saying that to a State! I can say for the State of New York that a public-service commission is not an unmixed blessing. We have just had one public-service commissioner removed for violating the law and two others have resigned while under investigation. The greatest scandal that we have in the State of New York at present is in connection with the public-service commission. Then, I am told, they do little things like this: A certain man made a bid on a contract over there. He was the low bidder. He was so low that everybody was rather afraid. A part of the route upon which he bid went under a big building erected a hundred years ago and nobody knew anything about it. But he bid with confidence and he got the contract. After he got the contract the public-service commission issued an order that the building should be torn down, and they paid this contractor several hundred thousand dollars for extra work. He did not have to go under the building. Of course he made a lot of money. It is that sort of thing that we are running into with public officials who are not responsible to the people.

Coming back to the Hamiltonian Federalist, you can search the Federalist from end to end and you will not find a single sentence by any one of the men who wrote any of those papers in which they attacked the power of the State over its strictly internal affairs, and, as a matter of fact, in one of the papers by Mr. Madison you will find the statement made, as a matter of course, that the power of a State to regulate its internal affairs is necessary to the maintenance of our form of government. Yet here in the ninth paragraph of this bill is a provision that no party would have dared put into a bill 10 years ago. Where does it come from? It comes now from the party that has prided itself on its history as an upholder of the doctrine of State rights! Yet they say to—I think it is Utah—"You must establish a public-service commission or our Secretary of the Interior will come in and run your strictly internal State rights." It is all wrong. I am going to vote for the bill because it is the best thing that is proposed. If my friend from Wyoming Mr. MONDELL has a substitute, I shall probably vote for his substitute first, and then after we are beaten—as we will be, because I think I see the temper of the House—I shall vote for the bill because we have to develop those water powers. I felt that before I voted for it I should call the attention of the House to the direction in which we are drifting, which is away from the magnificent struggles of individualism that for more than a century have built up this great country toward what I regard as the evils of socialism. [Applause.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the legislation under consideration can hardly be held responsible by either friend or foe for all of the ills that may be present in the Commonwealth of New York. Fearful that we may get too far afield from New York, let us for a moment consider what the trouble is up there. In the State of New York they have 449 electric stations and they have 20 corporations that own 81.4 per cent of the total developed water power up there, and 14 of these 20 control 74.3 per cent of the water power. Five companies control over half the total water power and two control one-third of the water power. Forty municipalities have four-tenths of 1 per cent of the water power and six-tenths of the total power. So the trouble of which the gentleman complains comes from the fact that 20 corporations own his State and the municipalities own only four-tenths of 1 per cent of the public utilities there.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, we are not in any trouble in New York. As a matter of fact, we have developed electric power wonderfully. I was talking about troubles to come from this legislation. As a matter of fact, the gentleman has simply missed the sermon on my text. Under the old-fashion system of individualism under good old Democratic doctrine of Thomas Jefferson that State which is governed least is governed best. We in the State of New York, without help from the Federal Government, but through the instrumentalities of our own citizens, have grappled with the question and built up a tremendous water-power development, and we are proud of it.

Mr. FERRIS. I thought a fair inference of the gentleman's former remarks was that he was smarting under all sorts of commission government and all sorts of commissions, and I thought I might be able to give a few instances of what the real trouble was. Suffice it to say that had this legislation been in vogue at an earlier age he would have been free from the troubles of which he complains and all would have been rosy both with the gentleman and his State.

I know the gentleman is speaking in the height of good humor, for he stated he was supporting the bill, but it is well that the facts also be known.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I was exceedingly surprised to hear the speech just made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET]. He does not seem to be aware that this is the year 1916. He is talking in the age of 1796. Why, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's position evidently is this: He complains of being regulated by commissions because he does not like commissions and therefore does not want these public-service corporations regulated at all. Rather than have the electric service of New York City regulated by a commission he would prefer that the people of New York be compelled to pay such charges for electric light as that company may choose to charge. Rather than be regulated by a water commission he would rather subject the people of New York to pay such charges as the water company chooses to charge. Rather than be regulated in reference to the urban railway system of the city by a commission he prefers to permit that company to charge 10 cents or 20 cents where they are now being charged 5. Rather than have a railroad regulated by a commission he would prefer that they pay a charge twice as much as charged to-day. That is the situation that the gentleman from New York is in. But when he talks about a paragraph of this bill being so much more Hamiltonian than anything Alexander Hamilton ever stood for—the gentleman is one of the most intelligent in this House when he knows the subject he is talking about [laughter]—but it is very evident that he has not any conception of the principles underlying this bill, because if he had even read the bill he would have known that it is a matter of contract between the company that chooses to take a lease from the United States Government of its own land, and by that contract the lessee says that he will agree until there is some regulation of his company in the State in which it is situated; he is willing that the Secretary of the Interior shall regulate it. That is all there is to it. [Applause.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have just listened to the gentleman from Wisconsin reassert what he stated the other day, that a leave under this bill was the same as a contract between private individuals.

It does seem to me the gentleman must be aware of the sophistry in the argument he makes upon that point. It is not the same as a contract for leave between two private parties by any manner of means. When you wish to construct a water-power plant in our portion of the country and some man does not want to do what is right or reasonable about it, we have a way to compel him. We can go into court and condemn the land for public purposes. Now, that is what you do in dealing with private parties, but that is not the case here at all.

Mr. LENROOT. If that is not done, has not the private party the right to make the same protest as in the contract here proposed?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. We can compel a private party to do what is right in the interest of the public; but the proposition in this bill is to place those who wish to develop water power just where the Government can absolutely coerce them to make such contract as it wishes. If that were done by a private party, we would call it by the polite name of blackmail. We have no power to compel the Government to act justly in this matter. The Government says that you can come and construct your water power not upon terms or conditions as those with a private party, because if we could not agree with a private party we could go into court and reach a just conclusion; but here the Government says you shall not only pay us what we say it is worth, for the land we own, but——

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman's position, then, is, he desires that the State should have the right to assert control and ownership of the public land of the United States, which his own State expressly declared it never would.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The position of the gentleman in regard to water in his State is that the State has the right to control that water, and that we do not believe that the Government ought to take the position of a blackmailer and compel us to pay something more than it is worth. That is exactly the position of the gentleman.

Mr. LENROOT. We are not attempting to control the water in the State of Washington or in any other State in this bill in that way.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Now, there is another thing about it, and it shows in the gentleman's speech, and I have read it all the way through, and it is one thing that I resent, not only in this argument but in all of them. All through this discussion there runs the idea that the people out in the West, where they have this water power, either do not have the honesty or the ability to properly conduct their own affairs. Constantly that argument is made. And the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] said three or four times in his talk the other day that we might as well understand that we are not going to monopolize this power.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BENNET. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. He [Mr. LENROOT] says you might as well understand you are going to get this bill or you are not going to get anything. We think those who live in the West are just as honest and just as intelligent as the average of people anywhere else, and we do not claim to be any more so, and we think we know just about as much of conditions in the West as anyone else.

Now, I want to call attention to this argument that has been made and constantly reiterated. Those in favor of the bill say they have no idea of controlling the water, or the use of the water, or sale of the water. But that is what they do. Now, let me give you an illustration. Suppose they are developing a water power and as they develop it they cross a piece of public land. They do not pretend that they want to charge what that land is worth. If they wanted a reasonable lease for the land, we would have no objection. But they want you to put a valuation on the power that is to be developed from that water, not the value of that land but value of the water, which they disclaim they own.

Now, if they take that position and insist upon it is not that coercion? Where does the element of contract come in? Talk about it being as a contract between two parties! When you make a contract the minds of the parties meet and agree. But here the Government says pay what I say or you will get no lease.

I asked the gentleman who has charge of this bill a question the other day, and I have asked the same question a good many times. I asked it of those who represented the Government at that famous meeting we had in Portland. None of them, however, answered or attempted to answer it. I asked the question one night at the banquet we had at Portland. There we had the conservationists representing the Government as well as those who were opposing the bill. The question was, "When you take this property back, what are you going to do with it?" Do you propose at the end of 50 years for the Government to go into the business of furnishing power for cities, for irrigation, for all the different power purposes?

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman might as well ask, assuming that his home city grants a franchise of 20 or 30 years, if they are going to run street cars after that franchise has expired. The question answers itself.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That may be true in the opinion of the gentleman. But wait until I get a little further. Suppose the Government takes over the property, is the Government going to pay taxes to the State?

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman want an answer to that?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. I never will, by my vote—and I hope it will not be done by any considerable vote on the part of Congress—turn the State of Washington loose to tax any part.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is the best answer I think that can be made. I leave it to the gentlemen who are listening as to whether it is an answer or not. You do not answer the question whether you intend that the Government shall pay taxes. Is the Government going to pay taxes to the State? You say no. Then, what are you going to do? You are going to build up a great industry, with millions of dollars' worth of property, furnish electric light, power to electric railways, furnish power for irrigation property worth tens of millions of dollars, exempt from taxation, and in competition with others who are paying taxes. Is that what you are going to do?

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman mean to tell this House that the leasehold, and so forth, of a lessee from the Government, who establishes his plant and is engaged in the furnishing of electricity—that that property, not the land but the property, including such leasehold that it used in making electricity, is not subject to State taxation? Is the gentleman aware of the decision of the Supreme Court to the contrary?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I never said a thing of that kind. I did not even intimate it.

Before I leave that subject, I want to go back to that question of what you are going to do after you recapture the property. You can say that those things are indefinite, that they can be settled at the end of 50 years, that we need not necessarily anticipate trouble. Let me call your attention to the fact that you are not going to get development in the West with those uncertainties. Fifty years is a long time for an individual. Victor Hugo says in one of his books that 100 years is youth in a church and old age in a dwelling. Fifty years is a short time in the life of a State. What class of investments are you going to get under these conditions? Simply speculative. Men who are willing to take chances, not the class that is really desirable.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GARNER). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. May I have three minutes more?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of 25 minutes' debate the debate close on this amendment, 5 minutes of the time to be granted to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET], and 5 minutes for myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] asks unanimous consent that at the expiration of 25 minutes all debate on this amendment be considered as closed. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Reserving the right to object, I would like five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. What was the request?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. To what, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. To the request made by the gentleman from Oklahoma, that at the end of 25 minutes all debate on the amendments be closed. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we could not reach some agreement about closing the debate on the entire section.

Mr. FERRIS. I think the pending amendment is all there is in the section that would provoke debate.

Mr. MANN. Several gentlemen want to be heard; that is the situation.

Mr. FERRIS. There is only one other important committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. This is the last committee amendment to the section. If we could make an agreement as to the time to be consumed on the section I think it would be wise.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] has two amendments which he wishes to offer, and he has left the Chamber.

Mr. MANN. We will take care of it on this side. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] wants five minutes, and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] wants five minutes, and the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] wants as much as he can get. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me, on this paragraph I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my request.

Mr. MANN. I think it would be wise to fix it so as give to each gentleman desiring time the time he wants now.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I think if liberality is allowed here we can thrash out some propositions and get along faster in the end.

Mr. MANN. Fifty-five minutes or an hour, Mr. Chairman, is desired on this side.

Mr. FERRIS. A little time is wanted on this side.

Mr. MANN. It will take an hour. I think it would be wiser to ask for an hour.

Mr. FERRIS. Well, will an hour and a half be agreeable?

Mr. MANN. If you give us an hour, I think that would be the easiest way.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of an hour and a half, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and half an hour to be controlled on this side, all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that at the expiration of an hour and a half, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois and the half hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Oklahoma, all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma if he will yield to me three or four minutes?

Mr. FERRIS. There is an hour on that side and only 30 minutes here. Will not the gentleman be willing to get his time over there?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, there is one other proposition connected with this bill to which I object because I do not think it is fair to the Western States, and I want to call it to the attention of the gentleman who has the bill in charge. The objection is to the proposition regulating the payments provided in these leases by charging a certain amount upon the power developed. Take it out in my country, where you have water power—and in order to produce water power you have to have a great mountainous country—this power is one of our resources.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] expressly says that the water belongs to the State, and yet it is proposed to tax that resource which belongs to the State and to pay a portion of that tax to the General Government.

That is a special assessment, a taxation of the resources of our State for the benefit of the whole country, and that is not equality under the Constitution to which we are entitled. It is just the same as if, in the city of Seattle, they should take a special neighborhood and assess it and take the money and put it into the general funds of the city because that particular portion of the city might have some special resource that the other portions did not have.

Now, there is another point that has been made, and I want to call the attention of the Members of the House to the unfairness of it. I do not say that the gentlemen making the argument mean to be unfair, but we have heard it repeatedly reiterated on the floor of the House here that certain water-power companies control 75 per cent of the water power in the State of California, or 60 per cent of the water power in the State of Washington, and so on. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], when I called the matter to his attention the other day, admitted that what he meant was a certain percentage, as named, of the water power that had been developed. Why, gentlemen, it has not been but a few years since a Siwash Indian erected a fish wheel upon one of the rivers of my State for the purpose of catching salmon, and at the time this Siwash Indian absolutely controlled 100 per cent of the water power in the State of Washington. He was a grasping monopolist. He controlled all the water power of the State in exactly the same way that the present companies control a certain per cent of it.

When they make that statement they do not explain that they mean merely the water power that has been developed. When they say that there is a monopoly of the water power of that country that can be developed they are not stating the facts, because there is no such monopoly. The monopoly of which they complain is only as to that which is already developed. Not only men on the floor of this House have been misled by that statement but the country has been misled by those statements.

Now I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. Inasmuch as the gentleman quoted indirectly a little colloquy between himself and myself the other day, stating that I conceded something in error about these figures——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; I said you frankly corrected the statement when I called your attention to it. You did it very properly.

Mr. FERRIS. What statement was it?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman stated that a certain percentage of the water power in the State of California was being controlled by one or two companies, and I asked him if it was merely the water power that had been developed. The gentleman was fair about answering, and said yes.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes. Mr. Chairman, let me give the figures here, and then there will not be any controversy about it afterwards. There are 116 water-power stations in the State of Washington, the gentleman's State, as follows:

Stone & Webster, 11 stations, 25.8 per cent; Washington Water Power Co., 4 stations, 28 per cent; Spokane & Inland Empire Railroad Co., 1 station, 6 per cent; American Power & Light Co., 11 stations, 4.2 per cent; Northwestern Electric Co., 1 station, 5.4 per cent; Olympic Power Co., 1 station, 2.9 per cent; Great Northern Railroad Co., 1 station, 2.6 per cent; Lewiston-Clarkston Improvement Co., 1 station, 1 per cent; Wenatchee Valley Gas & Electric Co., 3 stations, 1.5 per cent; Inland Portland Cement Co., 1 station, 1.2 per cent; Federal Light & Traction Co., 1 station, 0 per cent; Washington-Oregon Corporation, 2 stations, 0.3 per cent; municipal stations, 12 stations, 16.5 per cent; all other stations, 66 stations, 4.6 per cent.

Mr. LENROOT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, as we listen to the wails that come up from certain distinguished gentlemen from the West it might lead some of us to believe that this is a bill intended primarily for the abuse of the western communities. I assume that these gentlemen would have us understand that they are speaking here on behalf of the interests of the communities which they represent. They say something about a difference here between the conditions where private ownership prevails and where public ownership prevails, and they seem to bewail the fact that the water-power interests, under the power of eminent domain, can not condemn these public lands, as they say can be done to lands in private ownership; but they overlook the fact that the right to condemn under the power of eminent domain in case of private ownership is not a power vested in the individual who invokes the right, but is a power of the public, a power of the Government itself, which, for the general good, permits this private land to be taken for a public benefit. Now, here is land which is already owned by the Government. It is public land——

Mr. McARTHUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. In five minutes I really can not yield. Now, we are endeavoring to take this public land and devote it, not to a private use, but to the public use for the good of the communities which you gentlemen represent in the West; and may I say to these western gentlemen that the expense of the operation and administration of all of this is borne by the Federal Government, which gets no return, not one penny. We pay even the cost of administration. This section 9 which is put in here is not for the protection of any individual and is not for the benefit of the General Government, except as the General Government benefits by the prosperity of any community; but it is in order that this public land which we turn over for a public use shall inure to the public good, and not to some grasping monopoly which will fix its rates without regulation. So we provide that the rate charged for the power developed here shall be fixed by some public authority, and if none exists in the State, then the Federal Government will supply it, simply carrying into effect the means of seeing that something which belongs to the public shall result for the public good, and seeking primarily the good of your western communities now and in the future.

Mr. LENROOT. How much time does the gentleman yield back?

The CHAIRMAN. Two minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I rise to correct an impression that exists in the mind of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] that I have become a hard-shell reactionary and want to be charged three or four prices for everything. I do not. He overlooked one very important part of my speech. I said I was going to vote for the bill. I shall vote for it, because I recognize that with all its imperfections there is a real situation out there that has to be met, and this seems to be the most practical way of meeting it. I regret several things about the bill; first, that it is going to add to the burden on the Public Treasury some hundreds or thousands of men. Nobody seems to worry about that, but we ought to worry about it; second, it is a blow at individualism; third, it weakens the powers of the State.

There are other things that I could mention about the bill that I do not like, but as a practical man I am going to vote for it in spite of the tendencies I have pointed out. And as this is a forum of free, open, frank discussion, it did seem to me that having those views in my mind I owe to the country, which we in the aggregate represent, a duty to point out here the direction in which we are not drifting, but the direction in which we are being driven by the logic of events, to the end that if there is some way by which we can attain the same useful, practical end that we all want to attain, without the dangers we run in this way, it can be found. We will in our imperfect, human, finite capacities in the meantime do our best by voting for the best thing that is presented from time to time.

If I have any time left I yield it back.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back one-half minute.

Mr. LENROOT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt that this bill will pass, but the suggestion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] ought to cause some of us to pause. I was greatly interested in what the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] said a few moments ago. The gentleman from Michigan is, of course, a thorough conservationist. The State of Michigan has cut down all its timber; it has practically none of its timber lands left, and, seemingly, now wants to protect the States of the far West from themselves.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I can not yield now. Suppose at the time Michigan was being populated and developed the Federal Government had stepped in and drawn a line around 800,000 acres of land, withdrawn that land from entry, and said, "This is a forest reserve;" and then had gone into another corner of the State and drawn a line around 300,000 additional acres and said, "This is a national monument." Does the gentleman feel that the great State of Michigan would have been peopled and would have developed as it has been developed? And yet they are taking enormous areas out of the public lands in the far Western States and thereby preventing the development of the West. Take the matter of water power; I have frequently gone through New England——

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I can not yield now for I have only five minutes. New England owes its enormous development to its water power.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I can not yield now.

Mr. HILL. I want to controvert that proposition.

Mr. KAHN. I have gone through the State of Massachusetts repeatedly, and have seen one mill after another on the streams in that State. The mills in large measure get their power from those streams. They have built up their enormous factories with that power. It is a wonderful thing to see how varied industries have grown and expanded in that section of the country. They use, largely, water power. But suppose, after the first six or eight factories had been erected on those streams, the Federal Government had stepped in and had said, "Gentlemen, you can not use any more of this power. Every new mill, every new factory will have to pay something into the Treasury of the United States if they want to use it, and we will only let them use it for a term of 50 years." Does anyone believe there would have been the wonderful development of the industries of the State of Massachusetts that there has been? Of course not.

So we say that we know the conditions in the West, and that this legislation will hamper the development of that section of the country. There are other ways of regulating the use of power. I believe that the opportunity should be given to capital to develop power sites without the imposition of overhead charges that existing companies do not have to pay. I would invite capital to go into the business of the development and sale of water power. I would permit them to meet the existing companies on equal terms. Then if they make combinations for the purpose of forcing up rates, if they do those things that tend to create monopoly, I would even have a condition in the grant that would work the forfeiture of the franchise. But conditions such as are found in this legislation simply tend to foster monopoly. These people who are already in the field and who paid nothing into the Federal Treasury for their grants, who developed their power sites before any restrictive laws were enacted, can underbid, can undersell any new dealers in power who would have to pay something into the Federal Treasury in just the amount the new competing companies pay into the Federal Treasury. Does anyone believe the new company could survive such competition? Gentlemen, this bill will keep capital from the development of new power sites. To my mind, this kind of legislation will defeat itself. There will be little development under it, just as there was little development under the law of 1902. When that law was passed I predicted failure for it, and I predict failure under this law. [Applause.]

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, if under this law there will be little development, it is far better for future generations that the little development takes place rather than the conditions that would follow if you granted large corporations rights to develop water power on the public domain without limit or restriction. It can not be charged by Representatives coming from States where water powers have been exploited by private capital that we are seeking for selfish gain to protect the public against the unrestricted appropriation of the undeveloped water powers on public domain that remains in the far-western country. We who come from States where our powers have been developed know that fabulous fortunes have been gained by the unrestricted development of these powers.

New England has been developed in a way by the water-power development largely from the fact that the paper industry was established along the New England streams. But since then, since 1891, when water powers began to be utilized for hydroelectric generation, it developed that these water powers were beyond all conception of the original value. It is a contest between unfettered capitalization on the one side and State and Government regulation on the other. We in the Middle West who have gone through unfettered capitalization seeking to take hold of undeveloped water power realize that a mistake was made. We do not wish to hamper the development of the West, but we say to the Representatives of California that it is a crime, in my eyes, as I saw the past summer in crossing over from the Yosemite Valley to the Hetch Hetchy Valley, that beautiful forest land on the mountain side appropriated by eastern capitalists for water-power sites and awaiting despoliation until the time when it would be profitable to develop it. We say now that if you want to rob the future for the benefit of the present we will restrain you. We will place reasonable regulations upon it and allow the State to develop these water powers under the regulations of the State commission. If you have no State commission, then it will rest under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior. This bugaboo of bureaucracy does not scare me, because at all times it rests with the State legislatures to establish a State commission. When they establish the commission then the power of the National Government, the supervisory power of the National Government, ceases.

Mr. McARTHUR. I want to know if the gentleman ever lived in a State that was honeycombed with these bureaucrats?

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, I have studied the conditions where they have been. I served on the pulp and paper committee back in 1908, where the conditions arising from the appropriation of these water powers were first called to my attention, and if the gentleman had served on that committee and heard the testimony of the few corporations getting control of all the undeveloped water powers, he would, if he were not hampered by local sentiment in his district, be in favor without restriction of this bill. I will ask the gentleman if he favors a corporation taking control, as they do, of the public lands in the Yellowstone National Park, and holding those undeveloped water powers for generations to come, and then compelling those generations to pay just what those corporations see fit to charge?

Mr. McARTHUR. I do not.

Mr. STAFFORD. If he would, he would be in favor of unlicensed individualism. The great fortunes of this country have been made by appropriation of the public domain. We say that that domain now and for the future is for the public and for the public benefit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct the attention of the chairman of the committee to another matter, and that is whether it was the intention of the chairman of the committee to grant unlimited time for extension after the one-year period as provided in the last proviso on page 3? My reading of the first section shows that there is no limitation as to the length of time to which the extension shall be granted, but merely that the power is given to extend if the original time of one year is not sufficient.

Mr. FERRIS. The thought of the committee was this: Numerous engineers came before us and testified to the colossal task it was to make the survey and take the preliminary steps to the expenditure of a million or more dollars for one of these large hydroelectric plants, and to finance it. In some instances where a company that was acting in good faith did not have time enough we gave the Secretary power to extend the time.

Mr. STAFFORD. To an unlimited degree?

Mr. FERRIS. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. FERRIS. I yield the gentleman one minute.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the phraseology of the bill as written there is no limitation on the time for the extension period. I thought it was the sense of the committee to only extend it for a like period of a year?

Mr. FERRIS. It is; but they can only extend it when prevented by unusual weather conditions or some unusual thing of that kind from pursuing it.

Mr. STAFFORD. This would give the Secretary of the Interior power to extend for 10, 15, or 20 years, if the first year was not sufficient because of these conditions. I thought it better to place a limitation on it for a like period.

Mr. FERRIS. There is a limitation in the fact that the Secretary must find that the special conditions warrant the extension.

Mr. STAFFORD. If those conditions do exist, he can extend it.

Mr. FERRIS. This applies to Alaska, and the gentleman will bear in mind that part of the year they can not work up there at all.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 1 by adding at the end thereof the following:

"And the leases hereby authorized, and all subcontracts as to the management of said water power or the terms and conditions of the distribution of electrical energy, light, or heat, shall be at all times subject to any legislation which may be passed by the United States, whether by amendment of this act or otherwise, and shall be expressly so stated to be subject in said leases and contracts."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, in the general debate it was said very justly that this was not a bill for the development of water power, but its object was to allow those water powers to be used for wide distribution of electrical energy. It was truly said that this object can only be attained by great associations of capital, and that this ownership of the water power or leasing of the water power and of the lands is in its nature a monopoly, and that it is a great and pressing necessity not only in this sort of monopoly, but in all development of great resources, that laws shall be passed which should regulate the business of these monopolies, so that only a fair profit shall go to the holder and that the business should inure otherwise to the benefit of the public. It was said truly that these objects are not attained by this bill fully, as they can not be by any bill. It needs experience. No doubt it will be agreed that such regulation can not now be finally established, but must be subject to amendment from time to time. It was with this view that I offer this amendment that the leases and contracts themselves should submit the parties and the distribution to the regulation of the law. It was likewise pointed out by the gentleman from Minnesota most justly that the regulation of the distribution of electric current between various States will be necessarily confused with the distribution within the State unless there be one uniform system of regulation, which could only be had under United States law developed from time to time by experience. It is, at any rate, possible that this may prove in the end to be the best solution; and it is, therefore, as I submit to the House, the part of prudence not, perhaps, to make stringent regulations and take away the power of the State, but to reserve the possibility of such control, and this is easily done by making that reservation a part of the terms of the lease itself, as proposed by this amendment.

How this control can be exercised is a different matter. The gentleman from Minnesota is inclined to a commission. I sympathize with the fear of commissions expressed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Experience has shown the difficulties, the expense, and many of the unfortunate results which attend even their beneficial operations. The object to be obtained is the limitation of private profits so that the benefit of the enterprise shall go to the public. This can be done by simply saying so and making the business mutual and cooperative between the holder and the public, so that the lessee should be limited to a certain annual percentage of profit from his investment and so that profits in excess should be returned to the consumer by way of dividends upon what he pays. This is like a cooperative store. It is like a mutual insurance company with a stock capital and which does a mutual business. It is no more complicated. It is one that long ago ought to be applied to public-service corporations, where public streets furnish the right of way and the whole public are the customers.

The profit to be allowed to the holder should be large. He takes the risk. When you tempt private capital to such an enterprise it might be as much as 15 or 25 per cent a year or more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Would it be possible for the gentleman from Minnesota to yield me more time?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield three minutes additional to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. We do not want to discourage capital, but we want to prevent successive reorganizations with expanded stock which will put money into the pockets, not of the original investor, but into the pockets of mere promoters after the work has been done. The limit may be sometimes low, because sometimes towns will only want such profit as will pay interest on public bonds. Such a scheme will involve many details which can not be fully settled now, but must be left to future legislation. But certain requirements would not be out of place now.

One is to keep careful account of construction and operation. If profits should be diverted to improvements of plant, they should be represented by scrip bearing interest.

Another is to provide that salaries, office building, and other headquarter expenses and commissions should be reasonable, so that the profits should not be used up.

The lessee ought to deal directly with the consumer. It is the consumer, not the intermediary, that is to obtain the profit. This, however, should not prevent partnerships as long as this result is attained, and therefore should allow such contracts approved by the Secretary of the Interior as do not infringe on the right of the consumer to share in the profits.

Consumers should be equally treated by equal rates in each locality, and fair rates as between different localities. With this in view I have prepared amendments to the second section, which will be read at their place at the end of the second section, but which I now desire to offer as a part of my remarks to show the general scheme. They are only tentative, but if we want to meet the demands of the world at the present time we must obtain some system of regulating public servants by law and not by commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. May I ask the gentleman if it would not be well to try the same scheme, which may be a very good one, right here in the District of Columbia, where we have had some difficulty in respect to electricity? Would not this be a good place to try it?

Mr PARKER of New Jersey. My time has expired.

The proposed amendments to section 2 by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey are as follows:

Amendment 1. Add at the end of section 2 the following:
"And each such lease shall provide that detailed accounts shall be kept of construction and operation in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and annual statements thereof filed on such day as he may order, so that the totals of every branch of the business may be ascertained at any time."

Amendment 2. Also add the following:
"And each such lease shall provide that all profits on the original cost of the plant in excess of cumulative annual profits at a rate and per cent of such cost to be fixed in said lease shall be annually divided among the consumers of electrical energy according to the amounts paid by each consumer in the year."

Amendment 3. Also add the following:
"The Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may offer any lease to public competition among bidders giving satisfactory security to perform the terms thereof as they shall offer the more rent, or agree to accept a less annual rate of profits; that is, the said competition may be as to the amount of rent to be paid to the United States or the maximum annual profits to be retained by the lessee."

Amendment 4. Also add the following:
"And each lease shall provide that profits which may be invested in permanent improvements may be paid over to the person entitled thereto by scrip or certificates of such investment on which local interest shall accrue and be paid annually until they shall be taken up and funded in debt or a preferred stock at lower interest."

Amendment 5. Also add the following:
"And each lease shall provide that expenses for salaries, offices, and other headquarters expenses and commissions shall be reasonable and subject to approval by the Secretary of the Interior, and shall be limited annually to a fixed per cent of the money spent for material and labor in construction and operation."

Amendment 6. Also add the following:
"And each lease shall provide that the lessee shall sell or lease or contract for electrical energy directly with the consumer, except by such contracts as may be first approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and shall not impair the consumer's right to share in the profits."

Amendment 7. Also add the following:
"And each lease shall provide that rates for electricity shall be equal in each locality, according to the quantity used or lost and the cost of connection, and shall be fairly apportioned as to different localities."

Mr. FERRIS. Might I ask the Chair how much time remains to each side?

The CHAIRMAN. Each side has 28 minutes remaining.

Mr. FERRIS. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I first desire to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, as I have had no time to prepare a careful statement. I object to this proposed bill. I object to the 50-year clause, to the so-called recapture clause. It seems to me the committee is indulging in radical talk and reactionary action. That is the position now of both Republicans and Democrats. They are liberal in strong talk against corporations and about the people and about the masses, but when it comes down to genuine action you see nothing progressive from them. I became suspicious when I saw the Republican and Democratic leaders in agreement on this bill. It was high time for me to examine it carefully. [Laughter.]

I spent last night, from about 10 o'clock until midnight, in my office carefully examining that bill. The committee speaks of the recapture clause. It is not a recapture clause. It is a fool-capture clause. Fools will be captured by it. What you are trying to do now is that, instead of preserving the natural resources of the country for the people, you are making things worse by enabling the commission to give leases for 50 years. I wonder where I will be able to meet you 50 years from now in order to reproach you for your act. I am not quite sure I will meet you in heaven, although I know where I am going to land as a Socialist. [Laughter.] Fifty years is an awfully long period of time. It is more than a generation. The word "generation" means the average life of all the persons in the community, which is one-third of a century. You are permitting the making of leases for more than a generation, for more than the lifetime of a generation. It is not enough that you do mischief to last a lifetime; it is not enough that you burden with the result of your unwise action the present generation; but you want to impose burdens upon those who will come after us. You are quite ambitious in your projects.

I am opposed to the recapture clause and that 50-year leasing clause. How generous the committee is. Just listen to this wonderful language. They say:

We must provide generous terms, in order to get private capital to make investments.

You can not get enough private capital interested to develop water power. Why not get the inexhaustible capital of the United States of America? You speak so glibly of expending billions of dollars for munitions, for armament, for fighting some invisible enemy, an enemy that exists in your minds only, but you can not get your minds to work out some method for utilizing the resources of the United States for the people.

The committee speaks of criminal negligence committed in the past in overlooking the wonderful resources of the United States and in permitting them to be appropriated by private capital. What does the committee substitute for it? Instead of the criminal negligence of the past generations, you substitute deliberate criminality by permitting leases for 50 years. And if you gentlemen do permit a lease for 50 years, why do you not provide that the commission should have the right to regulate hours of labor, wages for labor, and other conditions of labor, and that conditions of employment should not be inferior to standards demanded by organized labor? Why do you always forget these little things—the demands of labor? You speak of the consumer. What about the great masses of the working people? Why do you disregard them in your scheme for regeneration of society?

Gentlemen, you are not doing the right thing in adopting this bill. When the Republicans and Democrats agree it is a safe thing to vote for a bill, it is time to look out. [Laughter.] I do not want to call you names. First of all, it is a bad thing to do. I wish to be an agreeable fellow. I can say lots of things about the Republicans in the abstract and about the Democrats in collectivity. History will take care of that and will call you all kinds of names. I shall not indulge in the calling of names. All I wish to say is that you are making a very serious blunder. The future historian will say that by enacting this bill you tried to fool the people, to deceive them, and make them believe that you were earnestly making an attempt to conserve and preserve the natural resources of the country, while in reality you were enabling private interests to obtain 50-year leases in order to continue the exploitation of the resources of the Nation.

I object to this bill because it is an unfair bill. It is an improper bill; it is not one to promote the interests of the people; it is destructive of their rights. I suppose there will be no objection to my extending my remarks in the RECORD, although I dislike that practice. The last time I obtained it, together with everybody else, I did not feel like taking advantage of it. A speech extended in the RECORD and not delivered on the floor looks to me a very funny thing, but as you are so funny I see no reason why I can not once in a while be as funny as you are.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman request to extend his remarks in the RECORD?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York have permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] yield to me two minutes?

Mr. FERRIS. Every moment is promised, if the gentleman will pardon me.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The matter I wish to speak on does not pertain to the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman withhold until a little later and get permission on the next section?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Very well. I yield back the time granted me by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I propose to interpose a novelty in the discussion by discussing the section of the bill under consideration. The section of the bill which has been read provides for the leasing of public lands for water-power development. If that was all that the bill did and those leases were on proper and reasonable terms and conditions, I should have no very serious objection, although I believe that the matter could be better and more advantageously worked out along the line of rights of way, a line which we have followed in the past. But there is one very peculiar and extraordinary thing about this section. I want to call attention to it, and I want to challenge the attention of the House to it, because it is the very first of the kind in our history, as I stated a year ago, on the same section. Heretofore in legislating in regard to the public lands we have granted certain rights or privileges or opportunities to citizens. We do nothing of that kind in this bill. In the first section of the bill we turn over to the absolute management and control of the Secretary of the Interior, to be managed and controlled according to his sweet will, all the land of the public domain that may be used, needed, or required for power development. Nothing in the bill gives any citizen any assurance that at any time, now or in the future, he may have an opportunity to lease any part of the public land for these purposes. The Secretary is given the right to either grant or withhold the right to use these lands for purposes contemplated by the bill. There has been a good deal of the Don Quixote style of oratory in this debate. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] mount their limping steeds, and with lances at rest they charge with great eloquence upon the windmill of alleged or feared monopoly. They realize, if they know anything about it, that at this time the West does not suffer from oppressive monopoly in these matters; the West does control, and control so that the West is generally securing better terms from water-power companies than the East. But they fear combinations and monopolies in the future, and fear that we shall be so pusillanimous in the future that we shall not protect ourselves. In my country, when the cowboys want to describe a man who is utterly beneath contempt, they refer to him as "a fellow who would rob his own trunk." If the West would allow itself to be robbed by its power companies it would come in that category.

Now, the fact is that so far as monopoly and combination are concerned there will be more monopoly and more combination under this legislation than there would be without it. If we simply leased or granted rights of way and allowed the States to control, there would unquestionably be less of combination. There would be a larger number of separate ownerships than there would be under this bill.

That fact has been admitted by practically all of the extreme conservationists who favor this class of legislation. They began by scaring the people of the country with the bugaboo of water-power combination, but they ended by embracing the idea and the theory of combination as a condition under which the people will be most satisfactorily and cheaply served. I repeat that it is now admitted, wherever that question has been put, by the men who have given study to the question, that this bill will not prevent or have any tendency to prevent combination or monopoly. As a matter of fact, all water powers are monopolies. It will not discourage monopoly. Monopoly is encouraged in the bill.

But they say that so long as the Federal Government controls under certain conditions it is well to have this monopoly and this combination. If we suggest that under our form of Government the people are sovereign in their control and ought to be effective in their control, instead of discussing that proposition they proceed to attempt to alarm us by again talking about combinations and monopolies, as though combinations and monopolies were not the very thing sought and expected to be accomplished under this legislation.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is there any reason why the State of Wyoming will not have control in regulating the price to be charged by the water companies?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, the State of Wyoming has a commission.

Mr. SHERLEY. Then is there any reason why it will not have proper control in regulating the price to be charged?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. What is it?

Mr. MONDELL. Given a power plant in the State of Wyoming, occupying so much as a quarter of an acre of public land, a square foot of public land, if you will, or even running a transmission line over a strip of public land, immediately thereupon the State public-service commission and the communities which, under our law, may fix rates are deprived of all power and control over the practices of the company or the rates which they may charge, and a clerk down here in the office of the Secretary of the Interior becomes the sole judge of what a great power plant serving my people shall do as to its practices, as to the issue of its stock, and as to the charges it shall make on the current that it produces. That is a fair statement, I believe, of the case.

Mr. SHERLEY. If I understand the gentleman, he means that when the company's activities cease to be intrastate and become interstate the State ceases to have complete control. Is that it?

Mr. MONDELL. I mean that whenever a company puts a transmission line across the State that happens, and happens to all the activities of the plant in both States. The gentleman from Kentucky is a very good lawyer, one of the very best in the House. Therefore I, not being a lawyer, would not presume——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. In a moment. I would not presume to differ with him on a purely legal question. But I am not convinced that passing an electric current or an electric line across a State line is interstate commerce, and if it is not, then there is not any constitutional way in which this operation of control may be put into effect.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. As I understand the gentleman from Wyoming to say, a company organized within a State, doing business entirely within the State, with capital furnished by citizens of the State, under control of the commission authorized by the State, would not have any rights within the State after an electric wire carrying current went out of the State?

Mr. MONDELL. If this becomes law, the State commissions and bodies having power to regulate would lose all of their authority and control, and the authority and control over rates and practices would be transferred to Washington.

Mr. MADDEN. Every power within the State as well as without?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. May I have just one minute more to answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. LENROOT. Not out of my time.

Mr. MONDELL. Very well; the gentleman does not want information given to the House, evidently.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, in the debate that has taken place to-day we have had an illustration of the extremes of this question. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], perfectly consistent with his view of government, believes that this bill is unjustifiable because of the extreme privileges it grants to capital. The gentlemen from the West, starting from the always assumed and mistaken premise that the public lands in the Western States belong to the Western States, argue that there are too many restrictions placed around the use of the property of the Government.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. On that straw man of his——

Mr. SHERLEY. I have only five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman was not here the other day when half a dozen western Members answered that proposition, and said they did not claim any ownership of the public lands.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course not; they never claim that when faced with it, but they always claim it as the basis for an argument that has no standing except upon the assumption that the public lands in those States belong to the inhabitants of those States.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman uses that statement as a basis for an argument.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, will the gentleman let me have my time? The gentleman had his, at length, ad libitum, and I might add another phrase, but will not.

The proposition here involved is simply this, that the Government of the United States, owning certain lands, shall put terms upon the use of those lands by a lessee.

But it is said that the relationship of ordinary contracting parties does not exist, because of the one fact that the land owned by the Government is not subject to the right of a State's eminent domain, and if the terms that it imposes upon the lessee are not suitable to that lessee he is without recourse. That is true, but it ought to be true. As has been well pointed out the right of eminent domain is a right of sovereignty, and the very highest, and it ought not to be exercised against a sovereignty; and the time will never come when the Government of the United States will confer upon any lesser political subdivision the right of eminent domain as against the property of the United States, and it never should.

But much is said about the fact that these States are burdened with great sections that are held by the United States and which are not subject to taxation. They forget that the States and the people within the States took them subject—if you please to call it that—to the burden of Government ownership of part of that domain.

But it is not true in law, it is not true in fact, and can not be made true by the repeated assertions of western gentlemen, that these great properties that will be created by the development of water-power sites in the West will be free from State taxation. Gentlemen have only need to read the decision in 14 Peters or the decision in 220 United States to find that the leasehold that is granted is subject to State taxation and is now being taxed in certain instances in the Western States, and it either shows ignorance or unfairness on the part of advocates who constantly talk about taking away from the States any power to levy taxes and to support themselves.

Speaking for myself, I should like to see a shorter lease than 50 years. Men say you can not induce capital. Why, in my section they would not think of issuing a franchise for 50 years. That belongs to the limbo of forgotten things. We do not believe that we are so wise—even if gentlemen out West are satisfied of their own wisdom—as to be able to span the future with any flimsy bridge of thought and make terms for 50 years that will represent equity during the whole of that term, I think it is proper that we should give a sufficient length of lease to induce capital—and men will differ as to what that term is—and it will have to stand the acid test of actual trial; but certainly 50 years is not so short a time as to make anyone doubt the fact that these lands will be leased.

Now, one of two things is true. Either gentlemen do not want regulation of any kind, and so they object to Federal regulation because they are satisfied that they can avoid State regulation, or they believe that the limitation of the 50-year term is too extreme. I submit in all candor that, if anything, it represents an extremely liberal policy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma give me a couple of minutes?

Mr. FERRIS. I yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I want to say, in conclusion, another thing. I am sometimes impressed by the tyranny of phrases. Men bow down before the idol of a cant phrase. I came here 13 years ago a very pronounced believer in State rights. I have not lost my conviction touching real State rights, but I am constantly reminded of the fact that we are all the time hearing more of State rights than we are of State duties. [Applause.] It has been because of the absolute neglect of State duties that the people—speaking for no locality, but for the Nation at large—are determined that power shall not again be given to a limited class to exploit what belongs to all. [Applause.]

Why, one gentleman made much of the fact that the State of Michigan had lost its forests, and said that because the people there had lost their forests they were coming in and insisting upon regulating the public lands within the borders of Western States. What better reason on earth could there be for the position of Michigan in desiring to prevent the West being exploited as Michigan was exploited? Michigan has learned by experience. Yes; the people of the West are just as patriotic and just as intelligent as the people of Kentucky or Michigan or elsewhere; but every man here knows that the trouble is not with the mass of the people, but it is with a limited number of people having the strong desire of personal gain, against the unorganized and not alert attention of the great mass of the people. [Applause.] We give to the States every right that they can ask in reason. We say to them: "If you have a commission, you shall have power to regulate. If you have not a commission, as soon as you get one you shall have the power to regulate; but if you refuse to have one, then we, holding in trust for all the people the public lands of America, will give the right to use those lands for only a limited period, under such restrictions as in the judgment of those representing all the people are fair to all concerned." That is the essence of the bill, and that is the reason the fight is on here so strenuously by these gentlemen. It is not so much because they object to the terms of the bill as because under the plea of bureaucratic government they want to get away from the establishment of the principle of public control of public utilities as against the private exploitation of them. [Applause.]

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin use some of his time?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR] is recognized for five minutes.

[Mr. MCARTHUR addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, in the few minutes allotted to me in the discussion of H. R. 408, the Ferris water-power leasing bill, I desire to express my disapproval and opposition to this and all other leasing bills. I believe that the whole leasing program, when all of the bills shall have been passed, will result in a system in the public-land States which will keep these States from ever becoming full, complete Commonwealths. Each one will be part State and part Province, with no hope of change. So long as the Federal Government shall lease in 50-year periods the resources which lie in what is now the Federal part of the State of Washington—those leases subject to renewal—no future governor of that State may hope to be governor of the whole State. He will be, as now, governor of almost two-thirds. No future citizen may hope to see, even a hundred years hence, all of the resources taxed for the general welfare. That future citizen will see, as now, the income from the Federal resources of that State going to various Federal bureaus and a little sop handed back, the bulk having been used in overhead charges, which charges must constantly increase as the size and activities of the bureaus increase. Where we now have 10 agents, inspectors, surveyors, rangers, and other classes of agents, paid by the United States Government, running over that portion of the territory in the Western States still belonging to the United States Government, we will have 100 such agents.

Carry out the leasing system as this administration proposes to carry it out and the whole people of the United States, who boast that the best-governed people are the least-governed people, may never hope to get rid of the public-domain problem, which is costly, cumbersome, and forbidding, and which should at some future date come to an end.

I confidently believe that the bulk of the people in the district I have the honor to represent are sick and tired of that whole propaganda, which seeks to control federally forever that which every pioneer hoped would become part and parcel of his State. I doubt if the people of the United States, when they talk of their public domain out West—and it is, in truth, their domain—realize the enormous cost of Federal operation; nor do they realize the obstacles and obstructions thrown in the way of all who would enjoy the blessings which the United States pretends to hold out to those who would go upon the land.

If anyone doubts my statements, let him go to the minor offices in the Interior and Agricultural Departments and read the complaints. Let him see how the man who grazes 6 cattle has been hounded, while the company which grazes 16,000 has been favored and benefited—at actual Government loss—and this under one of these beneficent leasing systems.

Let him see how would-be settlers have been harassed. Let him decide for himself why that whole country, which was so prosperous and whose whole people were so hopeful, has languished.

Then perhaps he will understand why those who were fooled once by the high-sounding phrases of conservation are chary now of an everlasting lease system of everything in the public domain, from the water in the bed of the nonnavigable stream, which the State owns, to the rich rocks under the ground, for which few miners will prospect, inasmuch as their only reward is soon to be a lease.

If we are to become full, complete States, as we have hoped since we received our enabling acts, then the whole long-term leasing plan is wrong. If we are to remain, in part provinces, then—tell us so, and go to it. Tell us that we may never have taxes from the great untaxed resources and unused areas within the confines of what we thought were sovereign States.

We, who oppose this continued increase of Federal control, are used to assault. Every invective has been hurled at us. Last summer I attended an important conference in the Northwest where efforts were made by governors and others to discuss this leasing proposition from the standpoint of the West. After substantial addresses had been made by western men who had given great study to the subject we had the further pleasure of hearing ourselves called secessionists by employees of the United States, who in their rage at our hope that we might become in time free from their academic advice and their overbearing supervision, could think of no meaner nor more belittling charge.

The charge that monopoly will control is made. In the State of Washington a public utilities commission handles that phase of the problem and does it well. I believe that water-power companies are forbidden to make more than 6 per cent, and they are not given opportunity to inflate their stock. Is 6 per cent too much in a country where the banks pay 4 per cent for deposited money? In a mountainous country, too, where, as in the case of the Elwha Power Co., a dam went out, causing in a single night a loss of a couple of million of dollars. That company struggled valiantly for a long time against that loss. Now, it is bankrupt. That company hoped that the public domain in the reserve back of it might be brought into use. It has given up that hope.

This bill proposes to lease not the water, which the Government does not own, but the power-house sites, which the Government does own. The Government has us on the hip. We can not use the water without the sites. Therefore Congress, when it passes this bill, places a pistol at our heads and says, like a bandit, "Give up what you've got."

Then Congress proposes to base the lease price for the sites on the amount of horsepower available in the stream.

Next, this Ferris bill, taking for the Government this lease money, says, "We'll give it back to you—or a part of it—for reclamation purposes." Anyone familiar with the cost of governmental bureaucratic operations may guess about what proportion we will get back.

Very often the highwayman, after taking all of his victim's money and valuables, gives him back a car ticket with which to ride home. If this Government, desiring to help the States, were proposing by congressional act to let the States, through the control of the public-service commissions, make these leases and receive the bulk of the returns, how much better the taxpayers of the State would feel. The return also to the Federal Government would be safer, would be sure, and would not be dissipated among an array of additional Federal officeholders who will come onto the pay roll when this bill becomes a law.

The Western States have limited representation in Congress in proportion to their area and to the importance of these Federal problems, which bid fair, under leasing, never to end. As matters stand, this bill will pass. Our substitutes are not considered. Fortunately, some amendments have been added as a result of continued hammering by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and a few others who really know the West. The bill as about to be passed by this House is much better than the bill which did pass the last House and which failed in the Senate, and yet the advocates of last year's bill resented every effort to change it. So something has come from agitation and continued effort of its opponents, who realize that, representing Western States, they are but a small part of the total representation in this body. What we get is solely by the grace of the Members of the Eastern States, who, unfortunately, pay too little attention to this and other problems so vital to the Western States.

Members should remember that these forest-reserve lands, where are many of the power sites, are controlled by the Agricultural Department. The sites, however, are to be leased by the Interior Department. Thus will result the same thing over and over again that has been going on in regard to homestead and other rights where both the Agricultural Department and the Interior Department send rival agents to fight with each other at the expense of our people. I heard a speaker out West say that he thought that bureaucracy was the mildew on the heart of Democracy, and we know that to be true, for year in and year out since this new benevolent control by long distance of our progressive people has been going on, we have been suffering and suffering to the extreme.

In the city of Tacoma electric power is sold for one-half cent per kilowatt hour, and the municipal plant in that city regulates, I believe, the price of current in that part of the country. In the district I have the honor to represent I presume there is more unharnessed potential water power than in any other area in the United States. Thousands upon thousands of horsepower of that water power will continue to run unharnessed to the sea. This law will not invite capital, in my opinion. Under this law the Utopian dream of development will go on. If we get water-power development you get the proceeds. If we do not get development we get the promise of it about two generations ahead. But we believe that "an acre in Middlesex is worth a principality in Utopia," and we are tired of these theoretical nostrums.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, how does the time stand?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin has 8 minutes and the gentleman from Oklahoma 13 minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, as I heard my friend from Washington [Mr. MCARTHUR] bewailing the use of the water which belongs to the State by institutions under the control of the Federal Government, it occurred to me to wonder whether the gentleman understood that these water-power plants would consume the water flowing in the streams. It is my understanding that the water belonging to the State will continue to flow on its way undiminished and the water coming to the mouth of the stream will be there in the same quantity.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Is that any reason why the Federal Government should tax these particular water powers because they are not going to consume the water?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am simply answering another suggestion made. I do not understand there is to be a tax on the water in the stream, but the institution which makes use of the land at the side of the stream must pay the Government, which owns the land, for its use. A water-power site, I understand, of one concern in the West under private ownership is valued at $26,000,000, and the consumers of the power there manufactured, in effect, pay a tax upon that valuation, and it is no hardship to the consumers of the power developed upon these sites if they pay a reasonable rental to the Government.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS].

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, when the work of the Constitutional Convention was finished in Philadelphia, Benjamin Franklin declared it was not satisfactory to him, and probably was not to any member, but that it was a good deal better than anything else they had, and, therefore, he would sign it and adopt its meaning. I have noticed that the range of this debate has touched the extreme points. One side does not want it for one thing and another side does not want it because it does not do another thing. To some Members it goes too far; to others it does not go far enough. However, it is a better proposition by a good deal than what we have now. While I would not vote to have the Government go into hydroelectric development directly, neither would I vote to give unlimited opportunity to private capital without any restraint. I am willing to split the difference and permit the Government to lease the right under proper conditions, because I believe in developing the water power. The possibilities in this direction, especially in the West, are great. I think there is nothing in the future in the next 50 years that will see more remarkable development than electricity from the use of water power. When it can be utilized in our public lands, over which the Government has control, we ought to make it possible.

Whatever dangers might lurk in the monopolistic character of the power can be obviated by the provisions in the bill to retain Federal control, and whatever undue advantage might be taken by holders can be thwarted by the provision to reclaim the lease after 50 years. I shall vote for the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, first I want to answer the question asked by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], and which the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] did not have an opportunity to answer. I prefer to answer it because I think I can answer it a little more satisfactorily than he could, because of inadvertency on the part of the committee in reporting one amendment to the bill. It is not often that the gentleman from Wyoming makes a criticism against this bill that is well taken, but in that particular instance the gentleman, perhaps, was right in his assertion that, as the language stood, if one transmission line went across a State line, under the terms of the bill all of the power and service in the State came under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior. I want to say for the relief of the mind of the gentleman that the committee agreed on an amendment, and it will be offered on the floor—and it should have been in the bill—providing that the Secretary of the Interior shall only regulate such power as actually enters into interstate commerce, leaving all of the rest of it within the control of the public-service commission of the States, if they happen to have one.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. For a question.

Mr. MONDELL. The committee having amended in that respect, or proposing to amend, and having amended in another respect, what is left of the bill after you get through?

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, all of it is left. I only want to refer to one other matter, Mr. Chairman.

Very little, if anything, new has been brought out in this debate to-day, but I do want to refer to the statement made by the two gentlemen from Washington, Mr. HUMPHREY and Mr. JOHNSON. They bitterly complain against this policy that is provided in this bill. They say there is no question about the power of those States to take care of their own affairs and fully regulate them; that oppressive monopoly is absolutely impossible because of the care they take of the rights of their own people.

Mr. Chairman, at this water-power conference held at Portland last September, to which I referred the other day, two speeches made at that conference were by men representing great hydroelectric companies in the United States. One of them was by Mr. S. Z. Mitchell, of New York City, whose name can be found in a very large percentage of the directorships of the water-power corporations in the West. In the course of his speech at this conference he said:

> I do know, however, that some of them whose properties are peculiarly open to competition are rather anxious for the law to remain as it is or, in the alternative, have the Ferris bill pass without amendment, because they believe that is the safest way to perpetuate the monopoly which they now have.

If that is the case, have monopolies been fully regulated in those States? This is by a man who bitterly condemns this policy and takes the same position that the gentlemen from Washington do. In September, at that convention, Mr. Clyde Dawson, of Colorado, another gentleman representing also great water-power companies, made some reference to the State of Washington. In his speech before the water-power conference he used this language:

> From a practical standpoint the Stone and Webster interests, who were in control of the power development of the Puget Sound country, could well have afforded to pay a quarter of a million dollars a year for being protected in a monopoly they already had by the handicap which the regulations or permits put upon those seeking to develop power on Government land.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the debate has gone very far afield and must of necessity be confusing to those who have given little or no attention to water power. On the one hand we find the gentleman from New York, Mr. LONDON, a Socialist, who believes in Government ownership, is opposed to the granting of the term of 50 years with a proper retaking of the property to the people. On the other hand, we find the two genial gentlemen from the State of Washington, Mr. HUMPHREY and Mr. JOHNSON, apparently want to go back to the procedure prior to the act of February 15, 1901, when water-power sites went to patent at $1.25 an acre, and at times even less. The inference is only a fair one that the old law apparently was satisfactory to them. Prior to 1901 there was no law on the subject at all. As between those two gentlemen——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I would like to proceed for a few minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not think the gentleman should make that inference.

Mr. FERRIS. As to the correctness of this bill, I lean on the judgment of the best water-power students and thinkers in the United States. I lean on the Public Lands Committee. We gave long and extended attention to this subject; all agreed that a 50-year term is the proper length of term, provided we have a guarded recapture clause to get the property back at the end of the term, and we think that section 5 does that thing in a proper way. I am prepared to defend it, but I think it will need little defense when the time comes. Ex-Secretary Fisher, a clear-headed, patriotic man, a student of public questions, especially water power, a man charged with the administration of this very thing, during his incumbency in office said that 50 years was the correct term. He said so in the hearings. Secretary Lane, the present Secretary of the Interior, a student of the subject, a man charged with the present administration of it, said that is the correct term. He is able. He is acting for the public interest. He is seeking development. He wants to help the West, not retard it. Dr. George Otis Smith, head of the Geological Survey, a man who has given extended attention to water power, says that this is the correct term. The chief engineer of the Water Power Bureau of the Forest Service says 50 years is the correct term. Gifford Pinchot, president of the National Conservation Commission, who has given extended attention to this question, says that 50 years is the proper term and agrees with this bill.

The committee took 700 pages of testimony last year and invited the bankers to discuss this proposition, invited engineers who deal with this proposition, invited every possible source of information that they could get hold of to come before them, and they concluded unanimously that 50 years is the correct term.

Now, that being true, I think the committee is fairly safe in being trusted along the line of what is the correct term.

I now pass to the real question that is being contested here. Shall the Federal Government let these power sites go to patent, as the gentleman from Wyoming and the two gentlemen from Washington insist, so that there will be no bureaucracy, as they call it, and no Federal control, as they call it, so that the States may run their own business as they want to do? Or, on the other hand, shall the Federal Government reserve to itself the right to do for the benefit of the public interests the thing that ought to be done with its own property, viz, the right to regulate it, the right to control it, the right to protect the public from monopoly?

I belong to the Democratic Party. I live pretty well south; I live pretty well west; I live among people who believe in State rights and all that sort of thing. But, my friends, they hold between themselves and the fire the so-called State rights theory and try to protect themselves against the Government, who wants to assert its own rights in reference to its own property.

I should feel sorry and I should feel I was going amiss in my duty if I should ask the Congress to pass a law invading the rights of any State; but this bill does no such thing. This bill merely provides for the regulation of what? Land, water-power sites, that belong strictly to the Government. It is but the right to control what belongs to the Government. It should be an undoubted right by the western people. The courts have said what the rights of the General Government are. This goes no further.

I know that in the West, where 72.6 per cent of the water power is located, there is, by a few people, a great hand of protest held up against the Federal Government doing what? Regulating its own property. Now, what do we do? Should we go on and let these power sites, worth millions of dollars, go to patent as a part of a homestead, at $1.25 an acre? I think not. I do not believe any man from any State in this Union could be reelected to Congress, if the question were stripped of all these details, that voted for a proposition like that. I do not believe the State of Washington would return a Member of Congress of any party to this body who voted to turn the power sites yet remaining in that State over to private ownership and private monopoly.

Now, that is a pretty broad statement. Last summer they held a governors' conference out there, so called, but there were many people there besides the governors. No one elected them as delegates. They came on their own motion. Who came? The press out there says that it was a kind of a hand-picked affair, men resolving themselves into delegates to attend a convention. What for? To break down Federal control. What for? So that they can get title to these power sites for nothing; so they could escape regulation. We think the Congress will hardly follow such a self-constituted body.

I do not know what the will of the House may be, but I assume it will be this year just as it was last year. Last year when the debate opened on this proposition we heard these same speeches from these same gentlemen. We heard the same so-called State rights proposition carted in, and later we heard them carted out. We heard the same gentlemen malign and abuse the Government, saying that it was bureaucracy—Federal control. We heard the same invectives against the man who first made the withdrawal. We heard all of those things. And then, after the cobwebs were swept away and we got down to the proposition, the House did what it generally does, the sensible thing, namely, passed this bill by unanimous consent. There was not enough opposition to it after the noise subsided to even have a roll call, and there will not be this year.

Section 1 lays down what is an agreed proposition—the proper length of term. I now ask consideration of the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER], which looks well on its face, and offered, I know, with good intent, but which, if adopted, would put us right back where we are now. It would absolutely keep down any development. I hope the House will not agree to the amendment, because I think it does what he himself does not want to do, and I think if I had had the time to go over it with him a minute and present the hearings to him he would ask that it be not adopted. I had not seen the amendment before it was read, but I think the good judgment of the House and the committee would not have it adopted.

Hydroelectric power is only about 25 years old. The first plant was built out in Colorado in 1890. It has grown very fast. A few companies in the United States own practically all the water power as it now stands. Eighteen companies own practically all of it in the United States. The committee ought to be very careful. They ought to be careful, first, that they do not make these Government leases too onerous, otherwise there will be no development and Congress will be an aid to monopoly rather than a spoiler of monopoly. It is a subject that has to be studied and gone over carefully, and I hope the House will do as they did last year, trust the committee that has gone about it patriotically and earnestly. I hope they will trust the best authorities in the United States and follow the best conclusions about it, rather than follow the wild invective of Members here who talk more than they think. These several Members should have brought their matters to the committee and there let them be worked out. The matters here urged have all been considered and after consideration rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have my amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to have his amendment read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 1 by adding at the end thereof the following:
"And the leases hereby authorized and all subcontracts as to the management of said water power or the terms and conditions of the distribution of electrical energy, light, or heat shall be at all times subject to any legislation which may be passed by the United States, whether by amendment of this act or otherwise, and shall be expressly so stated to be subject in said leases and contracts."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that there is another amendment.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The amendment is to the next section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin will send up his amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Clerk has it at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 5, after the words "Secretary of the Interior" insert a comma and the words "for a like period."

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe the chairman has no objection to this amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. I have no objection to it. The committee made the extension.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That each lease made in pursuance of this act shall provide for the diligent, orderly, and reasonable development and continuous operation of the water power, subject to market conditions, and shall provide that the lessee shall at no time contract for the delivery to any one consumer of electrical energy in excess of 50 per cent of the total output.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Insert, after the word "output," in line 15, section 2, the following: "Except upon the written consent of the Secretary of the Interior."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the committee amendment?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington object?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I thought you were reading a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk was reading the latter part of section 2. The committee amendment is on lines 15 and 16. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin——

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. To strike out the last word. The gentleman from Wisconsin, a few moments ago, read from a portion of a speech by Mr. Dawson, to show that in the State of Washington we were suffering from monopoly. It so happened that I was present and heard Mr. Dawson make that speech, and I knew the monopoly to which he referred.

I will read another sentence or two from that speech:

I know what is the matter with the State of Washington. It is not the fact that we want or need more law. It is the fact that the administrative bureaus of Washington will not permit action under the present law.

Then he stated what the gentleman from Wisconsin read. It was this:

It was said that Mr. Pinchot was doing this to protect the people against monopoly.

That is what they always say. They are always talking about "protecting the people against monopoly." Then he continues:

But from a practical standpoint the Stone & Webster interests, who were in control of the power development in the Puget Sound country, could well have afforded to pay a quarter of a million dollars a year for being protected in the monopoly they already had by the handicap which the regulations or permits put upon those seeking to develop power on Government lands.

That is, they are protected by these Government regulations or permits. I know what Mr. Dawson was talking about at that particular time. There is a company that was trying to develop a power on the Skagit River to compete with Stone & Webster. Some of the land necessary to the development of that power has been held by the Government for years. The Government has held it up, and they can not develop that power and compete with Stone & Webster.

Stone & Webster could well afford to pay a quarter of a million dollars a year to have this bill that you are now considering written on the statute books. The Stone & Webster people already have their plants. The General Government can not tax them. They are beyond the Government's control. These other people that want to compete with them can not get a permit, and if they do they have to pay an additional tax to the Government, and that gives an advantage to the Stone & Webster people.

If this legislation does anything in the way of monopoly, it perpetuates that monopoly, and it is just exactly as it was said here about Mr. Pinchot; you are doing it all in the name of the people, but constantly you are doing it in favor of the very ones whom you denounce. You hear Stone & Webster denounced on this floor, and yet this legislation is in their interest.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the gentleman agree with the statement of Mr. Dawson that the Stone & Webster Co. now have a monopoly in the State of Washington and could well afford to pay a quarter of a million dollars a year for being protected in their monopoly?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I say they could well afford to pay $250,000 a year for the Government to take the attitude which it has taken.

Mr. LENROOT. But if they have the regulation that the gentleman contends for, how could they afford to pay $250,000 a year to perpetuate their monopoly?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Well, I have tried to explain it two or three times. Now, to give you a specific instance, the Government will not permit competitive properties to be developed. You want to throw one more obstacle in the way.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington withdraws his pro forma amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the committee having this bill in charge heard all those who desired to be heard last year, when the same bill was before the committee. That bill was reported, and as all Members know, it passed the House and went to the Senate, where an amendment was placed upon it, and the matter stood there without final action.

Some nine months have passed. The House committee again took up this bill for hearing and investigation and to make such amendments thereto as they might determine upon as wise, with a view to reporting it to the House, hearing those who desired to be heard; and it seems to me that it is a wise piece of legislation, viewed from all angles. The committee have placed a few amendments upon the bill that round it out better than it was before, having placed one in particular upon it which emphasizes the fact that this is nothing more nor less than a contract by the proprietor of the land, directing and placing upon these contracts of lease such proper condition as may be desired to place upon them for the use of the lands. That is directly and specifically provided for in the bill.

It seems to me that it is a late day now for gentlemen from any State who had the opportunity to appear before the committee, who had the opportunity to present the facts before the House, to charge the entire membership of the House of Representatives with being in favor of and interested with and working for the Stone & Webster hydroelectric interests.

Now, I know that the committee would have been delighted, if the gentlemen from Washington had had any such information, to have had them present it to the committee. The mere statement now that some one institution that has been attempting to control and has, during the last eight or nine years, by virtue of the revocable permit, controlled, and that the department has held up these many applications that have been legitimately pending, wherein large capital desired to enter the field for the purpose of developing hydroelectric power, would not justify gentlemen in now saying that this legislation is in behalf of such organizations or corporations.

It seems to me that gentlemen must know that this bill, properly carried out, with proper regulations formulated under this law, will make it certain that those who apply to the Secretary and comply with these rules and regulations, with a nominal and reasonable royalty and with the opportunity to be in absolute control of their property for 50 years, are going to expend large sums of money in developing the water powers of the West that are so much needed. If there is any possible objection, it is by those who have developed their plants now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] be permitted to address the committee for five minutes on another subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] be permitted to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman—which I do not intend to do—will the gentlemen over there have any objection to closing debate on this paragraph at the end of that speech?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to offer quite a lot of amendments relative to the profits that I spoke of and the keeping of accounts.

Mr. FERRIS. They come on this section, do they?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes; they come on this section.

Mr. FERRIS. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I want sufficient time to present them all. Say, five minutes in all. I shall not probably take more than a minute to say what I have to say. I can almost state them in brief as they are read. I would like to make a short statement on each, not using probably more than one minute on each.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration——

Mr. TOWNER. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Why can we not get through with my amendment first?

Mr. FERRIS. I think we can agree upon this, which will facilitate time. I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of 20 minutes——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] wanted five minutes. Did you include that?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. And I want at least 10 minutes. I have eight amendments, and certainly one minute apiece is not too much time.

Mr. FERRIS. Then I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of 35 minutes all debate close on this paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. LANGLEY. I thought it had closed.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. How much time do I get on my amendments?

Mr. FERRIS. I thought the gentleman asked for 10 minutes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I will not waste the time. I think I shall probably not take over a minute on each amendment, but I want to distribute the time among the various amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first put the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania have five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. In lieu of that, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of 35 minutes, 5 of which shall go to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto shall close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that 35 minutes be devoted to this paragraph.

Mr. FERRIS. And all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. And all amendments thereto; and that at the expiration of that time a vote be taken on the amendments, and that five minutes of that time be given to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, as the result of our legislative experience in this House we learn that it is not always the wisest thing in debate to say the sharpest things. Some things of a personal nature carry a sting and reflect at times upon the speaker who gives them utterance. I have no thought that either of the two gentlemen to whom I may refer had any desire to wound the feelings of the other, and yet in the address made a short time ago by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] certain things were said, in the heat of debate, of course, and due to the zeal of the gentleman from Wisconsin in the interest of his constituency, which might be interpreted as unjustly reflecting upon the military record as well as the courage of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]. Now, it happens that I do not fully agree with all of the arguments of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]. I do not quite believe that the people of this country want war. I am not prepared to go quite so far as he does as to our attitude toward certain belligerents. I do not go fully into agreement with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] in all that he said, and yet I can thoroughly understand why he should defend that splendid constituency of his out yonder in Wisconsin.

But, as a matter of congressional history, I recall that at one time during a heated discussion in the House Gen. Bingham, of my own State of Pennsylvania, a member of the Appropriations Committee, was referred to by some one upon the other side, hastily and hotly, as "a tin soldier." Subsequently, in justice to the general, who was one of the most modest of men, another Member of the House, who knew of his splendid service, produced the military record, which at once proved that not only was the general not a "tin soldier," but one of the most gallant and courageous of the soldiers of the Republic, one who had been more than once wounded and who had the proud distinction of serving at Gettysburg upon the staff of the superb Hancock. An apology was in order and was promptly given.

I recall, too, a story in connection with service in the Spanish-American War, which ought to be known to all the Members of the House. Over upon the other side sits our friend, the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. HUMPHREYS. On this side, a few years ago, sat the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. Ames. Mr. HUMPHREYS as a child stood in the executive mansion of the State of Mississippi, of which his father was governor. He had the misfortune to see his father driven away from the capital of Mississippi by the father of Mr. Ames, then Gen. Ames, in charge of the United States forces at that place. Subsequently, Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi enlisted in the Spanish-American War. After that service he was mustered out with honor with the rank of lieutenant. He came into this House to find here, on the Republican side, Butler Ames, the son of the man who had driven his father from the Mississippi capital. Without knowing it, they had served together under the same flag in the Spanish-American War. Both had served faithfully and been discharged with honorable records. Such men help to reunite, as the Spanish-American War helped to reunite, the people of our country. Therefore, instead of minimizing the service of those who engaged in the Spanish-American War, perhaps, we should give them our full meed of praise. We have many of them about us here: Col. CRAGO, of Pennsylvania, who served in the Philippines; and our friend Lieut. GREENE, of Vermont, who did not get farther than Chickamauga—and I am told that Chickamauga, for a time, was worse than the front; also, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER], who now stands at the head of the Spanish-American War Veterans in this country. Perhaps it is well that we should speak not too severely of those who served in that war.

However, in justice to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], with whom I do not wholly agree in his war arguments, and in fairness to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], to whose zeal and earnestness I have already referred, I take occasion to say that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] was not an idler when we needed men in the service of the United States in 1898. He went forward promptly to the front. He made a record of which any man in the service of the United States might well be proud. I learned of this service accidentally through Gen. Hulings, late a Member of this House. Gen. Hulings was commander of the gallant Sixteenth Pennsylvania. Over yonder in the island of Porto Rico when a battle was on, he told me, he needed a guide—someone to get a message to the commander of a battalion that was to head off the Spaniards. It was absolutely necessary for him to reach this officer. He told GARDNER he needed a volunteer. There was no horse except one white horse in sight anywhere. A white horse in that country was like a target, but GARDNER, of Massachusetts, volunteered. He mounted the white horse and in the face of the enemy dashed along the mountainous road and conveyed the message of the colonel of the regiment to the major and came back safely; the day was won for the American forces. [Applause.]

The fact is recorded here in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 20, 1902, among the nominations forwarded by the President of the United States to the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask for one minute more in order to complete this record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks that his time be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In this official record forwarded by the President of the United States appears this very brief statement, and with it I will close, because it seems to me that it makes the record complete. Nominated by the President:

TO BE MAJOR, BY BREVET.

Capt. AUGUSTUS P. GARDNER, assistant adjutant general, United States Volunteers, for gallantry in action at Coamo, P. R., August 9, 1898, to rank from that date.

That is the record, gentlemen, the particulars of which I had direct from Gen. Hulings. The gentleman offered his services to his country when the call to duty came, and I am quite sure that no one would intentionally question his patriotism or his courage. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak for five minutes on a subject other than that before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to speak for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. That would be extending the time five minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I yield my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think I am the most surprised Member of the House at the remarks made by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE]. I did not know until he spoke that my remarks were susceptible of any direct personal reflection upon the military record of my college friend the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]. I assume that the gentleman from Pennsylvania is speaking at his instance. If the gentleman from Massachusetts takes offense at anything I have said in the debate as reflecting upon his military record, I wish now to disclaim any such intention. I have read again the official report of my remarks, and I see nothing in that report which casts any odium or reflection directly upon the military record of my heretofore friend, and I hope my continued friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts. In making those remarks I had nothing in my mind which would reflect upon his military career, but, speaking generally, I referred to some instances with which I was acquainted. I knew nothing about the record of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and my only purpose was in resenting the charge he made deliberately against a large body of German-Americans, charging them with being enemies of the Republic or being conspirators in an attempt to blow up munition plants. That was my only purpose, and I again say that if in my impromptu remarks I made any reflection upon the gentleman from Massachusetts, as to his military record, I regret it. [Applause.]

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I offer the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of section 2 the following:

"And each such lease shall provide that detailed accounts shall be kept of construction and operation in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and annual statements thereof filed on such day as he may order, so that the totals of every branch of the business may be ascertained at any time."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, as to that, I have only to say that I hope this will be accepted by the committee. They have already provided that the books shall be open, and this only provides how they shall be kept so that they can be understood.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, section 11 of the bill I think fully accomplishes what the gentleman from New Jersey seeks to do, and in addition to that we have section 13, which gives the Secretary full power to work the whole thing out.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. If that is the case, Mr. Chairman, I wish to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey withdraws his amendment.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer amendment No. 2.

The Clerk read as follows:

Also, add the following:

"And each such lease shall provide that all profits on the original cost of the plant in excess of cumulative annual profits at a rate and per cent of such cost to be fixed in said lease shall be annually divided among the consumers of electrical energy, according to the amounts paid by each consumer in the year."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, this is the central point of the suggestion that I make. With a monopoly we always run the risk, although it is created for the public benefit, of giving all of the profits to the person who holds it. I believe that his profits should be liberal, even up to 25 per cent a year, or perhaps to three times what he has put in—I do not care what, if it be certain. But I do not want to see this bill made the foundation for reorganizations which increase capital to 20 times the original investment, as we have all seen at times. I believe that this is a principle that will finally have to be applied to all such public undertakings, and I therefore urge upon the House that they open the door to this system by making the simple statement, that profits shall be limited to a certain amount each year—25 per cent, if you please, we need not care what it is, but have some limit, so that the surplus shall be distributed and turned back to those who pay the rates.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey I know is offered in the very best of faith. I believe in the first place, it will be unworkable, and in the second place, I believe it would prevent any development out there, which is very much desired. In the third place, I believe it would call for a covering up of profits to the extent that never could be realized on. I hope that the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, in reply, I say it will not stop the enterprise if the limit be put high enough. You can make it even 25 per cent a year, if you please. As to covering up all profits, the amendments I propose to offer, if this be adopted, provide that the lessee shall not spend too much in salaries and shall deal only with the consumer. These clauses would provide against what the gentleman has in mind. If this amendment be rejected, the other amendments to which I refer will have to go, except the last one which I have offered, because the others depend upon this. But it is the key of the situation. It will enable us to govern by law and not by commissions.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer the last of these amendments, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, at the end of section 2, the following:
"And such lease shall provide that rates for electricity shall be equal in each locality, according to the quantity used or lost and the cost of connection, and shall be fairly apportioned as to different localities."

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I have but a word to say. Section 2 already provides that not over 50 per cent of the electrical power shall be leased to one person. Another section of the bill provides that rates shall not be raised. Why not provide also that rates shall be equal to all? These lessees are to supply the public. If they reduce rates to one, they ought to reduce to another. They should not make some people special favorites. The idea of public service is equality of rates throughout.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PARKER of New Jersey) there were—ayes 18, noes 55.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The debate has made it very clear that there is a wide difference of opinion in regard to the provisions of this bill, but I had hoped that in the expression of that wide division of opinion no gentleman would feel called upon to impugn the motives or question the motives of those who differed from him. I feel so honest in regard to this matter that if I were possessed of an inclination to think harshly of my colleagues I might be inclined to think that they, with deliberate intent, proposed to create conditions that they know would be onerous and harmful, that instead of preventing monopoly would create it, because I believe the provisions of the bill would have that effect. Therefore, if I were disposed to think evil of the motives that prompt men, I might, within parliamentary limits, express the opinion that gentlemen were not prompted by the best of motives. But I have never been inclined to feel that was true of any Member of the House. I believe that, wide as our differences are, they are generally almost without exception honest differences. These remarks are suggested by something said by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], generally very temperate and fair in what he says. His words, as I recall them, were these. Referring to those of us on this side who do not approve the substitution of Federal for local control, he said: "Gentlemen oppose this under the pretense of opposition to Federal control, because, as a matter of fact, they are opposed to any public control of public-utility corporations," and so forth.

I do not feel personally offended by that statement, because I am conscious of the rectitude of my motive. But it was applied to all of the gentlemen who take the position that many of us do in regard to this bill, expressed as the opinion of the gentleman from Kentucky of our attitude. There is not a gentleman on this side who does not believe in public control of public-utility corporations. The State which I have the honor to represent has a commission to control these affairs, and I had something to do with encouraging and promoting the legislation that brought it into being. All of the Western States have commissions of that kind save one. The Western States are fortunate in this that in the matter of control of water-power development the State ownership or the people's ownership of the water gives them unquestioned control over their use of it. So that while there might be a denial of the right of the public to control in all respects in a region of riparian rights there can not be a question, never has been a question, of the right of the public to control the use of the water in the land where water is used by appropriation—by an appropriation of an individual or a corporation—from the State, under control of the State in every possible way. I am personally fortunate in the discussion of this bill, because it so happens that there is little water-power development in my State up to date. Our coal and oil are so cheap that there has been no considerable demand or reason for such development. So far as I recall, no citizen of my State has ever discussed the matter of this power bill with me, nor have I discussed it with my people except in a most general way in speeches in the State. So far as I know, there is not a citizen in the State who has taken an active interest in the bill, nor has anyone outside the State who has interests in the State discussed the matter with me.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That in case of the development, generation, transmission, and use of power or energy under such a lease in a Territory, or in two or more States, the regulation and control of service and of charges for service to consumers and of the issuance of stock and bonds by the lessee is hereby conferred upon the Secretary of the Interior or committed to such body as may be provided by Federal Statute: Provided, That the physical combination of plants or lines for the generation, distribution, and use of power or energy under this act or under leases given hereunder may be permitted, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, but combinations, agreements, arrangements, or understandings, express or implied, to limit the output of electrical energy, to restrain trade with foreign nations or between two or more States or within any one State, or to fix, maintain, or increase prices for electrical energy or service, are hereby forbidden.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 20, strike out the words "service and all charges for service to consumers" and insert the words "so much of the service and of charges for service to consumers as constitutes commerce between the States or in such territory."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, this is the amendment I referred to in reply to the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. This amendment was agreed to in the committee when the bill was considered, but through inadvertence was not reported with the bill. The purpose is merely to make clear in the section that the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior to control service and rates where a portion of the plant enters into interstate commerce shall be limited only to that portion of the service and charges which do constitute interstate commerce.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I do.

Mr. MONDELL. The amendment does not in any way modify the power of the Secretary of the Interior over the issuance of stocks and bonds.

Mr. LENROOT. It does not. In reply to that I will say it does not attempt to change the provisions of the bill in any respect in reference to the control over the issuance of stocks and bonds, because in that respect there can not be a dual authority; one or the other must control—exactly the situation we had in the legislation that passed a previous Congress with reference to the control of stocks and bonds of railroad corporations.

A portion of the operation of almost every railroad is interstate commerce, and another portion is intrastate commerce; and, as I stated in general debate the other day, while opinions differ as to the power of Congress to control the entire issuance of stocks and bonds, which was fully argued upon the floor of this House, this House has at least on two occasions, I think, asserted the power by passing a bill which provides for that very thing; and that is all that this bill seeks to do, so far as stocks and bonds are concerned.

So far as rates and service are concerned this amendment will leave to every utility commission, where the State has a utility commission, full power and control over rates and service on that portion of the service that is confined within the State, or, in other words, in intrastate commerce, but will leave to the Secretary of the Interior control over that portion of the service and charges which actually enters into interstate commerce.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Will the gentleman please define what he understands the term "interstate commerce" to mean in reference to this subject under discussion?

Mr. LENROOT. Well, a transmission line crossing a State line, the power developed in one State and used in another would be interstate commerce, in my judgment.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Under the gentleman's amendment I take it that after the line passes into a State from another State that the public utility commission of the State into which it passes would have control over the fixing of rates and services?

Mr. LENROOT. Not of that portion of current that passes from one State into another State.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I still seem not to make myself clear.

Mr. LENROOT. If the current is generated and used solely within one State, the State commission will have full authority to control. If the current is generated in one State and crosses the State line and is used in another State, it then becomes interstate commerce exactly in the same way transportation upon a railroad becomes interstate commerce, and in that case would be controlled by the Secretary of the Interior.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I would ask that the gentleman's time be extended for a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Wisconsin be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, how much time is desired over there?

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would ask unanimous consent, at the expiration of 15 minutes, that the debate close on section 3.

Mr. MONDELL. I have another amendment to offer, I will say to the gentleman, and I would like to discuss that a little.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman want five minutes on that?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that, at the expiration of 15 minutes, 10 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Wyoming and 5 by myself, the debate on this section close.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Then I ask that debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] None is heard.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Is it the gentleman's understanding that the term "interstate commerce" as used in reference to electric current would have the same significance as commerce would have when used on our railroads?

Mr. LENROOT. I would think so.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, last year when a similar bill was before the House I discussed this section at some length and called attention to a condition of affairs created by it which I do not think could be successfully defended. I made a somewhat extended criticism of some provisions in the discussion under general debate, but not until to-day have I heard any suggestion of a change or a modification of the provisions of the section touching those matters which I criticized. Now we have a proposed change in the form of an amendment which will profoundly affect the bill, and which, it seems to me, goes directly to the definition of interstate commerce as defined in connection with this bill. The bill, as it stood, attempted through a plan of contract, or as it stands now, for that matter, to give the Federal Government a certain power, control, authority, and opportunity to tax which it could not secure otherwise, and then when it came to the matter of regulation the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution was invoked, and it was claimed that as the current crossed a State line the operation became interstate commerce. In answer to the question asked by the gentleman from Minnesota a moment ago, the gentleman from Wisconsin said that the operations under this bill were interstate commerce in the same sense that railway operations were, in which event when a current was passed across a State line the entire operation would become interstate commerce. That is the effect on a railroad, and if the application of the interstate-commerce theory were the same, then this entire operation would become interstate commerce, and that is the theory on which the committee has been proceeding up to this moment. And the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has taken me to task, as well as a number of other gentlemen, because I presumed to suggest that if a company passed a wire across a State line, possibly for the purpose of escaping local regulation, we should not pass a law which enabled them by so doing to escape local regulation.

Now, we have an amendment which largely remedies that, and provides that though a current may cross a State line the State law continues to control, except that the State into which the current passes shall lose the control it would otherwise have over that current, and the Secretary of the Interior has the authority under the amendment to fix the rate on the current so passed across the State line. That is the condition of affairs corrected in the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. No. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will yield, yes; because I am anxious to understand it.

Mr. LENROOT. It puts it exactly in the same situation as a railroad. If a railroad becomes interstate, all its operations do not all come under Federal control. The gentleman knows that is true. The business of the railroad in a State is under State control and the portion that is in interstate commerce is under Federal control, exactly the same condition that there is here.

Mr. MONDELL. And yet under the theory that is held until this moment, you have been proposing under the interstate-commerce clause, as you say——

Mr. LENROOT. Not at all. The gentleman must not gather that because the words "commerce between the States" are used we are invoking the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution——

Mr. MONDELL. What is the gentleman invoking?

Mr. LENROOT (continuing). As one of the conditions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent that I have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that he have five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman has 10 minutes. If he uses 10 minutes now, it will not leave him time to debate his second amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. If that is the best arrangement that the gentleman can make.

Mr. FERRIS. Use your five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Very well.

Mr. FERRIS. Not to extend the total now, but he wants to use his 10 minutes now.

Mr. MONDELL. The proposed amendment very profoundly affects the bill. It meets or partly meets one of the most serious objections to the bill.

I have frequently called attention to a condition which might arise under the bill without this amendment, under which a great power plant, chancing to occupy a little of the public domain, by passing a pole line over the State border would pass from State control. This section of the bill provided, until the moment this amendment was offered and as it was once passed by the House and defended by this committee, that the moment any current crossed the State line, if it did not go more than a rod over the State line and if it only was sufficient to start one glim, it would take from the State public utility commission or from the county authorities or municipal authorities the power to fix rates and practices, and so forth. It would take from them the control over the entire plant and all of its enormous operations.

Now, this amendment changes all of that, so that only the part of the current crossing the State line comes under the control of the Secretary of the Interior. So far as the State in which the power is generated is concerned, it very largely remedies one of the most serious defects and one of the pronounced evils of the bill. But how about the other State? If the State in which the power is generated is, in the opinion of the sponsors of the measure, competent to fix rates and practices, why not the State into which a part of the current passes? Why should the Secretary of the Interior have control of that which might be a very small proportion of the entire development of the plant when the balance is retained in the control of the people of the State?

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. Might not the State in which the current was first generated object to the control of the prices by the State into which the current passed, and does not the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] define a remedy for any conflict of opinion between the two States, by leaving it with the Secretary of the Interior to regulate?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know as there is any more likelihood of a conflict between two States than between one State and the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior may be a gentleman who may be more readily gotten along with than the authorities of a State of the Union or he may not.

But that does not necessarily follow. The amendment, however, does profoundly affect the bill. It affects it so profoundly that it takes a large part of the Federal control from the bill and leaves no Federal control over rates whatever in the bill except in the State of Utah, until they provide a public-utilities commission; and except as to current that may be transmitted across a State line from a plant on the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, the law, I think, is well settled in this country with regard to the line of demarcation between the control of interstate and intrastate as commerce, between the General Government and the States. If it shall be determined that the commerce is interstate, then the regulation is exclusively in the General Government. If it is intrastate, such commerce is within the control of the State.

It should be noted, however, by the committee that no statement of the bill as to whether it shall or shall not constitute interstate commerce will govern. That will be determined by the courts, no matter what the terms of the bill may be. It is not within the province of Congress to determine whether or not a certain thing is or is not interstate commerce. Congress can not determine in advance, or interpret in advance, the Constitution, which places the authority over interstate commerce with Congress.

This amendment is perfectly in accordance with the law as it has been interpreted by the courts. It leaves with the Government of the United States the control of that which is interstate commerce. It commits to the States the regulation of corporations which operate utilities whose scope of operation is entirely within the State.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that there ought to be no complaint made, especially by gentlemen who are to be benefited by this change.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentlemen who are going to be benefited are for it. That is, their constituents are going to be benefited by it.

Mr. TOWNER. It seems to me that the gentleman from Wyoming, instead of complaining of the offering of this amendment, ought to be grateful to the gentleman who has offered it.

Mr. MONDELL. I am.

Mr. TOWNER. And ought to be here supporting it. In spite of that, I can recall no words uttered by the gentleman from Wyoming commendatory of the amendment, although it makes clear that the States shall have the right to control the utilities within their borders. This is in harmony with the law as it exists; not that we could change it if we desired to do so, but certainly we ought to endeavor to make our legislation conform to established law.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman from Iowa think the gentleman from Wyoming should exhibit any unholy joy when the ultraconservationists are surrendering all the sacred principles of their bill? Does the gentleman think we ought to contain ourselves and be satisfied without expressing our satisfaction?

Mr. TOWNER. If the gentleman will pardon me, that is his great delusion. The gentleman believes that any endeavor on the part of anybody to make any law with regard to the control of any of the public lands or utilities in any of the lands within the Western States is an invasion of the State's established right. I believe that this bill is of benefit to the people of the gentleman's State and of every other Western State. I believe that this is not an act to tie up their energies or will withhold their benefits from their people. I believe that in the years to come the gentleman from Wyoming and those people whom the gentleman represents will be glad that this bill has been enacted into law, not that it is perfect in its terms but because, on the whole, it is as good a bill as we can perhaps secure for the determination of a question that should be determined by law. It is because it has not been determined by law heretofore that the utilities within those States have not been used as they ought to have been. It has been because there has been no law defining and determining these rights that there has been an insufficient or an arrested development of the resources of the States. When it shall be known what the law is and what the rights are that may be acquired under it, then these tremendous energies that the gentleman talks about so eloquently will be made available to the people of the West under, I think, reasonable laws and restrictions. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That except upon the written consent of the Secretary of the Interior no sale or delivery of power shall be made to a distributing company, except in case of an emergency, and then only for a period not exceeding 30 days, nor shall any lease issued under this act be assignable or transferable without such written consent: Provided, however, That no lessee under this act shall create any lien upon any power project developed under a permit issued under this act by mortgage or trust deed, except approved by the Secretary of the Interior and for the bona fide purpose of financing the business of the lessee. Any successor or assign of such property or project, whether by voluntary transfer, judicial sale, foreclosure sale, or otherwise, shall be subject to all the conditions of the approval under which such rights are held, and also subject to all the provisions and conditions of this act to the same extent as though such successor or assign were the original lessee hereunder.

With committee amendments, as follows:

Page 4, lines 20 and 21, strike out the words "voluntary transfer."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, what is the reason for striking out the words "voluntary transfer"? Would not that leave it so that if there should be a voluntary transfer there would be no control over the subject at all?

Mr. FERRIS. The thought of the committee was that voluntary transfer in this connection, dealing with the involuntary sale, was out of place. We believed that the language in line 15 down to the period on line 19, and the forepart of the section, dealt with the voluntary, and this particular language with only the involuntary part of it.

Mr. MANN. Very well.

Mr. FERRIS. I think you will find that that is the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 22, strike out the word "approval" and insert in lieu thereof the word "lease."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, now that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has been adopted, and it is safe to express an opinion in regard to it, I want to say that it was a wise and valuable amendment. It takes out of the bill most of the Federal control on which the gentlemen who have been insisting upon this class of legislation have been pluming themselves.

There remains now, as I said a moment ago, only Federal control in Utah until Utah shall provide a public-service commission. There remains only Federal control, so far as rates are concerned, over current that may be passed into one State from another; otherwise we now have local control—the proper kind of control.

It has taken a long time to get the gentlemen to understand how iniquitous the provisions of their bill were, but they are gradually coming to realize it.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] a moment ago made a statement that was a surprise to me, considering what an intelligent man he is, how bright and generally accurate. He said that we of the West, and I personally, objected to any sort of control over public lands anywhere. The gentleman must know that that is not true. We have been legislating here for many years for control over the public domain, and it happened to be the good fortune of the gentleman from Wyoming to have had a good deal to do with considerable of the legislation now on the statute books that does largely control public lands, and in a very proper way. I have never had to apologize for any legislation that I favored, or any that I opposed, for that matter, touching the public domain.

The committee is finally realizing what an awful injustice was proposed when it started out in its bill of last year, which it pushed through this House, raising the bogy man of monopoly, and which it introduced again in the same form this year, only to amend it on the floor after undergoing persistent hammering. The committee is to be congratulated that at last it is seeing the light. One by one the trenches occupied by its long line of conservation have been abandoned. They started in by scaring the people into a fear of monopoly and combination, and they got to discussing the matter of monopoly and combination until they became so familiar with their bogy man that, as some great poet once said—or was it somebody in Scripture? [laughter]—having become familiar with it they finally embraced it, and are now all for combination, provided the combination is properly controlled. They are now quite right about that. They still insisted that, for fear that the people of the several States of the Union would allow themselves to be sandbagged and held up and throttled and robbed by their own corporations, they must be controlled by a clerk down here in the sub-basement of the Interior Department. But after it had been hammered in on them so long that they realized what an injustice, what a crying crime it would be under our Government to take from the people local control over their own corporations, because a power company to escape local control passes a current across a State line—after that had been hammered in on them with sufficient frequency and emphasis, the gentlemen came in with an amendment relinquishing all this Federal control except as to the attenuated line that may cross the border of a State. As to the balance, the State still controls since the adoption of the amendment. Of course if anyone from a public-land State had offered the amendment, the gentlemen would have all voted against it. We are content they have seen fit to offer it.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Wyoming is a good deal like the country school-teacher who went to apply for a school and was asked whether he taught that the earth was round or flat. He replied that he could teach it either way, according as the school trustees desired. [Laughter.] Only a few moments ago in a very spirited speech the gentleman from Wyoming spoke 10 minutes in opposition to the amendment. Now, amidst great eulogy and self-confidence, he approves of what the committee did in adopting it. If anyone can follow such logic as that, he can do better than I can.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman did not get the fine distinction made by the gentleman from Wyoming. He said now that the danger was all past he would speak in favor of the amendment. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment being withdrawn, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 2, strike out the word "three" and insert the word "five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, lines 4 and 5, after the word "right," insert the words "after the expiration of the lease."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 20, after the word "instituted," insert the words "for that purpose."

The amendment was agreed to.

Page 5, line 21, strike out the word "district."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am under the impression that to strike out the word "district" would be a mistake. The name of the court is the district court.

Mr. FERRIS. I think the gentleman is right about that.

Mr. MANN. It is not referred to simply as the United States court for the district, but it is the United States district court for a certain district.

Mr. FERRIS. I think the gentleman is right about that.

Mr. MANN. Then let us disagree to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, which has been read.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 21, after the word "court," strike out the words "for that purpose" and insert the words "for the district in which said property or some part thereof is situated."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That in the event the United States does not exercise its right to take over, maintain, and operate the properties as provided in section 5 hereof, or does not renew the lease to the original lessee upon such terms and conditions and for such periods as may be authorized under the then existing applicable laws, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, upon the expiration of any lease under this act, to lease the properties of the original lessee to a new lessee upon such terms, under such conditions, and for such periods as applicable laws may then authorize, and upon the further condition that the new lessee shall pay for the properties as provided in section 5 of this act.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This is the section which provides for the so-called recapture of the plant at the expiration of the period of 50 years.

I know that just at this time it is not at all popular to talk against the very popular notion of recapture. I do not expect many to agree with me in my views upon that particular matter, but I have not yet been able to understand how the people are to be benefited by a provision of that kind. The only interest that the people have in power development is to secure the best service at the best possible rate. It is immaterial to the people served who owns the plant, whether it belongs to one corporation or another or to Tom, Dick, or Harry. Their interest is in the service. Now, if a plant is under efficient public control, as it should be—and public control is becoming more efficient all the time in this country—the rate will be the lowest and the service the best when the title is least disturbed. If a plant having been erected is to continue indefinitely in a certain ownership unless transferred voluntarily, the corporation or individual owning it coming before a public-service commission can make no claim of a right to fix a rate based largely upon the necessity of amortizing losses that are sure to come at a given time. If the property is to continue indefinitely in the same ownership there are no losses except those of deterioration or accident, and the amount to be added to the rates to cover such losses as those is small. But when there is a date in the future when the property is to be taken over, and particularly when taken over under conditions fixed in this bill, then any public-service corporation operating under these conditions may and will come before public-service commissions claiming that there is a time set, a fixed day when there is to be a definite loss, and that it is the right of the corporation to amortize the loss and add it to the amount charged for the service. That will, of course, add to the cost of the current, and therefore I can not see that the people are served or benefited by a provision for recapture, particularly by one involving a loss to the owners.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of five minutes all debate on this section be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that at the end of five minutes debate on this section be closed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma if he thinks the language in the first four lines of this section, page 5, covers all the contingencies that I think the section intends to cover in regard to what may happen. Suppose that within 2 years and 11 months prior to the expiration of the lease a condition arises so that the company gets into difficulty, where all parties desire to have the Government take it over. Is it necessary to have this long notice so that it would absolutely preclude the Government under any circumstances from taking over the property unless it gave three years' notice?

Mr. FERRIS. We do that on the testimony and facts which we had before the committee that with the expenditure of so large an amount of money, in nearly every case aggregating more than a million dollars, they ought to have a sufficient time to shift and adjust themselves to what they knew was coming in the end, and we thought that 3 years on a 50-year lease was not too much.

We found that we made a mistake last year in the bill when we required three years' notice. That would require the Government to give the notice on a certain day, and so we changed it and required from three years to five years' notice, so that the Government may have two years in which to make up its mind.

Mr. BENNET. I agree that there should be a lengthy notice. That part of it is all right; but my question is whether or not there ought not to be some leeway in justice to the corporation as well as to the Government, so that if conditions changed, so that if the corporation itself changed, there might be some discretion somewhere and not be confined to the three years' notice.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will read section 6, he will find that that situation he speaks of is dealt with.

The Clerk read section 6 of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 6. That in the event the United States does not exercise its right to take over, maintain, and operate the properties as provided in section 5 hereof, or does not renew the lease to the original lessee upon such terms and conditions and for such periods as may be authorized under the then existing applicable laws, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, upon the expiration of any lease under this act, to lease the properties of the original lessee to a new lessee upon such terms, under such conditions, and for such periods as applicable laws may then authorize, and upon the further condition that the new lessee shall pay for the properties as provided in section 5 of this act.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section. I would like to have the attention of the committee on this section because it is a very important one. It is one which deserves careful consideration. As I said a moment ago, I did not expect a great many to agree with me in my opposition to the idea of recapture, but I can not understand how anyone can disagree with my view that section 6 should be stricken from the bill.

Let us see what the situation is. The provision for recapture contained in section 5, one under which the Government may take over the property, provides that in taking over the plant the Government shall pay the reasonable value of the tangible property and the actual first cost of water rights, rights of way, and land, or interest in the same, but no consideration is to be given to the value of the property as a going concern. In other words, it proceeds on the theory—an erroneous theory it will be in a majority of cases affected by this bill—that the operation is dependent in a large and important way on the grant by the Federal Government of a lease to the land, and therefore, inasmuch as the operation is to that extent by grace of the Government, if you please, the Government may provide in its recapture at the end of 50 years for taking the property back at the reasonable value of the tangible property without any allowance for increase in the value of the real estate, right of way, and so forth.

Now, assuming, for the sake of argument, that it may be proper for the Government granting a right to operate to take the property back in that way, is it right, is it fair, is it just, is it in accordance with the protection to property which our Constitution gives for the Federal Government at the end of 50 years to take property belonging to B and turn it over to A, who has had nothing to do with it, nothing to do with building it up, nothing to do with adding to its value, turning it over to him without giving anything to the owner, builder, and developer for its value as a going concern?

How can we hope to encourage men to build up great enterprises by individual effort, by the tremendous individual effort that is necessary to make a great concern successful, if at the end of a given term it may be thus transferred? How can we hope that men's best energies will be put forth in the development of these properties if at the end of 50 years the property can be turned over to some favorite or friend of a then Secretary of the Interior? I am not assuming that Secretaries of the Interior will not attempt to do their duty, but if we have become so fearful of the people in their collective capacity, why should we be so confident of the integrity of a single individual because he chances to be a Secretary of the Interior? If we can not trust the people of a Commonwealth to control in their own interests, can we expect that, because a man is appointed Secretary of the Interior, he will always be just or wise or honest? This floor within the last few years has rung with denunciations of the motives and the acts of a man occupying that position.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, how much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. MONDELL. Five minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that, at the expiration of seven minutes, debate on this section and all amendments thereto close.

Mr. BENNET. I suggest that the gentleman make that 10 minutes, as I would like to have 3 minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. I want 5 minutes reserved. I may not use them.

Mr. MANN. I think we should quit some time to-night.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman would not object to going on and finishing this section?

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to limiting the debate if we quit at 5 o'clock.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 13 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to close debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto in 13 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, it is to be assumed that whatever we undertake to do in this bill we undertake to do in the public interest. How is the public to be served by transferring a given plant from A to B at the suggestion or the desire or on the motion of the Secretary of the Interior? Every requirement which the Secretary may lay upon B he may lay upon A as a condition of his retaining the lease and his property. Every obligation that B may assume, A may be compelled to undertake in order to remain the owner of the property, and yet we propose to give Secretaries of the Interior the power to take from A a property which he has built up, established, developed, into which he has put a lifetime of effort, all of the time under public control, and turn it over to B simply because something about B suits the Secretary of the Interior better than the original owner. Whereupon the property is recaptured not at its value as a growing concern—if after recapture the property may be arbitrarily transferred to another individual certainly he ought to pay what it is worth, what its value is as a growing concern—but it is to be transferred to him at a fair value of the plant and machinery only, but without any value based on the business, its development, or on the increased value of the property in the 50 years during which it had been in existence.

If this does not come pretty nearly being confiscation, if it is not actually taking property without due process of law, then I do not know how you would go about taking property without due process of law, except to take it as the bandits are taking it down in Mexico—at the point of the revolver.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Does the gentleman believe the same doctrine which he is now announcing ought to apply to all leases—that they ought to be considered confiscatory if possession is turned over to the owner of the property at the expiration of the lease?

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, the gentleman has not done me the honor to listen to what I have said. I am suggesting that, assuming it is right for the Federal Government to take the property under the conditions fixed in the section, it can not be fair or in the public interest to so take it and turn it over to a stranger.

Mr. TOWNER. To another lessee; that is all.

Mr. MONDELL. If I am to take possession of your property at the end of 50 years, an individual charged with no more responsibility, willing to do nothing more in the public interest than you, should I not pay you what the property is actually worth? Instead of that, if I please the Secretary of the Interior, if he is kindly disposed toward me, if he thinks well of me, he turns the property over to me, not at what it is worth to you, but at a reasonable value of the machinery, without any increased value on the lands or water rights or compensation for the business you have built up.

Mr. TOWNER. How can you complain of a man——

Mr. MONDELL. I will not complain, because I do not expect to own any power plant.

Mr. TOWNER. Who has gotten everything that the Government agreed to give him. He has had it for 50 years, and now the gentleman says it is confiscation if he does not have an extension of it granted.

Mr. MONDELL. It is confiscation when the Federal Government plays the favorite, and the Federal Government would be playing the favorite in that case. What limitless opportunity for favoritism, or worse for graft and plunder, would be thus presented and when would the public be the gainer.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, this section is drawn with the naïve simplicity of 1870. It is way behind the times of modern methods in connection with recapture as found in the statute books of many States, such as we ought to take advantage of here. There ought to be a provision for competitive bidding. It is all wrong to put in the hands of any one man—the Secretary of the Interior or anyone else—the temptation of doing a favor for a personal friend or a political associate, and the more we can keep out of our governmental system provisions like this the more we can be modern—1916—and not go back to the days of William M. Tweed, who used provisions exactly like this to take money out of the Public Treasury through the instrumentality of friends. The more we can keep up to date and limit our executive officers by competitive bidding in matters like this it ought to be done. I do not think the section ought to go out as a whole; but I do hope that, as we have reached the hour of 5 o'clock, and I presume the gentleman is going on to-morrow, that he will let this section be passed over until to-morrow and see if we can not work out some proposition by which we can put modern thought in up-to-date words into this section.

Mr. MANN. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Oklahoma——

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I may have a word to say in regard to the presentation just made by the gentleman from New York to-morrow, so I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HARRISON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that body had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that leave of absence for two days be granted to Mr. LANGLEY, on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXPORT OF MUNITIONS OF WAR.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes in reply to a suggestion made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that he may address the House for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, we listened a few hours ago to a speech on a matter of grave national importance, very earnestly and eloquently delivered by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. GARDNER. The speech gave evidence of long preparation and deep thought. It is particularly unfortunate, therefore, that there should have appeared in it a sentence which could only be the result of carelessness or particularly gross misinformation as to the actual facts. In discussing the attitude of the German-Americans in this country he made use of the following language:

He (the German-American) demands perfectly frankly that the United States by legislation shall redeem the inequality created by the might of Great Britain at sea. His argument is perfectly simple and from his point of view sound. He says, "Ammunition helps the allies; so by hook or by crook, by laws or strikes, by torpedoes or by mines, by gold or by dynamite, we will do everything we can to prevent that ammunition reaching the allies."

Mindful, as I am, of the etiquette of debate, I shall go no further than to characterize this language as intemperate and reckless in the highest degree, more reckless and intemperate even than the language we heard in this House not very long ago from one holding higher office than any of us here.

The gentleman from Massachusetts, in reply to a question asked him by the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. STAFFORD, undertook to justify this statement on the authority of articles he had read in eastern newspapers. That is a woefully flimsy excuse, Mr. Speaker, for the indictment of a large group of American citizens who are—and I measure my words—as law-abiding and patriotic as any other American citizens who pay allegiance to our flag, no matter from what country they or their ancestors may have come. I speak in this House for a large number of German-Americans, and I resent the imputation that in the purity of their motives or lawfulness of their acts, now or at any time, they are not the peers of any body of American citizens. Their sympathies may be with the fatherland in this war. Do you criticize them for that? Would you criticize an American of English ancestry because his sympathies as an individual were with his fatherland? But any statement which can be construed as asserting that the great body of American citizens who are of German extraction are disloyal to the flag of their country or contemptuous of her laws is wholly and absolutely false.

I say this without any imputation upon the good faith of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts. I can only believe that he spoke without any real knowledge of the facts. Unfortunately for him, as I believe, there are few, if any, of his constituents who are of German extraction, and he is therefore unacquainted with their sterling qualities as citizens. I regret exceedingly that he made this speech at all. It does not seem to me that this is the time to bring up these questions in Congress and fan the flame of racial hatred in this country. I do not know whether or not the question of prohibiting the export of munitions will ever reach the floor of this House, but if it does of this I am confident, that of the votes cast upon either side of this question by gentlemen whose sole desire is to do their duty to their constituency and their country as they see it, there will be few indeed which will be predicated upon the proposition that the German-Americans of this country as a body are not loyal and patriotic American citizens. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 788. An act permitting the Wolf Point Bridge & Development Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River in the State of Montana.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

December 17, 1915:

H. R. 663. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Citizens' Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Burlington, Iowa;

H. R. 3638. An act to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the St. Francis River at or near St. Francis, Ark.

S. J. Res. 38. Joint resolution to transfer the Government exhibit from the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to the Panama-California Exposition, and for other purposes;

H. J. Res. 59. Joint resolution extending the provisions of the act entitled "An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," approved October 22, 1914, to December 31, 1916;

H. J. Res. 61. Joint resolution authorizing payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1915; and

H. J. Res. 60. Joint resolution making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916.

December 18, 1915:

S. 696. An act authorizing the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River at Oil City, Venango County, Pa.; and

S. J. Res. 56. Joint resolution extending the time for filing the report of the Joint Committee of Congress on the Fiscal Relations between the District of Columbia and the United States.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Saturday, January 8, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue submitting an urgent estimate of deficiency in the appropriation "Salaries and expenses of collectors of internal revenue" for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916 (H. Doc. No. 506); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue submitting supplemental and additional estimates of appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917 (H. Doc. No. 507); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of a deficiency in the appropriation for the Coast Guard for the fiscal year 1916 (H. Doc. No. 508); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting urgent estimate of deficiencies in appropriations required for the United States Public Health Service for the current fiscal year (H. Doc. 509); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SHERWOOD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3636) to amend section 3646 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as reenacted and amended by act of February 23, 1909, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 18), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. STERLING, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 665) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Fox River at Aurora, Ill., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 19), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DILLON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 320) to authorize the county commissioners of Bonner County, Idaho, to construct a bridge across Priest River, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 20), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3593) to authorize the Ohio-West Virginia Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Ohio River at the city of Steubenville, Jefferson County, Ohio, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 21), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DECKER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4716) to authorize Dunklin County, Mo., and Clay County, Ark., to construct a bridge across St. Francis River, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 22), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 306) granting the consent of Congress to William H. Preece, of Inez, Ky., to construct a bridge across the Tug Fork of the Big Sandy River at or near Warfield, Ky., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 23), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. SIMS, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 775) granting the consent of Congress to J. P. Jones and others to construct one or more bridges across the Chattahoochee River between the counties of Coweta and Carroll, in the State of Georgia, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 24), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DECKER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6448) to authorize Butler and Dunklin Counties, Mo., to construct a bridge across St. Francis River, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 25), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5187) to authorize the adjudication of the claim of the legal representatives of Cornelius P. Cassin, and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GOOD: A bill (H. R. 7716) to amend the act of April 19, 1908, relating to pensioning widows of soldiers, etc., of the Civil War, and granting pensions to certain widows of enlisted men, soldiers and officers, who served in the late Civil War, etc.; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAFEAN: A bill (H. R. 8223) to purchase a painting of the Battle of Gettysburg; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. PARK: A bill (H. R. 8224) to provide that the Secretary of Agriculture, on behalf of the United States, shall, in certain cases, aid the States in the construction and maintenance of rural post roads; to the Committee on Roads.

By Mr. HUDDLESTON: A bill (H. R. 8225) providing for a survey of Valley Creek, in Jefferson County, Ala., with the view to making same navigable; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota: A bill (H. R. 8226) making appropriation for the construction and equipment of a dormitory and other buildings for the Indian school at Bismarck, N. Dak.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. STEDMAN: A bill (H. R. 8227) to require all cotton exchanges in the United States doing an interstate or foreign business or both to keep a record of all sales made, and to require the buyer of cotton on such exchange to specify the grade he is to receive, and the seller of cotton on such exchange to deliver the grade so specified by the buyer; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8228) to provide for the erection of a public building at Greensboro, N. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 8229) to establish a national military park at the battle field of Guilford Courthouse; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, January 8, 1916.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou art the giver of all our blessings, and Thou art the inspiration of every high and noble thought, every generous act, and every divine ideal in us. In Thee we live and move and have our being. The measure of our power and influence for good is the measure of the ministry of Thy grace in our hearts and minds. Come near to us this day. Guide us in the discharge of the duties of the day. May we ever hold in reverence Thy name and ever walk in holy fellowship with Thee. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

THE AQUEDUCT BRIDGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a memorandum referring to the recommendation contained in the annual report of the Chief of Engineers concerning the construction of a new bridge to supplant the present Aqueduct Bridge over the Potomac River in the District of Columbia, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MYERS. I present a petition of residents of Camas, Mont., praying for an appropriation of $1,000,000 for work on the Flathead reclamation project in Montana. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD with the name of the first signer and the words "and many others" printed underneath, and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the President and Congress of the United States:

We the undersigned residents of Camas, Mont., comprising business men, professional men, and others, do earnestly and respectfully request of the "President and Congress of the United States" that an appropriation of not less than $1,000,000 be passed by the present session of Congress for construction work for the ensuing year on the Flathead irrigation project.

Most of us have invested all the money we have in Camas on the strength of the promises made to the unit holders and Indians occupying lands within this project. At the present rate we are receiving appropriations it will take 25 years to complete this project, and men and women who entered upon this project five years ago will be broken in health and fortune before this irrigation scheme is completed.

In view of the foregoing facts, we most earnestly request of Congress that a large appropriation looking toward a very early completion of this project be passed by this session of Congress.

Respectfully submitted.

ALEX. R. RHONE
(And many others).

Mr. MYERS. I present a joint memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Alaska, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate Joint Memorial 9.

To the President of the United States, the United States Senate, and the United States House of Representatives:

Your memorialists, the Senate and House of Representatives of the Territory of Alaska, most respectfully represent that—

Whereas the Secretary of the Interior, in the case of the Miocene Ditch Co. (35 L. D., 297), held that the provisions of sections 18 to 21, inclusive, of the act of March 3, 1891, granting rights of way through the public lands for canals, ditches, and reservoirs, have no application to lands within the District of Alaska, while in the case of the Alaska Treadwell Gold Mining Co. et al. (40 L. D., 426), it was held that section 4 of the act of February 1, 1905, granting rights of way for dams, reservoirs, water plants, ditches, flumes, pipes, tunnels, and canals, within and across the national forests of the United States, is applicable to and is operative in forest reserves in the District of Alaska. The acts of Congress of February 15, 1901 (31 Stat., 790), and March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., 1253), provide, among other things, for right of way through the public lands, forests, and other reservations of the United States, and in certain national parks, for electrical plants, poles, and lines for the generation and distribution of electrical power and for telephone and telegraph purposes and for canals, ditches, pipes and pipe lines, flumes, tunnels and other conduits, and for water plants, dams, and reservoirs used to promote irrigation, mining, or quarrying and the Secretary of the Interior on August 24, 1912, and January 6, 1913, has provided rules and regulations governing such rights of way, under the provisions of said acts, but it is not stated whether these acts shall apply to public lands in the Territory of Alaska, and while it has never been directly held that the provisions of these acts do not apply it is a fact that a number of applications have been filed under these provisions, but they have never been allowed, and, if the law as construed in the Miocene Ditch Co. case, supra, is adhered to, it follows as a natural consequence that the provisions of said acts do not apply to public lands in Alaska. We, therefore, have the anomolous situation of a transmission line passing over lands in Alaska partly within a national forest and partly over adjoining public lands, being unable to receive a franchise for its entire line, a result which it is believed was not contemplated when the laws were enacted; and

Whereas there are throughout the Territory of Alaska a large number of available and undeveloped power projects which can be developed and utilized as the demand for such industries increases; a number of small projects are now developed to a limited extent and are operating and furnishing light and power to settlements in the Territory, but all of those located on lands outside of forest reserves have no title or right under the law to use such lands, although they have expended in some cases large amounts of money in their development. This condition is intolerable and should not be allowed to continue because it prevents capital from investing, and retards the development of not only the available power projects but of other natural resources in the Territory: We therefore

Most respectfully urge your honorable body to pass a suitable law or laws providing for rights of way over all public lands, both reserved and unreserved, for electrical plants, poles, and lines for the generation and distribution of electrical power, and for telephone and telegraph purposes and for canals, ditches, pipes and pipe lines, flumes, tunnels, or other water conduits and for water plants, dams, and reservoirs used to promote irrigation, mining or quarrying, or the manufacture or cutting of timer for lumber, or the supplying of water for domestic, public, or any other beneficial use with suitable safeguards against monopoly and with such provisions as will result in the natural resources being developed in the interest of all the people.

And be it further resolved, That a copy hereof be sent to the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands of the United States Senate, the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands of the United States House of Representatives, the Hon. JAMES WICKERSHAM, Delegate to Congress from Alaska, and the Secretary of the Interior.

Adopted by the senate April 20, 1915.

DAN A. SUTHERLAND,
President of the Senate.

Attest:

ALFRED E. MALTBY,
Secretary of the Senate.

Concurred in by the house April 26, 1915.

EARNEST B. COLLINS,
Speaker of the House.

Attest:

BARRY KEOWN,
Clerk of the House.

Mr. MYERS. I present a joint memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Alaska, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the joint memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 4. (By Mr. Holland.)

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Alaska, respectfully represent that the act of Congress approved May 14, 1898, entitled "An act extending the homestead laws, etc., to Alaska," and the act of Congress amendatory thereof approved March 3, 1903 (U. S. Stat., 30–409, and U. S. Stat., 32–1028, respectively), provide, inter alia, that between homestead, soldiers' additional homestead, and trade and manufacturing site surveys abutting on navigable waters a shore space of 80 rods, direct measurement, must be reserved from entry.

That in practical operation the intent of said provisions of law (which was to prevent monopolization of shore fronts on navigable waters) is largely nullified to the advantage of corporations, companies, associations, and individuals.

That, although theoretically it prevents the monopolization of shore frontage, in reality it does not. While it is true that it does prevent a monopolization by title, it does not as to occupancy and use by adjoining claimants when it is to their interest to exercise control of the same.

That by such provision of law a single claimant may obtain practical control of as extensively a short frontage as may be desired at a trifling expense by procuring title to small tracts at lawful intervals by scripping them with soldiers' additional homestead scrip, no occupancy of or improvements being required in connection with such claim. By such means it is feasible not only to obtain practical control of extensive water frontage but to debar others from establishing homesteads, canneries, or other enterprises within the limits that a single claimant wishes to control: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Alaska, That we respectfully and earnestly petition your honorable body to repeal the aforesaid act in so far as it relates to reserve spaces along the shores of navigable waters and substitute instead easements for all classes of valid claims and rights of way of whatsoever sort along said navigable waters, and as far inland as conditions may require, the easements to include wagon roads, railroads, both steam and electric, telegraph, telephone, and electric-power lines, pipe lines, flumes, tunnels, ditches, etc. The easements should also provide for the crossing over or under other previous rights of way for any purpose, but in such manner as not to obstruct or interfere with the proper operation of such intercepted right of way: Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to the President of the United States, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands of the United States Senate, the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands of the United States House of Representatives, the Hon. JAMES WICKERSHAM, Delegate to Congress from Alaska, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Passed the house March 10, 1915.

EARNEST B. COLLINS,
Speaker of the House.

Attest:

BARRY KEOWN,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Passed the senate April 17, 1915.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, Territory of Alaska, ss:

I, Charles E. Davidson, secretary of Alaska, do hereby certify that the above is a full, true, and correct copy of house joint memorial No. 4 of the Alaska Territorial Legislature, passed at the second session thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of Alaska at Juneau, this 3d day of May, A. D. 1915.

[SEAL.] CHARLES E. DAVIDSON,
Secretary of Alaska.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VARDAMAN, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 562) to amend the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing a postal savings system, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 34) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 382) to amend the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing a postal savings system, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on Woman Suffrage, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States conferring upon women the right of suffrage, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 35) thereon.

BLACK RIVER BRIDGE, MISSOURI.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 4717) to authorize Butler County, Mo., to construct a bridge across Black River, and I submit a report (No. 32) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ROCK RIVER BRIDGE, ILLINOIS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 136) granting an extension of time to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois, and I submit a report (No. 33) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT OF NATIONAL FOREST RESERVATION COMMISSION.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 59), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That there be printed 1,000 additional copies of House Document No. 130, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, entitled "Report of the National Forest Reservation Commission for 1915," for the use of the National Forest Reservation Commision.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 3306) to provide for the purchase of a site and for the establishment of a military aviation academy within the State of Utah, and making an appropriation therefor; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3307) granting a pension to Minnie V. Mace (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey:

A bill (S. 3308) for the relief of Lieut. Richard Philip McCullough, United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

A bill (S. 3309) granting an increase of pension to Julia Gove Hottel (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3310) granting an increase of pension to Edgar Thompson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 3311) exempting enlarged homesteads from liability for debt contracted prior to issuance of patent; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 3312) to provide for allotting to Indians the surface rights of Indian lands, withdrawn, classified, claimed, or reported as coal or mineral lands and to issue patents thereto; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 3313) granting a pension to George Rhode; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 3314) to prevent injury or destruction of letter boxes or other receptacles for mail; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

A bill (S. 3315) to prevent persons who pay income taxes from drawing pensions; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 3316) granting an increase of pension to Margaret S. Gemberling;

A bill (S. 3317) granting a pension to Curtis Seay;

A bill (S. 3318) granting an increase of pension to John Bailey (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3319) granting an increase of pension to Hiram Muir (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LEE of Maryland:

A bill (S. 3320) for the relief of Richard Riggles; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BORAH:

A bill (S. 3321) granting an increase of pension to George D. Smith (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LEWIS:

A bill (S. 3322) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Patrick McGough; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3323) granting an increase of pension to John T. Krenck;

A bill (S. 3324) granting an increase of pension to Sophronia Neel;

A bill (S. 3325) granting a pension to Cora M. Stewart;

A bill (S. 3326) granting an increase of pension to William J. Crocker; and

A bill (S. 3327) granting a pension to Lucy Carroll; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GORE:

A bill (S. 3328) granting to the State of Oklahoma permission to occupy a certain portion of the Fort Sill Military Reservation, Okla., and to maintain and operate thereon a fish hatchery; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 3329) for an appropriation of $105,000 to purchase water rights within the West Okanogan Valley irrigation district, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A bill (S. 3330) granting a pension to Susie M. Gilbert; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 71) providing for a survey of the Columbia River from the mouth of the Snake to Priest Rapids; to the Committee on Commerce.

ADMIRAL FLETCHER'S REPORT ON THE FLEET.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 60), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate Admiral Fletcher's report on the fleet, dated August 15, 1915.

THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. LEWIS. I submit a resolution and ask that it be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 61) was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That the board of the Federal Trade Commission report at its earliest convenience to the Senate (whether) if the duties of the commission imposed upon it by the law and demand of the provisions of the act creating the said commission render inconvenient or embarrassing the assuming of the duties and offices of a tariff board as provided in the terms of that certain tariff-board authorization of Congress of the period of 1909–10 and contained in appropriation bills of the Congress of 1910–11.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over and be printed.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD.

Mr. LEWIS. I submit a resolution and ask that it be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 62) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board of the United States be requested to enter upon investigation of the amounts paid as salaries to the employees and subordinate officers of all such banks of the United States as are under the jurisdiction of the board, with the object of suggesting an increase of compensation to the employees consistent with the service done and the increased cost of living expenses.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over and be printed.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE AGREEMENTS.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I am not sure this is the proper head under which to make the request, but I will nevertheless ask unanimous consent to have the paper I send to the desk read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read the paper.

The Secretary read as follows:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, held January 6, 1916, the following report and resolution presented by its committee on foreign commerce and the revenue laws were unanimously adopted:

INTERNATIONAL TREATIES.

To the Chamber of Commerce:

In spite of the unsettled conditions among the nations of the earth at this time, the committee on foreign commerce and the revenue laws wishes to reassert its faith in the desirability of international trade agreements as the best available means of giving stability to business relations and for settling by established procedure such differences as may arise from time to time between nations.

There are at the present time several pieces of unfinished business in the hands of the Federal authorities under this general category. There is pending for further consideration a proposed treaty with Nicaragua. The efforts to arrive at a complete understanding between the United States of Colombia and the United States of America, involving claims arising out of the control of Panama territory, have not as yet been brought to a conclusion.

Besides these two, there is a third country with which at the present time the United States is almost entirely without treaty relations. In view of the expanding commercial and financial interests which citizens of the United States have in Russia, the committee on foreign commerce and the revenue laws is unanimously of the opinion that steps should be taken by our Department of State, in cooperation with the Department of Commerce, without unnecessary delay, to negotiate a treaty of commerce and amity between this country and Russia.

The treaty of 1832 between these two countries became inoperative on December 31, 1912, after being in force for a period of 80 years. Intercourse has, meanwhile, for a period of more than 3 years, been without any specific agreement, with certain minor exceptions affecting navigation and the position of corporations and other commercial organizations. Moreover, since September 23, 1915, the protocol of agreement between the United States and Russia concerning the exportation of embargoed goods to this country has also been effective. But none of these take adequate account of the many questions affecting vitally the rights of our citizens, which are now mainly dependent upon the traditional good will prevailing between the Governments and peoples of the two countries.

On the basis, therefore, of nearly a century of international fellowship, it is hoped that a definitive treaty, involving as one of its fundamental principles the most-favored-nation clause, may be brought to an early conclusion: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the authorities at Washington be requested to proceed forthwith in negotiations looking to the early conclusion of the international treaties here indicated, viz: Of the United States with Russia, of the United States with Nicaragua, and of the United States with Colombia, and that copies of this preamble and resolution be sent to the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Commerce, and to the committees of Congress having this feature of the public interest in charge.

WHITE PINE BLISTER RUST.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, a few days ago I introduced a bill in reference to the white pine blister rust, a very serious matter, that has taken possession of the white pine trees of the country. I have in my hand two papers, one from the interstate committee for the suppression of the pine blister rust and another a press bulletin in reference to the matter. They are both brief. I ask that they may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, where the bill now is.

There being no objection, the papers were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMITTEE FOR THE SUPPRESSION OF THE PINE BLISTER RUST,
Boston, Mass., January 5, 1916.

The following is an extract from a letter written by Dr. W. A. Taylor, Chief of Bureau of Plant Industry, to be read before the Interstate Conference of the White Pine Blister Rust, held in Boston, December 22, 1915:

"HISTORICAL.

"Nursery stock of five-leaved pines, particularly the white pine, Pinus strobus, was imported from Europe without restraint up to the time of the passage in 1912 of the national regulation prohibiting such importation. It is very much to the credit of your State (Massachusetts) nursery inspector, Dr. H. T. Fernald, that he established a State quarantine against such importations some months earlier than the Federal regulation.

"As a result of this unrestricted importation the white pine blister rust was naturally and necessarily introduced into this country. The first distinct record of its occurrence is at Geneva, N. Y., in 1906. In 1909 Dr. Spaulding discovered extensive importations of the disease at various points in New York and other States. So far as located the diseased trees in these importations were destroyed either in that year or subsequent years. Warnings were immediately published broadcast in the public press and in special publications (Bureau of Plant Industry Circular No. 38, inclosed, and Science, vol. 30, pp. 200–201, Aug. 13, 1909) against the danger of further importations, and a meeting, attended largely by State foresters, was held June 28, 1909, in New York City, at which meeting the entire matter was fully discussed and the dangers of further importation particularly emphasized. In spite of these extensive warnings, however, importations continued to be made in Massachusetts and elsewhere until they were finally stopped by law. Such importation is now no longer possible, but the door may have been closed too late, for the blister rust is now developing at a number of points in America.

"THE PRESENT DISTRIBUTION OF THE BLISTER RUST IN AMERICA.

"I shall not list the places in Massachusetts where this disease occurs, as Dr. Fernald, who I understand will be present at this meeting, is fully informed on this subject. Outside of Massachusetts the disease is known to be present in at least three localities in New Hampshire, two in Vermont, two in Connecticut, five in New York, one in Pennsylvania, and three in Ontario, Canada. Serious outbreaks of the disease on currants have occurred this past summer at Queenstown, Ontario; Fredonia and Cooperstown, N. Y.; Durham and Hampstead, N. H.

"POTENTIAL DANGER.

"The white pine blister rust is a native disease on the Swiss stone pine, Pinus cembra, in Asia and Europe. When the American white pine, Pinus strobus, was introduced into Europe the disease attacked this tree so vigorously as to make its general culture impracticable in England, Denmark, and Holland and to handicap seriously its cultivation in Germany. No investigation of the disease in Europe has been made by any American pathologist, but the following statements are cited as authority for the above: Bureau of Plant Industry Bulletin 206, pages 17 and 18 (note particularly statements of Somerville, of England, and Ravn, of Denmark), also page 69 (statement of Ritzema Bos, of Holland). A marked copy of this bulletin is inclosed herewith. Note also testimony of Dr. Ravn, of Denmark, on pages 14 and 15 of the Report of the Conference on the White Pine Blister Rust Situation Held by the Federal Horticultural Board July 20, 1915, and also the testimony of Dr. Appel, of Germany, on page 18 of the same manuscript report. Dr. Metcalf sent you several days ago a copy of this report.

"On a priori grounds we may expect that the white-pine blister rust will do more damage in America than in Europe. The history of other introduced diseases and pests decidedly favors this view. We do not, however, have to depend upon purely a priori arguments. Enough cases of the white-pine blister rust on nursery stock have been located to demonstrate that in this country it is already a virulent disease of nursery stock. The cases of the disease at Lydonville, Vt., Ipswich, Mass., and Geneva, N. Y., show that it has attacked and killed trees 18 feet in height and that it has attacked and maimed without killing trees 50 feet in height. (See also pp. 3 and 4 of United States Department of Agriculture Bulletin 116, a marked copy of which is inclosed herewith.) It appears certain that if this disease becomes widespread in the Eastern States it will interfere seriously with the growing of white pine and may make its cultivation impracticable. At the worst the white pine may be expected to follow the chestnut tree and be driven toward virtual extinction. At the best the tree will be handicapped by the disease, reproduction crippled or prevented, mature trees mutilated, their increment decreased, and the white pine thus reduced from its present standing to that of an inferior species. The most alarming feature of the situation, however, is that the western white pine, Pinus monticola, and the sugar pine, Pinus lambertiana, are also subject to the disease; and, if the disease can not be controlled in the Eastern States, there is no reason to expect that it can be kept out of the vast forests of the Western States or that it will be controlled there. (Regarding the susceptibility of P. monticola, see B. P. I. Bul. 206, p. 67 (Laurie), p. 73 (Neger), p. 77 (Somerville). Regarding P. lambertiana, see p. 19 (Klebahn).)

"MEANS OF COMBATING THE DISEASE.

"The fungus Cronartium ribicola, which causes the blister rust, lives upon Pinus strobus or some five-leaved pines for a portion of its life, but is unable to spread directly to other pines. Instead it must pass to plants of the genus Ribes (currants and gooseberries). Upon Ribes it produces spores, which enable it to spread rapidly from bush to bush over a wide territory in a short time. This is what has happened this summer at Lenox, Mass., and various other points. From the currants the fungus passes back to white pine or other five-leaved pine trees, infecting them, and this cycle is kept up indefinitely. Evidence is lacking that the disease can overwinter on currants, and no epidemic of one year on currants is known to recur upon the same currant bushes another year, unless there is reinfection in the spring from diseased pine trees. (In this connection see N. Y. Agr. Exp. Sta. Bul. 374 and U. S. Dept. Agr. Bul. 116, pp. 4 and 5, copies of which are inclosed.)

"From these facts it is obvious that the problem of control of this disease is much simpler than with a disease that spreads directly from tree to tree, like peach yellows, pear blight, or chestnut blight. The complete destruction of the diseased pines, or the destruction of all plants of ribes, will end the spread of the disease in any one locality. At the beginning of an epidemic it would naturally be most effective to destroy the few diseased white pines, provided these can be located, but their location is often difficult, as the disease on pines is conspicuous for only about six weeks each spring. In the majority of cases, then, the complete destruction of all currant and gooseberry bushes over a given area is the practicable way of controlling the disease. Without white pines this disease can not develop on currant or gooseberry bushes, and vice versa.

"NECESSARY LAWS AND APPROPRIATIONS.

"It is obvious that if this disease is to be controlled in any locality the State horticultural inspectors having charge of the work must have absolute legal authority to destroy pines or currants or both if necessary with or without the consent of owners. The labor of the destruction of wild currant or gooseberry bushes or the labor of locating or destroying diseased pines would necessarily be fairly expensive and would presumably call for special appropriations. Still more serious is the question of destruction of commercial plantings of currants. If an adequate law and reasonable appropriations can not be obtained in Massachusetts, it is useless to attempt to fight the disease there. There is no use in entering such a fight under conditions which make ultimate failure inevitable. In combating any disease or epidemic of any sort absolute public unanimity, either voluntary or enforced, is necessary.

"UNANIMITY OF ACTION BY DIFFERENT STATES.

"One further difficulty remains to be considered. If, for example, you in Massachusetts undertake the control of this disease and succeed in your control, your efforts might result only in delaying the progress of the disease, unless equally efficient efforts are inaugurated and maintained in the surrounding States. Probably such delay of the progress of the disease alone would be well worth while, however.

"FEDERAL COOPERATION.

"Under the present law the activities of this department, with respect to the white-pine blister rust and all diseases of forest and ornamental trees, are restricted to research."

The references made in this letter will be found in Bulletin No. 206, of the Bureau of Plant Industry, issued July 22, 1911. I am unable to send you a copy of this bulletin, but it can be obtained at the Bureau of Plant Industry.

SITUATION IN MASSACHUSETTS.

Until late this summer our State nursery inspector, Dr. H. T. Fernald, felt confident that he had the disease fully in hand in this State, but largely by accident a diseased plant was sent to his department from the town of Lenox, and an investigation showed that the disease was found in at least 200 different localities in the Berkshires, ranging from North Adams to the Connecticut line, and even into Connecticut. The spread of the disease seems to have been very rapid this summer, and as that section of the country contains large quantities of white pine bordering closely on four other States, we feel that the danger of the disease getting beyond control is imminent. Massachusetts will ask its legislature this year for an appropriation of $10,000 with which to eradicate the disease in the State and for a revision of the nursery inspection act which will permit the destruction of plantations that are diseased. The legislatures of the other States adjoining us do not convene this year, but we are assured that in every case money will be found from some of the departments with which inspections will be made.

The chief danger of the disease lies in the fact that large numbers of importations of white pine had been made before the quarantine laws went into effect, and it is not known just where these plantations have been made; consequently we have every reason to believe that in nearly all of the Eastern States there have been plantations made of imported pines which have never yet been inspected for the disease, and in some of the States there is no money available for this work. It is more than likely that at any time we shall discover an infestation in any one of the other States similar to that which was found in Lenox, about which nothing was known.

It is for these reasons that those of us who have the interest of the forests at heart are convinced that this is a national problem and that adequate means should be furnished at once to eradicate the disease.

The chestnut blight is one of the important diseases which was allowed to gain a foothold, and when the States and Federal Government finally got awake to the situation it was too late to control the disease, with the result that the chestnuts of the country are doomed.

The same was true of the gypsy and brown-tail moths. A reasonable appropriation at one time could have completely exterminated those pests, but they were allowed to multiply, with little attention being given to them, until at this time there is no hope of ever being rid of them, notwithstanding the fact that millions of dollars have been spent in the control of them.

The white pine is by far the most valuable timber tree in the Northern and Northeastern States, and the same is true of the sugar pine on the Pacific coast and the white pine in the northern Rocky Mountain regions. There is nothing to hinder the spread of this disease, because we know from good authority that wild ribes (currants and gooseberries) are scattered throughout the entire regions where the five-leaved pines exist.

It is believed by our scientists that if adequate measures are taken now the disease can be controlled, if not completely eradicated. I hope that these facts can be clearly brought before the committees that are to consider the bill now before Congress.

HARRIS A. REYNOLDS.

(Press bulletin.)

WHITE-PINE BLISTER RUST MENACE—A SERIOUS DANGER TO ALL OF THE FIVE-LEAVED PINES OF THE UNITED STATES.

A white-pine blister rust is a fungus disease, native to Europe, and, according to eminent authorities, it has rendered the growing of our native white pine in England, Denmark, Holland, and parts of Germany impracticable. The disease was imported to this country on nursery stock of white pine, and plantations made from such stock in the States of New York, Pennsylvania, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, and Connecticut have been found to be infected with this disease. Plantations in other States are under suspicion.

Unlike the chestnut blight, the blister rust can not spread directly from one pine to another pine. It has two hosts; one stage of the disease lives in the bark of five-leaved pines, the other develops on the leaves of currant and gooseberry bushes, both the wild and the domestic species. The stage of the disease on currants and gooseberries can spread to other currants and gooseberries, and also to pines. There is but one stage of the disease on the pines, and this can spread only back to currants and gooseberries. Therefore the disease has a vulnerable point of attack, namely, the complete elimination of one or the other of the hosts in the sections where the disease is found. The pine forests as a whole are infinitely more valuable than the currants and gooseberries; therefore the latter are the ones to be destroyed in the sections where the disease has been found. Where the disease has been located the safe thing to do is to destroy all currants and gooseberries in the immediate vicinity, whether or not they are infected, as well as all pines that are infected.

The total distance that the disease will spread in one season is not, and probably can not be, definitely determined; but one point is certain, namely, that it will surely spread in this country wherever pines and currants or gooseberries are found in the same vicinity. Wild currants and gooseberries are found practically all over the country, which makes the spread certain unless drastic measures are taken to prevent it. The maximum distance that the disease will carry from currants and gooseberries to pines, and vice versa, has not been definitely proved, but certainly that distance is several hundred yards.

The disease is known to attack the white pine (Pinus strobus), the Pacific coast sugar pine (Pinus lambertiana), and the white pine of the northern Rocky Mountain region (Pinus monticola). There are six other five-leaved pines which are believed to be susceptible. The value of the pines that will certainly be attacked in the United States is estimated by our foresters to be over $425,000,000.

Unless adequate steps are taken against this disease at once, the future value of the young second-growth white pine will be destroyed. It is known that the disease has killed trees up to 16 years of age in this country and up to 30 years in Europe. Trees of any age are liable to be attacked, which means the ultimate commercial extinction of the five-leaved pines unless the rust is suppressed.

However, foresters and pathologists are generally agreed that if adequate steps are at once taken against this disease, the planting of white pine need not be discontinued. It is, of course, the most valuable timber tree in the Middle Northern and Northeastern States.

Now is the time for the State and Federal Governments to act. Nothing short of the most prompt and thorough measures, with full cooperation, will suffice. A few thousand dollars spent now will do more good than hundreds of thousands after the disease has secured a permanent foothold. Once it is thoroughly established, no amount of money will save the five-leaved pines where currants or gooseberries are associated with them. A vigorous and continuing effort now should completely eradicate the disease; at the least, it will so reduce its spread as to make its control possible at a minimum cost. There was a time when the gipsy and brown-tail moths could have been exterminated had the proper measures been applied. That opportunity was neglected, with the result that despite the subsequent expenditure of millions of dollars we shall probably never be rid of those pests. The chestnut blight was neglected until it became so widely scattered that control was impossible, and all of our chestnut trees are doomed, which means the loss of millions of dollars. This was due to sheer neglect. Are we to lose our pines and pine-using industries in the same way?

The Federal Government will be asked to make an appropriation of $50,000 for this work this year. This is the minimum amount with which the task of suppression can be undertaken. The individual States will also be asked to do their share. Massachusetts, alone, has requested its legislature for an appropriation of $10,000 to meet this emergency. With so many States already affected, the problem is a national one, and everyone who is interested in saving the white and other five-leaved pines should at once request his Senators and Representative in Washington to secure this appropriation. He should also see that the proper authorities in his own State are given the money and power to cooperate to the fullest extent with the Federal authorities in the work of suppression.

INTERSTATE COMMITTEE FOR THE SUPPRESSION OF THE PINE BLISTER RUST,
4 Joy Street, Boston, Mass.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Tuesday next, the 11th instant, I shall address the Senate on a legislative program.

COMMISSION ON GENERAL MINING LAWS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed, and the calender, under Rule VIII, is in order.

The bill (S. 52) to provide for a commission to codify and suggest amendments to the general mining laws was announced as first in order on the calendar, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint a commission of three members, two of whom shall be lawyers of large experience in the practice of mining law and one a mining engineer who shall have had practical experience in the operation of mines.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the commission so appointed to prepare for the information and use of the President and Congress a tentative code of laws providing for the location, development, and disposition of mineral lands and mining rights in the lands of the United States, including the Territory of Alaska, as in the opinion of the commission are best adapted to existing conditions and will correct defects or supply deficiencies in existing general mining laws.

SEC. 3. That the commission shall hold public hearings in the principal mining centers in the western United States and Alaska; invite and receive suggestions and opinions bearing upon or relating to existing mining laws or desirable amendments thereof; and may also consider the laws and experience of other countries with respect to disposition and development of mines and minerals.

SEC. 4. That within one year after the passage of this act, at which time the said commission shall expire, it shall submit to the President full report as to its operations, conclusions, and recommendations, including in or transmitting with said report a tentative code of mineral laws, as provided in section 2 hereof, and within 30 days from receipt thereof the President shall transmit the same to Congress with his recommendations.

SEC. 5. That each of said commissioners shall receive a salary of $500 per month, and for the payment thereof and of the actual and necessary expenses of the commission, including traveling expenses, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, this bill is identical with one passed by the Senate at the last session of Congress. It has been unanimously concurred in by the Senate Committee on Public Lands. Unless there is some opposition manifested from some quarter, I shall not take the time of the Senate to speak further in relation to it.

The bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECLAMATION OF ARID LANDS IN NEVADA.

The bill (S. 2519) to encourage the reclamation of certain arid lands in the State of Nevada, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to grant to any citizen of the United States, or to any association of such citizens, a permit, which shall give the exclusive right, for a period not exceeding two years, to drill or otherwise explore for water beneath the surface of not exceeding 2,560 acres of unreserved, unappropriated, nonmineral, nontimbered public lands of the United States in the State of Nevada not susceptible of successful irrigation, at a reasonable cost, from any known available source of surface water supply.

SEC. 2. That such a permit shall be upon condition that the permittee shall begin operations for the development of underground waters within six months from the date of the permit and continue such operations with reasonable diligence until water has been discovered in the quantity hereinafter described or until the date of expiration of the permit.

SEC. 3. That upon establishing at any time within two years from the date of the permit to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that underground waters in sufficient quantity to produce at a profit agricultural crops other than native grasses upon and less than 20 acres of land have been discovered and developed within the limits of the land embraced in any permit the said permittee shall be entitled to a patent for one-fourth of the land embraced in the permit, such area to be selected by the permittee in compact form according to the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys if the land be surveyed, or to be surveyed at his expense under rules and regulations established by the Secretary of the Interior if located upon unsurveyed land.

SEC. 4. That the remaining area within the limits of the land embraced in any such permit shall thereafter be reserved from other disposition and may, within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be sold at public auction to citizens of the United States under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe and in such farm units, not less than 40 acres in area, as he may prescribe, to the highest bidder for cash or for amounts payable in annual installments not exceeding five.

SEC. 5. That the receipts obtained from the sale of lands under the provisions of section 4 hereof shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, and after use thereof in the construction of reclamation works and upon return to the reclamation fund of any such moneys in the manner provided by the reclamation act and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto 50 per cent of the amounts so utilized in and returned to the reclamation fund shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury after the expiration of each fiscal year to the State of Nevada, said moneys to be used by said State for the support of public schools or other educational institutions or for the construction of public improvements, or both, as the legislature of the State may direct.

SEC. 6. That all entries made and patents issued under the provisions of this act shall be subject to and contain a reservation to the United States of all the coal and other valuable minerals in the lands so entered and patented, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same. The coal and other valuable mineral deposits in such lands shall be subject to disposal by the United States in accordance with the provisions of the coal and mineral land laws in force at the time of such disposal. Any person qualified to locate and enter the coal or other mineral deposits, or having the right to mine and remove the same under the laws of the United States, shall have the right at all times to enter upon the lands entered or patented, as provided by this act, for the purpose of prospecting for coal or other mineral therein, provided he shall not injure, damage, or destroy the permanent improvements of the entryman or patentee, and shall be liable to and shall compensate the entryman or patentee for all damages to the crops on such lands by reason of such prospecting. Any person who has acquired from the United States the coal or other mineral deposits in any such land, or the right to mine or remove the same, may reenter and occupy so much of the surface thereof as may be required for all purposes reasonably incident to the mining or removal of the coal or other minerals, first, upon securing the written consent or waiver of the homestead entryman or patentee; second, upon payment of the damages to crops or other tangible improvements to the owner thereof, where agreement may be had as to the amount thereof; or, third, in lieu of either of the foregoing provisions, upon the execution of a good and sufficient bond or undertaking to the United States for the use and benefit of the entryman or owner of the land, to secure the payment of such damages to the crops or tangible improvements of the entryman or owner, as may be determined and fixed in an action brought upon the bond or undertaking in a court of competent jurisdiction against the principal and sureties thereon, such bond or undertaking to be in form and in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and to be filed with and approved by the register and receiver of the local land office of the district wherein the land is situate, subject to appeal to the Commissioner of the General Land Office: Provided, That all patents issued for the coal or other mineral deposits herein reserved shall contain appropriate notations declaring them to be subject to the provisions of this act with reference to the disposition, occupancy, and use of the surface of the land.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to prescribe the necessary and proper rules and regulations and to do any and all things necessary to carry out and accomplish the purposes of this act.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, as I understand, this is a novel proposition as to the disposition of the public lands, and I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if this is a policy which could be adopted as to all of the public-land States of the Union?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I am not prepared to say that the policy proposed by the bill should be adopted in all the public-land States. At the time this matter came before the Senate Committee on Public Lands, the bill as originally drawn included the public-land States; but conditions in the State of Nevada are really peculiar; they are different from the conditions existing in many of the other public-land States. The committee took the matter up with the Department of the Interior, and while the Department of the Interior favored this bill strongly with regard to the State of Nevada, on account of the peculiar conditions, as is shown in the report, it was recommended that the provisions of the bill be limited to the State of Nevada. I repeat, the conditions there are very peculiar. I think possibly there is less surface water in the State of Nevada than in any other State of the Union.

Mr. LODGE. Would the Senator from Nevada be willing to state what those conditions are?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes, sir, with pleasure; if the Senator from Michigan has concluded his question.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I rose for the purpose of ascertaining what were the peculiarities of the conditions in Nevada which would render this bill an exception, and not a precedent that might hereafter be followed.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will take pleasure in stating them. In the State of Nevada there are 70,000,000 acres of land. Although 40 years or more have passed since that land was subjected to the homestead laws, the desert-land entries, the Carey Act, and the enlarged-homestead act, only about 4 per cent of that total land area of 70,000,000 acres has gone into private ownership. The reason why it has not gone into private ownership is because of a lack of water with which to irrigate the land. The reports of the Agricultural Department show that there are probably 15,000,000 acres of land in the valleys of the State of Nevada that consist of very rich soil, and where they have been able to place water upon that soil it has been exceedingly productive, but there are no large rivers in the State; there are only two or three streams or creeks of any magnitude. Those streams have been acquired, or, rather, the right to the use of the water has been acquired, for a great many years under the law of our State, which is the law of appropriation and use.

Long ago the people of our State had reached the limit of the development, so to speak, of surface water. There are, however, geological indications that under the surface of various portions of our State we shall discover artesian water. We have endeavored for years through Congress to obtain a sufficient appropriation to enable the Government, through its proper department, to prospect for such artesian water, but the effort has not apparently met with any favor. The largest appropriation that we have been able to obtain at any time has been $150,000 for the entire West, and that was also in combination with the measurement of water. Consequently there has been really no appropriation for this purpose.

We have in our State, outside of the forest reserves and all other reserves, 55,000,000 acres of unappropriated public lands, and we are informed by the Agricultural Department that probably from fifteen to eighteen million acres of those lands are splendid lands, and that they will furnish homes for a great many people if a water supply can be found. I am frank to say to you at the present time we see no hope of a water supply except from subterranean sources.

The Department of the Interior is not prepared, I believe, to offer any recommendation that the Government shall to any great extent prospect for this subterranean water. Therefore this bill, or a similar bill introduced at the last Congress, was unanimously reported favorably by the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate, and also unanimously reported favorably by the Committee on the Public Lands of the other House; that is, an identical bill, of which I obtained the introduction there, was so reported.

The Secretary of the Interior has written quite a long letter to the Public Lands Committee of the Senate regarding this measure, but I have seen fit only to take a small extract from it, which will partially answer the question of the Senator from Massachusetts. It reads as follows:

> The geographical situation of the State of Nevada, the absence of large streams or other large bodies of surface waters, the aridity or semiaridity of the soil, the other conditions peculiar to the State, fully warrant a special law designed to meet the situation and promote agricultural development. * * *

That is the conclusion of the Secretary of the Interior, after discussing the matter in his letter, and I do not believe that we have any real hope of peopling our State except through such means.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. JONES. I want to ask the Senator whether or not the State of Nevada received a grant of sections 16 and 36, as in the case of other States?

Mr. PITTMAN. It did.

Mr. JONES. It received that land?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES. In this bill there is no limitation placed upon the price at which this land can be disposed of, is there?

Mr. PITTMAN. No; that will be left entirely to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. JONES. As I understand, it is left to the legislature of the State of Nevada?

Mr. PITTMAN. Oh, no; the bill which I am discussing now is evidently a different bill from the one the Senator has in mind. This is a bill to encourage the development of subterranean waters in the State of Nevada.

Mr. JONES. I will ask the Senator to excuse me. I had another bill in mind.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, just one further word. I want to state to the Senate that we have to-day in our State more public land undisposed of than has any other State in the Union. I doubt if we will be able to dispose of it unless we can find subterranean waters to irrigate it, because it is of comparatively little value unless it is irrigated. Our State to-day is taxed enormously, and those taxes can not be reduced to any extent, if we are to maintain a form of State government, unless settlement in the State is encouraged and there is developed more taxable property to help bear the burden of these taxes. I sincerely insist that this is a very important matter for the people of our State.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I sincerely trust that the Senate will agree to the passage of this bill. The Senate will remember that in 1909 a bill passed Congress and was signed by the President, known as the enlarged homestead bill, authorizing a citizen of the United States to enter 320 acres of nonirrigable, nonmineral, and nontimbered land, the land to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior.

The waterfall in Nevada is hardly sufficient to make possible dry farming under the enlarged-homestead act to any great extent; therefore, the only practical way of cultivating at least 10,000,000 acres of land in the State of Nevada is by pumping the water from underground sources, and that is the object of the pending bill. I can not say that I have very much faith that it is going to be successful, knowing the watershed of Nevada and the water conditions in Nevada as I do. I doubt very much whether underground water will be found; but I do believe that we ought to give the people a chance to see if it is possible to discover and to develop underground water for the purpose of making farms upon lands which to-day are next to worthless. I hope that the bill will pass.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the question addressed to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is altogether pertinent; that is to say, as to why there should not be a general act applicable to all the public-land States covering this particular question. The only reason is that the necessity does not arise in many of the other States, perhaps in none of them, except in Nevada. Up to the present time, at least, no effort has been made to resort to subterranean sources of water supply in Montana. We are now applying electrical power to the raising of water from the streams of our State for the purpose of irrigation. In other States in the West, notably in the State of California—the Senator from California will probably confirm this statement—water is pumped from underground sources for the purpose of irrigation. It may be that eventually underground sources will be found in other States, but a comparison of most of the western States with the State of Nevada would show the truth of what was stated by the Senator from that State. Take my own State, for instance; it is watered by many large rivers and many bountiful streams, and they afford sources of supply when power is applied to the elevation of the water to a higher level; but the State of Nevada is not so bountifully supplied in that respect, and the people there are obliged accordingly to seek other sources. If there were any occasion for the application of such an act to the lands in the State of Montana I should be very glad to insist upon its being made general in its terms, but there seems to be no necessity at the present time for that, perhaps, outside of the State of Nevada.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, the same necessity for legislation of this kind does not exist in the State of California. An abundance of subterranean water has been discovered in our State, and has been developed by individual enterprise; indeed, it has been a matter of the greatest surprise that so large a quantity of water could be developed from underground. Almost all of the great valleys in the State of California have been found to be natural reservoirs filled with water. A very great part of the water being used now for irrigation and other purposes has been developed from underground sources, and it has not been asked that any legislation of this kind be extended to California, because the expense of developing the water there is nothing like so great as it is in Nevada. I think the proposed legislation as applied to that State is entirely just, and I hope the bill will be passed.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the Government could not do less, it seems to me, than the passage of this bill in aid of the marketing and disposal of its public domain in Nevada. Over three-fourths of the area of that State is in Government ownership. The Government is almost in the position of an absentee owner, without any particular interest in the State, and doing nothing whatever for its development beyond that portion which has been assigned to the State of Nevada out of the reclamation fund.

As my colleague has stated, there are but four rivers in that State. They would hardly be dignified by the name of rivers elsewhere. They rise in the mountains and sink in the desert; that is to say, their waters lie in the lower spaces of the desert in great lakes, where they are drunk up by the sun.

We have now practically exhausted those lakes. I say we have exhausted them because we have prevented the waters from reaching them, both by private irrigation projects and by Government irrigation projects; and yet we have only been able to put into private ownership something like 3,000,000 acres in that State out of a total of over 70,000,000 acres.

This bill simply offers a premium to the man who is willing to go to the work and expense of digging a well in order to find subterranean water. I understand that the expense of such a well is rarely less than $1,000, and oftentimes exceeds that amount. The Government might well be called upon to expend a very considerable amount of money in preparing this land for settlement. I think it is its duty, as proprietor of the land, to prepare it for settlement, and it is its duty to the State of Nevada to do it; but thus far we have not been able to prevail upon the Government to enter upon any extended scheme for the exploration and discovery of subterranean waters.

It seems to me, therefore, that this bill, which gives to an individual a right simply to explore for water, and, if he finds enough water, to acquire title to 2,500 acres of desert land now worthless, is an exceedingly reasonable bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not desire to delay this bill a moment. On the contrary, it is a rare pleasure to find a bill which does not call upon the Government to spend money for the benefit of some of the people which they ought to spend themselves. It is a rare pleasure to see a bill which simply opens the door to private enterprise and private energy to develop undeveloped lands. It is very gratifying to me to see such a bill, and I shall vote for it with the greatest possible pleasure.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, section 6 of the proposed bill provides for the reservation from the operating clause of the patent of "all the coal and other valuable minerals in the lands so entered and patented." I wish to inquire of the Senator from Nevada whether that reservation is broad enough, or is intended to be broad enough, to include veins of gold, silver, lead, and other metalliferous deposits?

Mr. PITTMAN. In line 25, at the bottom of page 3, in section 6, the bill says:

> The coal and other valuable mineral deposits in such lands shall be subject to disposal by the United States in accordance with the provisions of the coal and mineral land laws in force at the time of such disposal.

Mr. THOMAS. If it does include that class of deposits, I can foresee a great deal of complication and trouble arising from the attempt to prospect for valuable mineral deposits on these lands under the mining act of 1872, which is confined to lands upon the public domain, and which requires certain preliminary steps to be taken before the right to locate can be exercised.

I believe it would be very much better for the Government, for the prospector, and for the operator under the provisions of this bill, if there were no such exception; and I shall therefore offer an amendment to eliminate section 6 from the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, before the Senator does that, I trust that he will consider the matter for a minute. This bill, as it was originally prepared by me, did not contain that reservation. When a similar bill was introduced in the House of Representatives, at my request, it met with serious opposition on the very ground that it might be used for the purpose of grabbing mineral lands. There was not the slightest chance on earth of passing such a bill through the House of Representatives if there was the slightest suspicion that the bill could be utilized for the purpose of acquiring mineral lands under the guise of obtaining agricultural lands. This reservation from all characters of agricultural entries is usual; and, without discussing the question whether or not it is a good provision, I must say that it is the policy of Congress, as I see it, not to permit the acquisition of any character of minerals through any agricultural entry.

In my opinion, if the Senator should carry such an amendment as that he would destroy the bill. It would subject it to a suspicion which I had not in mind at the time I originally introduced the bill, but which might very well be entertained. I certainly ask him to allow the bill to remain in the form in which it has been approved by the Public Lands Committees of both bodies and by the Department of the Interior.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator please tell me how a citizen of the United States can exercise his right of acquiring a vein of gold, silver, lead, or other metalliferous deposit upon or within a 640-acre tract that is designed to reward the finder of water in the area which is included in his permit?

Mr. PITTMAN. I may answer, if the Senator will permit me, by saying that if a patent were granted for agricultural purposes, including the minerals, the prospector would be in exactly the same position with regard to that particular piece of land. Undoubtedly, if the minerals under the land are not exposed they are not subject to location either by the man who owns the surface right under this bill or by outside prospectors. In neither case are the minerals subject to location under the mining law; but the Government by this bill reserves those minerals. It segregates them from the lands primarily granted for agricultural purposes. I may say that while there is no discovery on the surface it is perfectly within the power of Congress at any time to grant a right of condemnation, if it sees fit, of a prospecting area.

Mr. THOMAS. I am aware, of course, of the effect of the measure in that it provides that the Government shall retain title to virtually everything except the surface of the ground and such rights as are inseparable from its use for agricultural purposes. It appears to me, however, that the practical operation of this section would be, and I think it ought to be, to confer upon the successful prospector for water the metalliferous deposits, if any, which may be within his ground. At the same time, if not excluded, it may prove a fruitful source of litigation. I think the bill would be a great deal better if these reservations did not appear, and if, as to land classified as agricultural land—because I presume that is the only land upon which these permits would be issued—the bill should provide for the acquisition of complete title to 640 acres as a reward for developing its subterranean water courses.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I believe that a person who goes to the expense of prospecting for artesian water in the State of Nevada is entitled as a matter of right to everything which is contained in his land. I would favor that if I thought it would pass the bill; but I am confident that the inclusion of any such right in this grant would mean the destruction of the bill.

The matter stands in this way: We have been trying for years to obtain this character of legislation. Everyone seems to recognize that it is vital to the growth and success of our State. As far as the mineral development of our State is concerned, it has reached a high stage of development. It is today one of the greatest producers of gold and silver in the country. Our laws have taken care of that branch of our industries fairly well; but, as has been shown by the record here, the agricultural opportunities of our State have been neglected. The Senators from the Western States who have kindly supported this bill state that they do not need this legislation in their States, and I believe it is true; but we have not any opportunity that I can see at the present time to develop the further agricultural resources of our State except through the development of the subsurface waters.

I want to say, further, that this water will not be wasted upon that land. It is worthy of a great expense, because the record of the Agricultural Department discloses that the 15,000,000 acres of valley land in that State are rich in natural fertilizers, such as potash and nitrates and others fertilizers of that character. The record of the department discloses the fact that the arid lands of that State—lands which, prior to irrigation, were growing nothing but sagebrush and possibly a little grass—by placing water thereon now raise from 5 to 7 tons of alfalfa to the acre. It is not only a matter of great value to our State, but it is a matter of great value to the country, in the increasing of the production of foodstuffs.

I know that the Senator is interested in the passage of this bill. I know that his knowledge of western conditions leads him at this time to look to the production of the metals that may underlie that ground. I say to him, however, that if these minerals are disclosed on the surface of the ground, the ground is not subject to this bill. If they are not disclosed on the surface of the ground, still the Government desires to prevent any fraud on the Government in the acquisition of this land under the guise of entering it for agricultural purposes, while at the same time it may be to acquire large bodies of coal or other valuable minerals that are apparently concealed under the surface, but are known to the entryman.

As I have said before, I think the entryman should have whatever is in his land; but I assure the Senator, from having studied this question, from the experience I have had in the House with this bill, from the expressions by the leaders of both sides of the House of Representatives, that I believe if the Senator's amendment carries the bill will die; and I certainly would rather have what I can get for the people of our State than to stand here on a technical question trying to get more, with the probability of losing all.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am quite as anxious as any Member of this body can be to vote for any measure which will promote the agricultural interests of the great State of Nevada, with whose conditions I am somewhat familiar. I am conscious of the existence of every fact which has been stated by the Senator in explanation of the appearance of section 6 in the bill. Ordinarily, I should not feel like interposing any objection whatever to the form or the substance of the measure, and I would not do so now if it were not for the fact that this is but one of the many instances to be presented for our consideration in which the national governmental activities are going to be increased and enlarged within the area of the public-land States in such a way as ultimately to deprive us largely, if not entirely, of the right of local self-government.

I never have been impressed with the notion that because a measure represents all that can possibly be secured, it, for such reason, should not be opposed. I think that this bill, as drawn, is in line with a scheme of legislation that I regard as highly injurious to the State which I in part represent on this floor, and I am not willing to see enacted into law any bill, however meritorious it may be, which contains what seems to me a wrong principle without at least entering my protest against it.

Here is a measure that is of the most beneficent character. It is designed to, and I think it will, reclaim large bodies of land in the State of Nevada which to-day, as the Senator says, are of no material use to anybody. Until recently there were no exceptions of any importance to agricultural patents. It has been the policy of this Government, and it is the right policy, to give to the citizens of the United States who take advantage of the privileges of the land laws, and who acquire title by observing the requirements of those laws, the land in every particular, in fee simple, without any reservation whatever.

Our country has prospered, Mr. President, and grown—indeed, there is no such precedent in the history of mankind—under the beneficent results and influences of this wise land legislation. But a new spirit has come over the dreams of the people, and the Government, in imitation of monarchies, is establishing its permanent control, eo ipso, over the mineral contents of all the lands undisposed of within the boundaries of the Nation. In this instance it is proposed to encourage the agricultural development of land, and it ought to be, by granting the individual or association which expends his or its money for that purpose, virtually a title to the surface of the ground, and whatever may be in that land of any mineral value whatever is reserved by the act of Government with the right to give to others an opportunity to go upon the premises and explore and prospect for it. I can readily see how that is going to breed many evils and difficulties which will, perhaps, more than offset the benefits that may be conferred upon the State through the operation of this law.

If it should so happen, and such things have occurred in the West, that valuable deposits of ore should be found within the immediate vicinity of any of the areas conveyed by the Government under the operation of this law, the attraction and the consequent excitement would inevitably result in overrunning the premises, which, so far as the surface is concerned, subject to this right of exploration have been conferred upon the successful seeker for subterranean watercourses. Questions will arise as to the extent to which that surface can be disturbed in Nevada in the wild rush to secure that which the Government has reserved and wants and expects to bestow upon other seekers after minerals.

I think this section ought to go out. I am not vain enough to suppose that my views are the views of a majority of this Chamber, because I have observed with some degree of dread that the so-called conservation policy of the Government, by means of which millions of acres of the public domain are to be forever withheld from the jurisdiction of the State where they are located, is increasingly active, notwithstanding the protests of some of the States which are thereby affected.

I shall not insist upon a roll call upon my amendment, but I want the opportunity myself to be recorded, as far as my objections will record it, against the section which withholds the great part of the values of the land from the man who has taken chances and made it productive.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] what the present condition of the reclamation fund is.

Mr. PITTMAN. I beg to say that the reclamation fund is very low, and in fact unless it receives assistance from some such source as is provided in this bill and other sources the Government is liable to find itself in a position of suffering a failure of a great many reclamation projects.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I was one of the representatives from the eastern part of our country who took an active interest in and supported as vigorously as I could that great project, but I have thought from some things that have come to my attention that it was not being carried out as successfully as we had hoped it would be.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. GALLINGER. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I think I may give the Senator from New Hampshire some information respecting the reclamation fund. There is no money now for carrying out any new projects. All the money now and probably for the next 17 years will be needed for the purpose of completing projects already under way. I have that information directly from the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GALLINGER. I made the inquiry, Mr. President, for the reason that section 5 provides that 50 per cent of the amounts that are derived from the operation of this bill shall be paid into the reclamation fund, and then one-half of that shall be diverted to the support of public schools and other public uses in Nevada. That provision in the bill attracted my attention, especially when it is considered in connection with the next bill on the calendar reported by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], which proposes to give one-tenth of the entire area of the State of Nevada to the public schools. That certainly is a very sweeping and startling proposition, and when that is reached I presume it will be discussed.

It occurs to me that in this bill the money that is raised should go to the reclamation fund, and not a part of it be diverted to the purpose of education, however worthy that purpose may be, thus recouping the reclamation fund, which seems to be practically exhausted.

I have been sometimes surprised, Mr. President, to hear Senators from the public-land States say that all the public lands ought to be given over to their States, asserting that they belong to those States. I have combated that idea in a modest way heretofore, holding to the view that those lands are the lands of the people of this country, not of the inhabitants of the particular State where the lands are located. But notwithstanding that I am in favor of a liberal policy toward a a State situated as is Nevada.

I am in favor of the general purposes of this bill. I think it is in the main good legislation, and I only rose for the purpose of saying that I am afraid the Senator from Nevada is asking too much for the educational institutions of his State. Of course we want to build up the schools and colleges in Nevada as we do in other parts of the country, but we ought not to overreach in the matter.

The proposition in the next bill is particularly what attracted my attention. Nevada has 70,000,000 acres of public land, and the proposition is to give 10,000,000 of it to the State to be used for educational purposes.

Mr. President, I think it would be wise if the Senator would allow the provision that one-half the money derived from the operation of the bill shall be passed over to the State for educational purposes to go out of the bill, and let the whole amount go into the reclamation fund.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the language. From the remarks of the Senator it would appear that he believes this money is to be divided originally between the reclamation fund and the State. If he will read it carefully, he will see that all the proceeds go, first, to the reclamation fund, and that it remains in the reclamation fund until a project is completed and the Government has been reimbursed. After that has taken place it is divided between the State and the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Nevada if he does really believe, in view of what already has happened in regard to this matter of reimbursement to the Government, that there will be any reimbursement in this case?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, of course I am not sufficiently familiar with the details of these projects to go into them; but admitting that the Senator is right, and he has given this subject a great deal of study, admitting that there will never be any drawback to the State—and it is very possible—I think that the carrying on of the great scheme of irrigation that has been laid out will utilize all the money, and that it will never come back to the State, except in improvements and the reduction of the costs of these projects, then the contention of the Senator that the provision means nothing is correct. There is, however, a possibility of their being a surplus. In other words, the provision says if something happens which the Senator does not believe ever will happen, then the State will get 50 per cent of the benefit of it.

Personally I am inclined to agree with the Senator that the proviso is of little benefit to the State. I think that the State will be compelled to look to other sources for the support of its public schools. I will take that matter up, if the Senator desires, on the next bill, providing for a grant of 7,000,000 acres to our State.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have no desire to have the Senator waste any time in the discussion of this matter. I simply wanted to ascertain the facts as to the condition of the reclamation fund. I will ask the Senator how liberal the provisions were that were made in the original act relating to the public schools of Nevada. I suppose there was a grant of land of very considerable magnitude made at that time. Was there not?

Mr. PITTMAN. Strange to say, there was not. The peculiar situation in regard to the State of Nevada is this: The Government, through Congress, established a policy with regard to the public-land States in relation to their schools and other public works. Every public-land State has been granted in land over twice as much as the State of Nevada; some of them three times as much. In addition to those grants of twice as much as to the State of Nevada and three times as much, there has been a money grant, consisting of 5 per cent of the proceeds of the sale of all the public lands by the Government, which, added to the other percentages, means that the least liberally treated public-land State has received over 12 per cent of the public lands within the State, while the most generously treated of the public-land States have received over 20 per cent.

Now, Nevada is not asking for a change of policy established by the Government with regard to public land. It is not asking that it be enlarged or extended. It is simply asking that it be treated under the policies and practices of the Government on an equality with the least liberally treated public-land State. That is all we are asking.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I can readily see whether it was just legislation or not, that some of the public-land States containing a population very much in excess of that of Nevada would need more money for educational purpose than the State of Nevada. I have no disposition to oppose any legislation that will be of benefit to the present population of the State, the present children of the State, and the future population which we hope Nevada will have. I am looking forward to the time when Nevada will be a great State, provided that legislation along the lines of this bill is not halted, and I do not want to halt it.

Mr. President, I have a very great desire to see the reclamation project a success. I gave it some study at its inception, and I have watched its progress up to the present time. I have come to the conclusion that the funds of the Government have not been wisely used in very many cases. I have also come to the conclusion that so far as reimbursement on the part of those benefited is concerned it will be of very little account. But, notwithstanding that, I want to see the work go on. I want to see the arid and semiarid lands of this great country reclaimed because we will need them in the future. I would be the last man in this body to place any unreasonable obstruction in the path of legislation on the subject. That being the case, Mr. President, I will withhold any further objection to the bill and let it pass, as far as I am concerned, without obstruction, notwithstanding my opinion remains unchanged as to the wisdom of dividing the fund as is proposed.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is mistaken in regard to the return of this reclamation fund. I presume there have been some failures. I know there have been. It is natural that we should expect in carrying out the reclamation law that there would be mistakes made, but I am satisfied in regard to several projects with which I am personally familiar that the Government is going to get back every dollar that has been invested in them.

I feel a little jealous of the reclamation fund, and that is one reason why I do not like one of the provisions of this bill. Section 5 provides, as the Senator from New Hampshire said, that one-half of the money that accrues to the Government by virtue of the bill shall, after it has once passed through the reclamation fund, be returned to the State of Nevada. There is no such provision applying to the other public lands of the United States. I do not, myself, see why there should be a different provision in regard to the public lands of Nevada in the money that comes from the sale of public lands than in regard to any other State.

The Senator from Nevada, I rather gain from what he says, is of the opinion, as expressed by the Senator from New Hampshire, that this fund never would be returned, and that consequently there would be nothing to turn over to the State of Nevada. If it should turn out that that is true, then the Senator certainly could not object to striking from the bill the provision which undertakes to turn over money to the State of Nevada that under his idea never could be turned over anyway.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator for a question. I hope the Senator will not——

Mr. PITTMAN. I wanted to ask the Senator a question right in this connection.

Mr. NORRIS. All right, I shall be very glad to have the Senator interrogate me.

Mr. PITTMAN. While I believe that the development of these great projects will require all the money that can be raised, not only from the projects, but from such sources as are provided in bills of this character, it is very problematical as to whether there will be any surplus after the completion of those projects. I certainly think that our State is entitled to half of that surplus after it has been applied to the completion of the projects, and if there is even a chance that there will be a surplus I feel that I am justified in asking that in the division of that surplus, after it has served its purpose with regard to the project, our State shall have half of it. It not only may be applied to the school fund, but to other institutions.

The Senator wanted to know if this was special legislation in regard to Nevada. I want to say it is not. Permit me to say that the general leasing bill which passed the other House last year contained this exact provision, and it was placed in the bill by the Public Lands Committee of the House because it was in accord with the policy established by the House general leasing bill. I want also to say that every public-land State, as I recollect, has had special legislation of this character. Such legislation provided that the Government should divide with the State proceeds of sales of public lands, giving the State 5 per cent of such proceeds. Such a law was generally passed on the admission of a State into the Union. California did not have that provision when it was admitted, but 10 years later a bill passed Congress giving to California 5 per cent of the proceeds of the sales of the public domain from that date on; and not only that, but an appropriation bill was also passed to pay back to California 5 per cent of the proceeds of all public lands sold since the admission of California as a State and up to the time of the passage of the 5 per cent bill. There is unlimited precedent for this character of legislation.

Let me say to the Senator that the reason this bill is in its present form is because it embodies the policy that was adopted at last session of Congress by the Public Lands Committee of the other House and by the House itself. In accordance with that policy, I included it in the bill at this time. That was the real reason.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, the question of the Senator from Nevada is a very short one, and I will undertake to answer it. In the first place, the precedent, which he says was established in the general leasing bill, never became a law and is not a law now. In the next place, if it had become a law, it would have applied, by its terms, to all of the lands leased, regardless of the State in which they might be located. This bill provides that only the public lands in the State of Nevada shall, after they have been sold, have the proceeds placed in the reclamation fund; and after such proceeds have once been used, instead of being returned to the reclamation fund 50 per cent of them shall be turned over to the State of Nevada. The balance of the reclamation fund is made up by the sale of the public lands of the various States wherever there are any public lands and paid into the reclamation fund. When once used it is used over again; it becomes a revolving fund. There is not any of the balance of the reclamation fund that is turned back to the States where the land reclaimed is located. Why there should be a provision as to Nevada that the proceeds from the sale of public lands should be divided between the State and the reclamation fund, when no such division takes place elsewhere, is more than I can say. It does not seem to me to be fair.

In the next place, the effect of this legislation will be to seriously diminish the amount of money in the reclamation fund, a fund that is already too small. It seems to me that provision as to the sale of public lands in Nevada ought to be the same as it is regarding the sale of public lands in Utah or in Nebraska or in South Dakota or in any other State where such lands might be located.

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. PITTMAN addressed the Chair.

Mr. NORRIS. I yield first to the Senator from New Hampshire and shall then yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. GALLINGER. I merely wish to make an inquiry. I take it that this is not in itself a very important matter so far as the amount of money involved is concerned; but if the pending bill is passed in its present form will it not be used as a precedent for dividing the reclamation fund in other bills relating to other States?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is my fear.

Mr. NORRIS. If the reclamation fund is to be divided, then it ought to be divided everywhere. This will establish a precedent that will make it fair to divide it elsewhere.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I will yield in just a moment.

First answering the Senator's suggestion in regard to the disposition of the proceeds of the public lands, as provided for in the leasing bill, I will say that was a provision for a new fund. The reclamation act had made no provision for acquiring money for the reclamation fund from any source, except from the sale of public lands, but when the leasing bill was under consideration, as it passed the other House and as it was reported by the Senate committee to this body, it was thought that it would be a good thing to add to that fund. It was not provided that the proceeds from the sale of public lands in the different States should be divided, but there was provided an additional fund. That act divided the money that was paid for leasing between the States and the reclamation fund. So, as a matter of fact, instead of diminishing the reclamation fund, it increased it, while this bill takes it away from the reclamation fund.

I think the bill ought to be amended by striking from section 5 all of the section after the word "act" in line 9. I will now yield to the Senator from Nevada, if he wishes to ask another question.

Mr. PITTMAN. I simply want to say that the general leasing bill did deal with the public domain of the country. It dealt with various characters of mining material and attempted to dispose of them. The Government did set a precedent by granting a portion of the proceeds of the sale of the public domain to the public-land States, excepting Nevada.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Senator from Nevada does not claim, does he, that in making provision for a reclamation fund there was a division between the States in the reclamation fund of the proceeds from the sale of public lands?

Mr. PITTMAN. There never was any provision that I recollect in the reclamation act for the turning in of the proceeds of the sales of public lands to the reclamation fund, except with regard to the lands within the project to be directly benefited. The land that is being dealt with by this bill is not land within any irrigation project; it is outside, you will remember.

Mr. NORRIS. Any new project would be outside of any other project. This is an irrigation project.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is not an irrigation project.

Mr. NORRIS. It is a plan to irrigate public lands of the United States by pumping on them artesian water, instead of by diverting the water from streams. That is the only difference.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is not an irrigation project that derives any benefit from the irrigation fund in which you attempt to place this money; that is the distinction.

Mr. NORRIS. No; but the proceeds of it come from the sales of public land, and the irrigation fund is made up mostly—entirely, I believe—of money that comes from the sale of land not originally included in any irrigation project. That is the way the fund originated.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not understand the Senator's construction of the law.

Mr. NORRIS. Originally all of the money in the fund came from that source. Of course, when, later on, public land was irrigated and sold by the Government to private irrigators, that money was turned into the fund the same as the money that came in from public land which was located a thousand miles away from any irrigation project.

Mr. PITTMAN. I consent to the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me, I desire formally to offer the amendment to strike out, in section 5, all after the word "act," in line 9.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a prior amendment pending.

Mr. NORRIS. I was not aware of that fact.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] to strike out section 6.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not understand that the Senator in charge of the bill consents to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; no.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is the pending motion, I understand.

Mr. PITTMAN. I oppose the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, but I will not oppose the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understand, however, that the amendment of the Senator from Colorado is now before the Senate.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am opposed to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado is the pending amendment.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I had not intended to say anything upon this bill, and, the Senator in charge of the bill having consented to have stricken from the bill a portion of section 5, I shall make no objection to such action; but I think that this body is going to be compelled to treat with this matter at a very early date, and in a very radical way. The review board under the Reclamation Service, as I understand, will submit a report to the Congress of the United States in a short time, and from my knowledge of the reclamation projects and of the method of conducting the reclamation work, I think, sir, that I can safely say that instead of there being any money returned when these projects are finished, including all the reclamation fund, the 5 per cent derived from the sale of public lands, and the funds derived from all other sources, including the payments which are supposed to be made by individuals under each project for the project itself, we are going to find ourselves in the position of being at least 25 per cent short; in other words, granting that every project was completed and that every owner under every project had paid the full amount of the cost assessed per acre against his land, including the 5 per cent from the sales of all public lands turned into the reclamation fund, and including all other sources of revenue, you will find that, instead of being in a position to return any portion of the $20,000,000 loaned by the Government to the reclamation fund, that fund will be 25 per cent short of being self-supporting. This, I think, I can safely say now. Granting, for illustration, that the total amount expended on the reclamation projects up to date has been $100,000,000 and that every dollar of revenue from every possible source has been turned back into the Treasury, including the amount per acre assessed against the owners or holders under the reclamation projects, instead of there being $100,000,000 you would only have $75,000,000 in the Treasury. I think the reports generally or an investigation by this body will show that to be the fact; and that is upon the basis, Mr. President, of the lowest estimate of $30 per acre for one project, and from that up to $85 and $90 per acre charged against the owners on other projects.

Under one project I know that the board's report will show a necessary assessment against land, not public land but land in private ownership, land having water rights 300 years old from a certain source, which water rights were surrendered to the Government by a contract between the owners and that Government under which there should be a fixed charge against those lands, under a primary contract that a certain amount per acre should be paid by the owners of those lands. The owners of the lands, then in cultivation, lands to secure the title to which this Government paid a foreign Government $10,000,000 seventy years ago; lands, as I have said, in cultivation, in private ownership, and having prior water rights, entered into a contract with the Reclamation Service by which it was guaranteed that the cost should not be more than $40 per acre, which they agreed to pay, and they were persuaded—and I shall produce the documentary evidence when necessary—that they might secure their water rights from the Government by the construction and operation of this particular project at less than $40 per acre by agreeing to pay the actual cost, it being fixed at a maximum amount, namely, $40 per acre. So, under representations from the Reclamation Service the owners of land under this particular project altered their contracts and agreed to pay the actual cost, and yet there is now being assessed against those people $85 per acre against lands which they owned and for which they had water rights. Furthermore, the Government of the United States, by legal proceedings, had prior to this time forfeited the rights of private individuals after $150,000 had been paid or expended by those individuals upon this identical project, and took over without compensation all the property of the parties, which it forfeited, and proceeded to construct this irrigation project itself for the purpose of carrying out its treaty obligations with a foreign country.

Mr. President, in pursuance of this general policy the Government forfeited, as I have said, rights acquired under the laws of the United States by individuals, or a corporation organized to carry out the purposes of irrigating these particular lands. Under a contract between this corporation and the individual water-right owners, to whom I now refer, they were to secure perpetually water rights free, costing them nothing per acre, paying simply an annual charge for the carrying of the water. The great Government of the United States stepped in to carry out its treaty obligations and turned over to the Reclamation Service the construction of this great irrigation enterprise, with the result that, instead of obtaining their water rights for nothing, these people are compelled to surrender their water rights without compensation to the Government of the United States and to agree to pay $40 per acre for water to be used upon their lands, the title to which had descended to them for hundreds of years and the title to the water of which had descended to them from time immemorial. They were persuaded then, as I have said, to agree that they would pay the costs assessed against them per acre in this enterprise under written statements and estimates, that by so doing they would save something out of the $40 per acre which they had just agreed to pay, and now they are confronted with their contract and a demand that they shall pay into the reclamation fund $85 per acre.

I say to you, Mr. President, with sorrow, that the reclamation policy of the United States is an absolute failure, in my judgment. Upon some projects there may have been a measure of success, but farmers in my portion of the country can not pay $85 per acre for water and live.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. FALL. I yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator if, in addition to that $85 per acre, it is not provided that the annual charge shall be kept up?

Mr. FALL. Certainly, sir; and the estimate made originally included the necessary drainage of the land. Now, aside from the general cost of the project, they are confronted with the proposition that, with the construction of this project and the use of the waters under the project, as engineered and carried out by the Reclamation Service, they are going to be charged with from two and a half to seven millions of dollars for the drainage of their lands.

Mr. President, I am now addressing myself to the Senate upon this subject for this reason: I say to you that when this cost-review report comes in it is going to be apparent to the Congress of the United States, in my judgment, that radical legislation of some character must be enacted to save the reclamation projects and to assist in the development of our great country in the West.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. FALL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator again state to what report he refers?

Mr. FALL. It is the cost-review report. A committee was appointed by the department, as I understand, to review the costs of all these reclamation projects, and it is preparing a report for submission to Congress, which I understand will be in within a few days.

Mr. President, I have given great consideration to this subject. My people are very seriously interested in it, as are the people of the arid West generally. I say to you frankly, sir, that I can see no method by which the reclamation projects can be completed in justice to the people holding lands under them except by providing funds which will complete those projects from other sources than those of a charge against the people themselves using water and the sale of the public lands.

Mr. President, in the suburbs of Washington or Chicago or New York it is possible that a man so fortunately situated as to be the owner of a piece of improved property on which he is conducting truck farming, intensive farming, with a market at his door for everything that he can raise, might be able to make a living for himself and his family, if there were no interest to pay, upon land priced at $150 an acre. These lands of which I speak particularly were worth, before this irrigation project was inaugurated, sir, as much money as they can be sold for now, and more, because there is saddled upon them an indebtedness of $85 per acre.

My own judgment is, as I say, after mature consideration, that other funds must be provided. The farmers under these projects to-day can not make a living and pay the cost to the Government, although under a majority of the projects they are not paying the Government for their lands, but are simply repaying to the Government the actual cost per acre for the delivery of water to them. As I say, this runs in some instances—in only one, I believe—as low as $30 per acre for water. In others, and in the majority of instances, the cost is much higher. In Arizona, for instance, under the great project which has just been completed, those people were told that they would never have to pay more than $30 per acre for water, and yet there is assessed against them now an indeterminate sum, with a minimum of $65 per acre, which they will be compelled to pay.

There is a great public domain yet existing, belonging to the people of the United States, located in the arid States of the West—Colorado, Nebraska, Nevada, and the other States, New Mexico and Arizona. The greater portion of this domain is absolutely useless for anything except grazing purposes, and never can be used for any other purpose than that of grazing stock. It is possible that a plan may be worked out by which the Congress of the United States will enable those States to be settled by stock homesteaders. When you undertake to limit them in ownership to 640 acres of that dry, arid, grazing land, you place upon one who is so unfortunate as to secure the title a liability and not an asset. It is impossible upon 640 acres for any family or any man to make a living where it requires from 30 to 60 acres per cow for grazing.

This is, of course, well known to all those from the arid section of the country. That land can be disposed of in tracts of, say, 4,000 acres for grazing homesteads at a price which will place money in the Treasury of the United States, which money can be used to complete these irrigation projects without taxing the people generally in the United States for assistance. In my judgment some policy of this character must be worked out, because the lands under the projects as they are being completed can never pay them. I know lands the titles to which have been owned, as I said, from time immemorial, which will be surrendered; and what are you going to do with them? You will never be able to recolonize those lands unless you bring in Belgians or southern Italians or foreigners of some kind. The American will not do it; and you might as well understand that the American is not a truck farmer, and never will be. We have been doing business on too great a scale.

It may be that in our socialistic state to come 50 years from now, or possibly in less time, if it ever does come, the American may consent to be placed on an equality with those people who cultivate 1, 2, or 3 acres; that the American may consent to see his wife and children working with a hoe to make a living. That time has not come yet, however; and when that time does come these millions and millions of acres of arid land in the West can not be so worked under any system. There is no water for irrigation. They are only useful and can only be used, aside from the mineral wealth which may underlie the surface, for stock grazing of some character. By working out a comprehensive plan for the disposition of these lands, limiting the number of acres which any one person may acquire, but allowing him to acquire a sufficient number of acres to justify him in placing upon the lands 200 to 300 or 400 head of cattle, with that number of cattle the settler can make a living for himself and educate his children. He can do it with nothing less.

What are you going to do with the land? The report of the Secretary of the Interior, printed and published at this session of Congress, shows that in the administration of the public lands of the United States the receipts total approximately five millions of dollars for this year and the disbursements three millions of dollars. If you will examine that report, however, you will discover that in the receipts are included one and a half million dollars for the Indian lands, which form no part of the general land fund, which go directly to the Indians, and that the disbursements to the Indian fund are not included in the disbursements, and that, as a matter of fact, the showing of receipts above disbursements is about $500,000. I will undertake to show to this body that instead of there being any net receipts in the administration of the public lands of the United States, including the sale of minerals, phosphates, oils, coal, and other minerals, the administration of the public lands of the United States is costing now, and has for years cost the people of the United States, from 6 to 10 cents per acre more than has ever been received from them.

If the 5 per cent paid into the reclamation fund were based upon net receipts, and the reclamation fund were to be charged with any liabilities, the reclamation fund would owe money instead of receiving 5 per cent, because there are no net proceeds. These are facts which at the proper time I shall present to this body. The figures are taken from the reports of the Interior Department itself. I am sorry to say, sir, that you may appoint an investigating committee to-day and may ask of the Interior Department information upon some of the propositions which I have advanced—for instance, as to the cost per acre of the administration of the public lands to-day in the United States—and they can not answer your question, and they will admit it. Therefore it has been necessary to go, for instance, to the Department of Justice, where the contests upon public land, mining claims, etc., are conducted, and endeavor to obtain from their records the cost of those contests, because in no instance do you find them upon the books of the Interior Department.

In passing I may remark, Mr. President, that while I will not say the figures as to the public lands in the report of the Secretary of the Interior are padded, by mistake they show a balance of $2,000,000, when under his own figures they should show only $500,000; that he does not report, because it is not in his department, the fact that in the administration of the forest reserves of the United States, which form a part of this great public domain, and the most valuable part which we have remaining, even in the administration of the forest reserves the Agricultural Department shows a shortage of $2,000,000 last year.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. FALL. I do.

Mr. PITTMAN. I rose simply to ask the Senator from New Mexico if he would be willing to postpone his discussion on this part of the subject, so that we might get a vote on the bill before 2 o'clock?

Mr. FALL. I have no desire to prevent the disposition of the bill, Mr. President. I should have voted for the Senator's bill without the elimination of any part of section 5. I do not think it would have done him a particle of good; but at the same time, differing from the Senator from New Hampshire, I would have liked to see a precedent established.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] to strike out section 6 of the bill.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 9, after the word "act," the Senator from Nebraska proposes to strike out the comma and the remainder of the section down to the period.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask that the Secretary state what it is proposed to strike out?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment in full.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 9, after the word "act," it is proposed to strike out the following words:

> And after use thereof in the construction of reclamation works and upon return to the reclamation fund of any such moneys in the manner provided by the reclamation act and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto 50 per cent of the amounts so utilized in and returned to the reclamation fund shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury after the expiration of each fiscal year to the State of Nevada, said moneys to be used by said State for the support of public schools or other educational institutions or for the construction of public improvements, or both, as the legislature of the State may direct.

Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will state to the Senator from Idaho that I have agreed to that amendment, which was debated for quite a while.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

The bill (S. 2520) granting to the State of Nevada 7,000,000 acres of land in said State for the use and benefit of the public schools of Nevada and the State university of the State of Nevada was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

LANDS IN NEVADA.

The bill (S. 898) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to designate certain tracts of land in the State of Nevada upon which continuous residence shall not be required under the homestead laws was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall find that any tracts of land in the State of Nevada subject to entry under the act to provide for an enlarged homestead, approved February 19, 1909, do not have upon them a sufficient supply of water suitable for domestic purposes as would make continuous residence upon the lands possible, he may, in his discretion, designate such tracts of land, not to exceed in the aggregate 2,000,000 acres, and thereafter they shall be subject to entry under this act without the necessity of residence: Provided, That in such event the entryman on any such entry shall in good faith cultivate not less than one-eighth of the entire area of the entry during the second year, one-fourth during the third year, and one-half during the fourth and fifth years after the date of such entry, and that after entry and until final proof the entryman shall reside within such distance of said land as will enable him to successfully farm the same.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to call the Senate's attention to the fact that if the bill becomes a law and provides for one-eighth of the entire area of the entry to be cultivated during the second year, one-fourth during the third year, and one-half during the fourth and fifth years after the date of the entry, the entryman will find it impossible to successfully comply with the law. I want also to call the attention of the Senator from Nevada to the fact that the enlarged-homestead law of February 19, 1909, applied only to the State of Utah. Since the passage of that law there has been a similar law made applicable to the State of Idaho. It was found that it was impossible to cultivate as large a percentage of the land as the law required. In order that dry farming may be a success, the lands have to be summer fallowed; and this bill requires during the fourth and fifth years cultivation of 160 acres and that the other 160 acres should be summer fallowed.

Now, there is not a piece of land of 320 acres in Nevada that can be entered under this bill which could possibly be so cultivated and summer fallowed. For the same reason, when the three-year homestead bill was under consideration, and later became a law, there was an amendment to the bill reducing the cultivation required by the enlarged-homestead act one-half, or making it during the second year one-sixteenth, during the third one-eighth, and during the fourth and fifth years one-quarter.

I wish to say to the Senator that I believe that if the bill is passed it ought to be passed with this amount of cultivation required, and no more. If the bill passes as it has been reported I will assure the Senator from Nevada that the entryman will never get a title to the land. That was so obvious, as I said, when we had under consideration the three-year homestead bill, that the amendment was not opposed from any source.

I believe myself this bill, if it passes, ought to have the amendments suggested by me made to it. As far as I am concerned, I am sufficiently interested in the future success of Nevada and the settling of that State by people interested in her agricultural development that I do not want to sit here and allow a bill to pass which I know will be of no assistance to the people of Nevada.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of two o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, Senate bill 381.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, on yesterday I made a request for the insertion in the RECORD of a letter from Hon. R. W. AUSTIN, a Member of the House of Representatives, on the question of the Philippines. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] inquired of me if there was any attack in the letter upon the present administration of affairs in the Philippine Islands, and I said that I had glanced over the letter and was satisfied there was none. Unfortunately I had not read the letter carefully. I now wish to apologize to the Senator from Nebraska for having made a statement that is not borne out by the facts. There are several matters in the letter that I think might well have been objected to by the Senator from Nebraska. Yet, had it been objected to I could have read the letter into the RECORD as it now appears if I had so chosen to do. It was an inadvertence on my part in stating what I did, which I regret.

I have spoken to the Senator from Nebraska about the matter, and while there are several things that I think might well be taken from the letter, if it is to remain in the permanent RECORD, the Senator expressed satisfaction if I would ask that on page 726, in the first column, commencing on the eighth line from the bottom: "The Governor General, the other part of the lawmaking and appointing machine," and so forth, including the balance of that paragraph, shall be stricken from the permanent RECORD, as it is an attack upon the present Delegate from the Philippines. I ask unanimous consent that that be stricken from the permanent RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROUSSARD in the chair). Without objection, it will be stricken from the RECORD.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the action taken by the Senator from New Hampshire is entirely satisfactory. I deplore the fact that the letter should have found a place in the RECORD without an opportunity in the same RECORD to meet the very serious and, as I think, utterly uncalled for charges.

After arranging with the Senator from New Hampshire to have this very offensive part relating to Commissioner QUEZON stricken from the RECORD, I at first thought I would take occasion to-day to reply to the other charges in the letter, but in view of the fact that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] is prepared to speak on the bill to-day, and also in view of the fact that I should like a little time, I will take occasion on Monday, after the bill is laid before the Senate, to reply to the charges involved in Mr. AUSTIN'S letter which are still allowed to remain in the RECORD.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I trust I shall not be considered a reactionary because of any opposition on my part to the pending bill. I think I am as sensitive as anyone of our obligations to the Philippines and to the Filipinos, and no one is more desirous than I that as soon as they show a capacity for it they shall be accorded the full right and privilege of self-government.

A great many things have been discussed while this bill has been pending that are not quite relevant to the bill itself. The question as to the resources of the islands, the question as to the proportion of the expenses paid by taxation of the islanders and by the Government of the United States, respectively, are interesting and important, but the main question to be considered in the discussion of the bill is, after all, as I take it, the capacity of the Filipinos for self-government. Their capacity for independence, the time within which we ought to grant them independence, may be considered relevant, of course, to the issue of the present capacity and ability of the Filipinos to fulfill the requirements of the bill if it becomes a law.

I disclaim, Mr. President, any intention here of making a set speech; but, as I have studied the question, my opposition now to the bill is based upon the testimony of those who have found employment and service in the islands for years and who, because of their close touch with conditions, with the natives in all capacities and situations, ought to be capable of judging of their capacity for self-government, or, short of complete self-government, their capacity for the kind of government authorized by the bill.

My objection, Mr. President, is grounded not alone on the testimony of the ordinary employee or school-teacher, but it is based also upon statements made by those who have visited the islands with the especial purpose of studying the Filipinos, their character, their capacity, their ideals, and aspirations.

My opposition is further based, Mr. President, upon the testimony of high officials, whose sole purpose was, I think, to give the Filipinos the greatest measure of self-government of which they are capable, who were wholly self-disinterested, were governed by a sense of duty and patriotism, and who now speak in the interest and for the welfare of the Filipinos, and speak, too, from their broad knowledge and from their close acquaintance with the subject.

My opposition being based on these grounds, Mr. President, I can not sit here during the debate upon the bill without some expression of that opposition and the grounds on which it is based, for I deem it one of the most serious, one of the most important measures that will come before the Senate.

Before proceeding with some of the authorities and some of the testimony which I wish to cite, I want to call attention to some of the remarkable powers conferred upon the Filipinos by the terms of the bill itself. First, a word in regard to the preamble. Much discussed as that has been, Mr. President, to my mind the preamble of the bill is most objectionable. It holds out a false hope and, by implication, makes a false promise to the Filipinos. If not in the terms, then between the lines of that preamble such interpretation can be read by the intelligent American citizen who gives it a close study. We use the word "independence" in the preamble as a word to conjure with; yet, after all, we are careful to say that we retain unimpaired our sovereignty and that when, in the judgment of the United States, it shall be to the permanent interests of the Filipinos, then independence may be granted.

But, Mr. President, there is enough in the preamble, and it is so phrased as to create discussion and political agitation in the Philippines. As a result of such discussion and agitation among and by the politicians in the Philippines, this preamble, if it is enacted with the bill, will come back, as previous statements and declarations have come, to plague us hereafter, and as they always will come back, for further interpretation or with the demand for the fulfillment of pledges claimed to have been but never in fact made. If we enact this law at all, let us enact it without a preamble suggestive of promises and hopes which, unfulfilled, will be the source of more political agitation and more of the claiming of privileges which we are not now and will not for a long time to come be ready to grant.

Mr. President, I said that my main purpose was to bring into the RECORD here some of this testimony. I am precluded, for very obvious reasons, from giving the names of certain correspondents from whose letters I may be permitted to read. One of them, at least, I know to be in the Government service. The other I am not sure about, but he has been for six years in the Philippines, although the letter I refer to was written by him something over two years ago. He had at that time been more than four years in the Philippines.

I regard these letters, Mr. President, as testimony of the very best kind. They are the testimony of men who have mingled with the Filipinos in their daily life, who have been in their homes and know their social conditions and know of their participation in politics and the motives and influences brought to bear upon them for any participation in politics.

I will read just one short paragraph from the letter I hold in my hand. Senators will have to take the word of a Senator in vouching for the authenticity of these letters. I think it will be readily seen why it would not be proper to give the names of the writers. This writer says:

> It is the opinion of the majority of the Americans of long residence here who have been thrown in close contact with the common people of the different Provinces, speaking many different languages, that the Jones bill is premature—

We all know the Jones bill was the bill before Congress at the last session, the predecessor of the present bill, and essentially the same as the present bill—> as the people are not yet ready for this advanced form of government, believing that they would remain contented for years to come under the present system of government, with some modifications, were it not for the crafty politicians who are seeking to benefit themselves and retain their political positions by agitating at every occasion possible the demand for independence.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Did I understand the Senator to say that the letter was written by an employee of the Philippine government?

Mr. STERLING. No; I think he must be an employee of the Federal Government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Of the Federal Government?

Mr. STERLING. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does the Senator mean in a civil capacity or in the Army?

Mr. STERLING. In a civil capacity.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the Senator recognize that in that very statement, where the writer says it is to the interest of the people to agitate for this thing, the same observation can be made as to himself, that he would lose his job perhaps if independence were granted to the Philippine people?

Mr. STERLING. I do not think this writer is governed or influenced by any such motive as that, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Is it not just as reasonable to suppose that he has an interest as it is to suppose that the people who are preaching the doctrine of independence for their own people would have such an interest?

Mr. STERLING. This is the testimony, Mr. President, of this writer as to his viewpoint and as to his opinion after close contact for years with the Filipinos, after a study of their habits, their political methods, their social condition, and so forth. If I chose to read the entire letter through, no other conclusion could be reached than that the writer was absolutely free from the thought that he was serving a selfish purpose in writing such a letter.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I have no doubt that the man who wrote it, although I have no idea who he is, believes that he is not prejudiced. That is human nature. A man may have an interest and sometimes he will work to that interest without knowing its influence. But nevertheless the very fact that his interest is there disqualifies testimony of that kind from being very important. It is the same way in the case of a judge. The law prescribes that under certain circumstances one can not sit as a judge because of personal interest, and even as to this body it is prescribed that no Member of Congress shall vote upon a measure in which he is interested. Now, it is not because some might vote and probably would vote impartially, but it is because as a general rule it is reprehensible. It seems to me that is not the kind of testimony which would produce conviction.

Mr. STERLING. I might ask the Senator from Colorado this question: Who would have the most to hope for from a state of independence or from the measure of self-government provided for in the bill, this humble servant of the Government of the United States now or some of the men outside in the Philippines, for example, who are advocating the passage of this bill and who are claiming that the islanders are fit for independence to-day? Who have the most to hope for?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It seems to me that those who would have the most to hope for would be the men who are actually drawing a salary. The other men who are agitating for a general principle can not see with any certainty anything in sight to their interest except the love of the principle in which they believe.

Mr. STERLING. They not only hope to draw a salary, Mr. President, for here are 24 senators provided for in this bill, with a salary of $2,000 a year each. Of course other officers are to be employed as well. But it is not alone a question of salary that concerns the Filipino agitators and politicians, but it is a question of political power and influence as well, which will be immeasurably increased by independence and to a great extent increased if this bill is enacted into a law.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Without expressing any opinion on the particular question the Senator is discussing, I should like to ask if, in his judgment, it is not true that the particular objection the Senator makes would always apply to any measure passed here that would give to the Filipinos more privileges and more rights than they have now? We would always have that to contend with, would we not?

Mr. STERLING. I am inclined to think so. I think the Senator from Nebraska is right in that statement.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator, I understand, would be glad to give to the Filipinos all the rights and privileges he thought they are qualified to care for properly.

Mr. STERLING. Indeed, I would, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska, and, Mr. President, if the Senator from Nebraska will permit me, I would not go to the extreme of saying that they must develop or show that capacity which will guarantee a successful free popular government among them. I would only go to the extent of saying that when it is very probable that they have reached a stage of their development where they can maintain a free popular government, I would be willing to grant them independence.

I read from another letter, written May 24, 1913. This letter was written in response to one of my own, written along about the latter part of March, 1913. Being on a trip up in the State of Ohio, I heard of this gentleman from relatives of mine there. I had never seen him to know him, but I thought, from the account I had of his ability and his long experience in the Philippines, he might give some valuable information in regard to the conditions there. Hence my letter to him. I read now some extracts from his reply. He says:

> Without doubt, 75 per cent of the Filipinos are illiterate. Technically this is not so, because of the widespread doctrinal training which the Filipinos get when children at the hands of the church. As a part of this training they are taught how to write their names and how to read church doctrines and literature. This is as far as education for the masses went in Spanish times; those who got more education than this—and who now hold all the government positions—are negligible.
> Our school system is only 11 years old. This is only one-third of a generation, a time entirely too short to have inculcated in the minds of the rising generation any ideas of modern political institutions or of civic morality. Only one-third or less of the school population of the islands is in school. It is unthinkable that we should expect to perpetuate the form of government that we have instituted in the islands except by means of those Filipinos who are in harmony with our ideas of government. The present ruling class had its training under the Spanish system, which has next to nothing of modern ideas in it. In number they are a mere handful. Inadequate though the number of American-trained young Filipinos is for governmental duties, were it adequate they would be the tools of their elders from filial piety, if for no other reason. Compare for a moment this lack of training among the masses of the Filipinos with the very general diffusion of education among the early colonists of Massachusetts.
> Not one family in ten outside of Manila and one or two Provinces takes any of the numerous periodicals or newspapers. Of course this is partly on account of their poverty, but more on account of their inability to read them. Evidently this precludes the possibility of any judgments on the part of the masses of passing political policies or of aspiring candidates except as they are received from local candidates themselves. In fact it assures a fertile field for the dissemination on the part of selfish Filipino stump speakers—of whom there are many—of incendiary ideas and anti-American sentiments, nor are they slow to do so.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. STERLING. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Do you believe that the Argentine Republic is capable of self-government?

Mr. STERLING. Pretty nearly so, after about 100 years of trial at self-government and by the Caucasian race.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Do you believe that the Republic of Brazil is capable of self-government?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; I may say that I believe the people of Brazil are capable of self-government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Do you believe that the Republic of Chile is capable of self-government?

Mr. STERLING. Yes; I think it is.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Do you believe that the Republic of Bolivia is capable of self-government?

Mr. STERLING. There is considerable question about that, I will say to the Senator from Colorado, in my opinion.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does the Senator not know that the percentage of illiteracy in each one of those Republics is greater than the percentage of illiteracy in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. STERLING. I have not compared, so far as that is concerned, the percentage of illiteracy in the Philippines with the percentage of illiteracy in the South American Republics or any other country.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator that the percentage of illiteracy in the Philippine Islands of those over 10 years of age is 55.5 per cent and of Brazil it is 82.9 per cent. In Chile it is a larger per cent than in the Philippines; in Bolivia it is much larger than the Philippines.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. Can the Senator from Colorado state what the percentage of illiteracy is in China?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is not very large.

Mr. STERLING. It is not very great?

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is not.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator from Colorado say that the Chinese are capable of self-government? Will he unqualifiedly say he believes they are?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will say that China has for the last three years had a republican form of government, and there never was a time in the history of that Empire that its Government was not freer from disturbances and insurrections than has been the case under the Empire.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from Colorado is now, of course, acquainted with some of the conditions in China and of the movement for a monarchy to supersede the republican form of government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I am aware of that.

Mr. STERLING. That movement is formidable, and a monarchy is likely to come, if it is not now there.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; but a monarchy will come at the instance always of the man who has control of the army and the navy of a country; that is the reason. You will find that opposition melts away by reason of such an immense power.

Mr. STERLING. Are the Chinese people not submitting rather peacefully to the contemplated change of government in China?

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; there is an insurrection going on right now in several of the Provinces of China. It takes some little time for a people to rise up and resist powers that are great. It was the same in our own Colonies, where we were able, only after years and years of agitation, to come to an absolute condition of revolt, and yet that revolt did occur.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado if the Republics in South America, which he has enumerated, have not been experimenting on self-government for now nearly 100 years?

Mr. SHAFROTH. There is no doubt that they have had Republics there during all that time, and there are many of those Republics that have not had insurrections. You may pick out some, of course, which have had insurrections; but there is nothing that satisfies people so much as having a voice in the government. We ourselves experience a similar feeling when we are deprived of such voice. Consequently there is nothing so satisfying to a people as a republican form of government.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the Senator further if, from the time of Simon Bolivar, from 1818 to 1820, in northern South America, and those with whom he was allied in those countries, those countries were not in a state of almost chronic revolution, and if the history of some of those Republics that are now well established does not contain a record of more than some 35 to 37 revolutions?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, there were some, I have not any doubt; and the Senator may go down to Mexico and find a great many there. There are some instances in which people think they have certain rights that are not respected, and they revolt. You can not decide that people are not able to have self-government because there may be insurrections. There may be tyranny exercised in the government which they established, which ought to be met by insurrection. Consequently that is no test, unless you enter into the facts as to each particular insurrection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to inquire, further, if the Senator from Colorado thinks that it would be wise to impose upon or to permit the Filipinos to undergo the experience of Paraguay or Bolivia or Colombia or Venezuela in something like nearly 100 years before they reach a point at which they can be exercising self-government as well as the countries which he has enumerated?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator, in the first place, that he is comparing people of entirely different races. The Filipinos are not of a revolutionary character, as are the peoples of the Latin-American countries. The Philippine Islands never had an insurrection of any importance except that of 1896, although there had been there a reign of 300 years of tyranny upon the part of Spain. The record is full of statements to the effect that they are a law-abiding, peaceable, quiet people and not prone to insurrection. To compare them with a turbulent people, a people who have some of the Latin-American blood in them, is not fair. If the Senator asks me whether or not a person should be subjected to the conditions that a lot of outlaws have made, of course, there is only one answer. But here are a class of people in the Philippines who are educated. Of course, there are ignorant people there, but the educated people want independence and they think they are entitled to it according to the declaration which we have made as to our principles of government. That being the case, it seems to me that it is safe to trust those people who are educated to determine the matter. If it results in failure, it can not be our fault, but we ought not to set up our dictation in regard to the matter when the intelligent people of those islands say that they are capable of self-government.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to make a further inquiry of the Senator from Colorado, with the permission of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Colorado stated that the Filipino is of different origin, of different race. Originally that country was a Spanish Crown colony, was it not?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, yes; but the number of Spaniards there as compared with the Filipinos is, I believe, not more than 1 per cent. One per cent of 8,000,000 people would be 80,000, and there never were 80,000 Spaniards in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. SHERMAN. But originally the country was a Crown colony, was it not, was the inquiry I made of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, those islands were seized by Magellan; he conquered them. From that time, about 300 years ago, they have been under Spanish domination; yes, sir. There have been some protests, but those protests had not gone to the extent of insurrection, although the Senator will no doubt recognize that there would have been many tyrannical acts committed by a government of that kind in ruling a people so far from their shores.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator's answer, I understand, is in the affirmative; that originally that country was a Spanish Crown colony?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not originally; but after it was conquered by Magellan, about 300 years ago.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, it was explored, rather than conquered, to be historically accurate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, it was seized. Magellan had battles; he had to take the country, and he did come into possession of those islands by force.

Mr. SHERMAN. I want to ask further, with the permission of the Senator from South Dakota, if the Spanish Crown did not exercise in substance the same form of colonial government on the different races occupying not only the Philippine Islands, but the South American Provinces?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think so.

Mr. SHERMAN. There were originally in South America certain tribes that were native Indians. There were in Mexico tribes of a different racial origin, descendants of the Aztecs; we know them as Indians at this time. In the Philippine Islands they were originally of Malay origin, belonging to another branch of the human family. Did not, however, the same colonial government by the Spanish Crown operate in a very like manner for all these races—South American, Mexican, and Filipino?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Spanish Government exercised their power by force; yes. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. SHERMAN. After 100 years' experience, nearly up to the time Dom Pedro voluntarily exiled himself from Brazil, that country was a monarchy?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Up to 1889.

Mr. SHERMAN. And up to that time there had been all of this varied revolutionary experience in South America that we have seen in a concrete form in Mexico in the last three and a half or four years.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no; I do not think it existed to any such extent. It may have existed in one or two countries.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from Colorado will read the history of South America, he will find that they Mexicanized themselves more than 70 years ago.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Not all of those countries.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is not a solitary country in South America which the Senator has enumerated whose history is not bloodstained and whose revolutions have not been so frequent that the historian has wearied in enumerating them. I do not exaggerate.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, I should like to ask the Senator, since the establishment of a Republic have there been many revolutions in Argentina?

Mr. SHERMAN. Fifty years ago—I am not bringing it down to the time that modern stable government has in a very large measure been established—but the earlier history of every country in South America is nothing but a dreary record of chronic revolution and sedition.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, an insurrection every 50 years, if the people have grievances to redress, is not, as a matter of fact, an indication that the government is a failure. The very fact that Argentina is now regarded as one of the substantial and stable Republics of the Western Hemisphere indicates that the every 50-year insurrections were not serious, and may have been founded upon good cause on account of the tyrannical action of some of those who were in power.

Mr. SHERMAN. What I wish to get at, as briefly as I can, is whether the Senator from Colorado would take the risk with the Filipinos of the long experience had by the countries he enumerated in South America before they reached this stage, or is it not wise, in view of what the Senator stated yesterday, that within two or three years the transition could be made from the present order of things to complete independence; whether it is not wise to save those islands from that experience, and whether it would not be at least governmental indiscretion on our part to relinquish our control and impose upon them the very great risk of repeating the history of these South American countries and their very unsatisfactory experience in the years long past; whether or not we would not avoid that for the present by continuing our jurisdiction and exercising governmental powers in those islands?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator, I will say that I am one of those who believe in the doctrine of our own Declaration of Independence. I believe men have the inalienable right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and that in order to attain those ends governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. Whenever you propose to take that away, you will have to show me that a people are incapable of self-government. The burden of proof is upon the other side when they attempt to deny human rights to individuals. For that reason the proof must be there, and it can not be there by the fact of the failure of some other country. That does not count.

We know that the Philippine people to-day are even now far better educated than are those in the South American countries, not in all, but in most of the South American countries, and that at the time the republics were formed in South America there was far less education there than there is now.

Mr. President, in the 16 or 17 years of the experience we have had in the Philippine Islands we have witnessed the eagerness with which the people there—not only the children, but the grown people—have manifested in attempting to obtain an education, and no such conditions exist in any of the South American countries. Not only that, but very seldom has such eagerness, as shown by the testimony taken before the Senate committee, existed among any other people in other portions of the world. Their desire for education is something phenomenal. Mr. Shuster, who was one of the commission which had charge of education in the islands, said he had seen the Philippine people take the shirts off their backs for the purpose of making appropriations for the education of their children. Every school there is well attended; there are no vacant seats in the schools in the Philippine Islands. They can not build enough schoolhouses there to satisfy the demand. With a people who have a sense of the duties of life to insist upon education to that extent, it can not possibly be that they are not going to attain to great heights in literature and in everything else that goes to make a good republic.

Mr. SHERMAN. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator know the present whereabouts of Aguinaldo?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Aguinaldo lives in the Province of Cavite.

Mr. SHERMAN. Gen. Lawton's widow is living here in Washington now. He was a patriot at one time, as I remember quite well.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I know the Senator from South Dakota has been here sufficiently long to know that the Senator having the floor does not usually have the opportunity of speaking to any considerable extent.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly; and I yield to the situation.

Mr. KENYON. I wanted to ask the Senator from Illinois, in view of the history of the South American countries as to revolutions and in view of the thought of the Senator that the Philippines will be subject to similar revolutions, how long does he think we should keep control of the Philippine Islands in order to have them reach a period when they will be free from such dangerous revolutions?

Mr. SHERMAN. Nobody but the Lord can answer that.

Mr. KENYON. And the Lord does not seem inclined to answer.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no such attribute.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator believe that we should keep the Philippines indefinitely?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, sir; I have no such idea. If it were presented to me as a matter of original voting whether or not we went in there at all, I would vote against ever going there. I would be opposed to entering upon such a policy.

Mr. KENYON. I imagine we would all do that.

Mr. SHERMAN. But we are there; that is not the question that is pending in the Senate now. Being there, it is a question of performing our duty; it is not a question of voluntary assumption of power on our part. We are there. How can we honorably get out?

Mr. KENYON. The Senator's theory is that we have hold of the bear's tail and can not let loose. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERMAN. If we went into the transaction voluntarily and were responsible in the eyes of civilized humanity for being the guardian of the bear, I would hold on until it was perfectly safe to let him loose on the community.

Mr. KENYON. I think there is a great deal in that. We have a great moral responsibility toward the Philippines, of course, but we have some responsibility to our own people. We do not seem to have been considering this bill with any thought about our own people and the dangers to our own people of keeping the Philippines. Now, we can not shirk the moral responsibility, no matter what may happen; but have we not really nearly reached the point in what we have done for the Filipinos—a marvelous work—having fulfilled our moral obligations, where we should take into consideration the interests of our own country as well as the interests of the Philippines?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think not, Mr. President; we have not reached the point where we can dispense with the obligation to maintain a stable government in the Philippine Islands. I have not had such satisfactory evidence presented as would lead me to the conclusion that they can maintain such a government.

Mr. KENYON. But the Senator's argument about the South American countries is along the line that the Philippines never will reach a time when they will be able to maintain a stable government.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all, Mr. President; that does not necessarily follow. It means that the period will be longer than that contemplated by the Senator from Colorado, and longer than that evidenced by the spirit of this bill. It may be 10 years; it may be 40 years; I do not know as to that; but, whatever the time may be, the Senate ought to be satisfied, before we reach the point of granting them complete independence, that we can safely relinquish our jurisdiction in the islands. This bill is a very long step toward doing so.

I have not forgotten the character of the men who live there. Too many of my neighbors were lined up against them not many years ago for that. We have paid an awful price for the Philippine Islands, a price that can not be measured by the $600,000,000 or more which have been mentioned here. The price paid can not be stated merely in Treasury estimates. As stated by the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], "gentlemen never quarrel about money"; but it is not a question of money at all; it is a question of the performance of our duty. If that duty can be performed as well by leaving them to their own devices in two or three years, then well enough; but I can not, for my part, see the analogy that is sought to be drawn by the Senator from Colorado, when the fact is that, in spite of the experience that country has had for so many years, they have only reached very recently the point where they can be said to maintain a stable government, permitting the protection of life and property. Aguinaldo, I might say, has drawn in a declaration—and I remember that he is one of the leading statesmen of the Philippine Islands—a model form of government, and undoubtedly if they had independence he would be a candidate for president, as almost everybody in the Senate is now. [Laughter.]

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa says that he yields to the Senator from South Dakota. I have been led to wonder several times, Mr. President, whether Senators "ever would" conclude this colloquy, yet I am very thankful indeed that it has occurred, and am thankful, too, for the illustrations and the emphasis given by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] to the propositions I myself am seeking to maintain.

One word with reference to the question of literacy. The Senator from Colorado referred again and again to the literacy of the people of the Philippines as compared with that of the people of the South American Republics and elsewhere. I sometimes think of the term "literacy" or "illiteracy" as quite a relative term. It sometimes means much and it sometimes means very little. When we have the description of the literacy now attained by the mass of the Filipinos, and under Spanish rule until a few years ago, we have one kind of literacy, that literacy reaching to the extent of enabling them to read church doctrine and to write their names. That literacy has no relation whatever to politics or to government or to participation in government. We speak of the illiteracy of an American citizen, for example, who unfortunately may be illiterate. He may not know how to read or write, and yet he is in daily contact with the processes and the functions of free government and knows what the ideals and ideas of his fellow citizens are in regard to various questions and in regard to the candidates seeking the support of the people. He knows how to apply these ideas. Compared with the mere "literate," as described by my correspondent, he is an educated man in knowledge of political rights and duties.

One further word upon that point. The Senator from Colorado referred to the fact that there had been no revolution in the Philippines for many years, save the revolution of 1899. One inference or conclusion that may be drawn from that statement is this——

Mr. SHAFROTH. I said 1896.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; the insurrection began in 1896.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The insurrection against the Spanish Government began then.

Mr. STERLING. And afterwards it was continued against the United States. I say, Mr. President, that one fair inference to be drawn from that statement is this: I do not know but that it may be true that the Filipino is by nature altogether differently constituted—Malay and oriental that he is—from the South American. Granting that he is docile and peaceful, a fair conclusion is, such being his nature and disposition, that he will be the more readily subject to exploitation by those in power and those who know how, through certain influences, to ride into power; and instead of having popular free government for a people with characteristics like these as a result of independence, you will have the masses submerged, so far as participation in politics and government is concerned. I do not care in considering the matter from this standpoint whether they are tractable, peaceable people, not disposed to revolution, or whether they have such blood in their veins as will inspire them at any time to revolt against oppression, real or imagined, you are likely to have one or the other condition in the Philippines—despotism or anarchy. But I wish to resume the reading where I left off.

The entire attitude toward officeholding of Filipinos of the present ruling class is wrong. Left entirely to their ends no government they might carry on could long escape bankruptcy. Of political morality, there is none. Their motto is: "To the officeholders go all the spoils." They only look upon an office as a sinecure and a means toward personal gain. Elections are carried on and candidates selected under conditions of the basest collusion, trickery, and dishonesty.

Further:

Everyone who has lived for a number of years among the Filipinos realizes how futile it is to try to secure a correct view of the Philippine situation and to judge correctly of the abilities of the Filipinos in a short stay.

And I think, Mr. President, that very much of what has been said here in behalf of the Filipinos and Philippine independence, or a greater measure of self-government, is the result of brief visits to the islands, with opportunities only to see certain phases of Filipino social and political life.

Visiting Congressmen or celebrities never see what they should see; everything untoward is hidden, and cut-and-dried programs of reception, etc., fill up their time. At the time of Mr. Bryan's visit to the Philippines, he went to Cebu, the second largest city in the islands. The Filipinos went to such lengths to have him get a good impression that they drove every ragged Filipino off the streets—to the huge glee of the Americans who knew of it. He visited Bulacan, the show Province of the islands, and went away confident of the correctness of his information.

It is necessary to live among them, to be in their homes, to see them carry on their elections and run their town governments and to learn something of what they think and how they reason to even begin to know them.

And, Mr. President, the problem in the discussion of this bill is to know the Filipino.

I wish to call attention now to some other authorities that I have, and first, a little that relates to the present conduct of affairs. I read from the book entitled "United States Colonies and Dependencies," by William D. Boyce, who writes the book after a visit to the islands, and after he has visited other insular possessions of the United States.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BECKHAM in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is the author of that book one of those visitors to the islands whom the Senator disparaged as being good witnesses?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I hardly think I disparaged a witness of this kind. I am not saying just how reliable this witness is. His position, of course, in principle, is against this bill; but he seems to write from a storehouse of information that he has obtained by his visit to the islands, and his careful study of the conditions there.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to state that I have known William D. Boyce for 25 years. He is a successful man in business affairs, a good observer, a keen analyzer of facts, and has traveled very extensively throughout the world. I regard him as equal in point of observation and intelligence to some of the witnesses who have testified before the committees in the House and in the Senate.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Boyce says, referring to the present Governor General of the Philippines and the policy of the administration which he is seeking to carry out—I am not going to read all he says, but just this short extract:

Mr. Harrison hails from New York, is a lawyer by profession, and up to the time of his appointment to the governorship of the Philippines had served as Democratic Congressman from New York through four terms. Thus far his conduct of the affairs of the islands has occasioned much criticism, though no doubt he represents the policy of the present Washington administration. The mistake inheres in the policy itself, which consists of hurtful economy, the displacement of experienced officials by inexperienced men, the placing of a majority power in the hands of the natives, and the weakening of our civilizing influence in the islands by holding out to their people the promise of entire independence in the near future. However, I will speak more fully relative to this important matter in a later chapter.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. STERLING. I do.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to inquire the date of the article the Senator reads.

Mr. STERLING. This book is copyrighted—that is the date I have here—in 1914 by W. D. Boyce.

Mr. KENYON. Does that mean that he visited the Philippines in 1913?

Mr. STERLING. He does not say the year, but I think the Philippines were visited in 1914. I do not know that I can give the exact date; but it is since the present administration went into power, and he is speaking of conditions under this administration.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say to the Senator from South Dakota that I have read Mr. Boyce's book, and especially that part relating to the Philippine Islands, and I find that in all the statements he makes with respect to matters there he substantially conforms to what is found in the Government reports. On that account I consider his opinion and statements quite as reliable as any that can well be formed by any man who temporarily visits that country.

Mr. STERLING. I thank the Senator from Minnesota for the observation he makes; but just a little further from Mr. Boyce:

However, having done well thus far, it is unfortunately now the policy of the American administration to undo much of what we have done. In my opinion, that will be the result of the present administration's policy of Filipino independence, if carried into effect. A bill has recently been introduced in the United States Congress the ultimate intention of which is to give the Filipinos entire self-government.

He refers, I suppose, to the Jones bill:

The bill has been approved by the President and leaders of the administration. The measure provides for a government in which the Governor General and the members of the supreme court are the only officials to be appointed by the President, and does away with the Philippine Commission. An upper and lower house of legislature are to be voted for by the people, and the preamble states that it never was the intention of the people of the United States to hold the islands permanently, which means that presently they are to be handed back to the natives. In my belief a distinct and disastrous blunder is being perpetrated.

I am convinced by what I saw in the islands that it would be, ultimately, injurious to the Filipinos themselves to give them independence, because they will be incapable of progressive self-government for generations to come and always unable to protect themselves against conquest by any nation that sees fit to attack them. I predict that if given independence the passing of a year or two would see them convulsed by revolutions, for the reason that the country consists of separate islands and the population of mixed, inharmonious races. Besides, great as has been our influence in teaching them civilized ways, they are, and will be for a long time to come, entirely unfit to use the franchise intelligently and peacefully, an absolute essential in self-government.

And there, Mr. President, is the gist of this whole controversy. Seventeen years ago the great mass of the Filipinos were called uncivilized. After 17 years of tutelage under the American Government, with American officials there, American Army officers, a constabulary officered by Americans, and foreigners conducting 95 per cent of the business of the islands, can you say that they are ready for the withdrawal of these forces and these influences and ready to participate intelligently and peacefully in self-government as an American knows self-government?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. Is it not true that the 95 per cent of the business controlled by foreigners is what has grown up under the very tutelage of which the Senator speaks?

Mr. STERLING. I think that is true; but remove the tutelage, the authority, the guardianship, the supervision, and what do you have?

Mr. KENYON. The foreigners could only do 5 per cent more of the business even if they did it all, then. It seems to me that the argument is rather against the theory that the Senator advances.

Mr. STERLING. No. We may, by our possession until they are fit for self-government, so far as it is possible at all, inculcate business ideas among the Filipinos. I say, so far as it is at all possible to do so, we may inculcate those ideas, and there will be more of business investment and more of business conducted by the Filipinos themselves.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator how long the author from whom he has read was in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think he states there somewhere, as I remember from reading the book.

Mr. STERLING. He may state, and the Senator from Michigan reminds me that he does; but I have not seen his statement as to the length of time he remained in the islands.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator why he attributes so much importance to his judgment, immediately after having informed the Senate that it is a great mistake to suppose that a person, on a brief visit to the islands, could get any knowledge of the people, their needs, or their possibilities?

Mr. STERLING. O, Mr. President, something depends upon the object with which the man went to the Philippine Islands. Something depends on his capacity—whether he is there on a mere junketing trip, to attend a few receptions, and to be shown the best there is in the islands, or whether he is there as a student of affairs and of conditions. I take it that this book never would have been written except from the standpoint of and by a student, and a close student, of these affairs.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, I should like to ask the Senator what it was that he read from that book as to the civil service under Gov. Gen. Harrison? Did he charge that there had been a large number of removals, and that the civil service had become demoralized?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I had not read that, nor had I intended to read that. I had not intended to go further in his criticism of the present administration's policy than the short paragraph I first read.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What was the gist of that? I did not catch it fully.

Mr. STERLING. The gist was that under the present policy of the administration a wrong was being done the islands.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In what way?

Mr. STERLING. He says:

Thus far his conduct of the affairs of the islands has occasioned much criticism, though, no doubt, he represents the policy of the present Washington administration. The mistake inheres in the policy itself—

Now, here is a designation, to a certain extent, of the way in which the policy is injurious:

Which consists of hurtful economy, the displacement of experienced officials by inexperienced men, the placing of a majority power in the hands of the natives, and the weakening of our civilizing influence in the islands by holding out to their people the promise of entire independence in the near future.

That is his general statement.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Most of those are very general statements and not of any particular significance on that account.

Mr. STERLING. He goes more into detail later on.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But is the Senator aware that the separations from the public service in the Philippine Islands were not so great in the year 1914 as they were in the years 1903, 1904, and 1905? Does the Senator realize that during Gov. Gen. Harrison's administration in the Philippine Islands almost all the separations from the public service have been voluntary, and that very few arbitrary removals have occurred?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I have not compared the separations from the civil service during different years or during different administrations. I can conceive of this, however: That there may have been—I am not admitting that it is true—fewer separations under the present administration than under a former one; but that is not the test, nor the whole test. The question is as to how the places of those who are separated from the service were filled.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator whether he has read the report of the Governor General of the Philippine Islands showing how those places were filled and why.

Mr. STERLING. I have read a portion of that report. I think it must be the substance of his report which was given out in an interview a little while ago on the occasion of the altercation between the Secretary of War and ex-President Taft.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Has the Senator any criticisms to make upon the reasons stated by Gov. Gen. Harrison for such removals as he did make and for such promotions as he made?

Mr. STERLING. I do not know that I have now any criticism to make.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then I should like to ask the Senator whether it is not a little unfair to a public servant of the United States not to have read his report and not to have known the causes that he alleged for the separations from the public service for which he was responsible? Is it not proper, if we are criticizing a man through the mouth of another for his conduct of the civil service in the Philippine Islands, to read what the statistics show and to read the reasons stated by the Governor General himself? Is not that an act of justice?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I at most have not professed to go into details at all, nor have I made any reference to the report of the Secretary of War. I have given a very general statement embraced in a very few lines of Mr. Boyce here in regard to conditions and the resulting harm. Mr. Boyce is not the only authority upon this subject, but other writers and recent visitors to the Philippines testify to the displacement or the attempted displacement of most competent officials and the attempts through political influences to put in those that were wholly incompetent.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I can say to the Senator that Mr. Boyce is not an authority on any subject. He is not recognized anywhere in literature as an authority on any subject, and his publications in Chicago are not such as command any very high respect in the country. I think the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] probably will not dispute that fact.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not catch the statement.

Mr. STERLING. I will ask the Senator from Nebraska to repeat his last statement, so that the Senator from Illinois can hear him.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was not paying attention at the time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from South Dakota has read an extract from a book by a Mr. Boyce and has given him as an authority. I have said that Mr. Boyce is not an authority on any such subject and that his publications in Chicago are not considered an authority on any subject.

Mr. SHERMAN. He is as good an authority as Aguinaldo, Mr. President.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, he may be—just about.

Mr. SHERMAN. And I understand that he is one of the lusty patriots of this new republic that is sought to be founded. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. STERLING. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he is familiar with the method by which the director of the bureau of agriculture in the Philippine Islands resigned?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will take occasion to put that into the RECORD on Monday when I make my reply to this attack upon the Philippine Government. I shall put in the RECORD the reasons why all of those gentlemen were removed from the public service, and that will be an occasion when the Senator can make his comments thereon.

Mr. SHERMAN. With the permission of the Senator from South Dakota——

Mr. STERLING. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will state that I think William D. Boyce is as good an authority as either of the Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands, who are habitually on the floor of the Senate or the House. I think his business qualifications and his ability to understand conditions make him as good an authority, whose evidence would be respected as much, as the witnesses who have been heard before the committee, except those from the department who have technical knowledge of the matters about which they are testifying.

I should like to inquire further from the Senator if the assistant director of the bureau of agriculture was not appointed by the Governor General of the islands without consultation with the director of the bureau of agriculture, criticism was made, the appointment was not pressed, or was withdrawn. After it had been withdrawn the director was thereafter removed from the service, but the assistant director of agriculture, who was recommended by the speaker of the Filipino House of Representatives, was "cared for"—I am using that term in a technical sense now—by another appointment. But the difficulty arose from the fact that he was not accepted by the director of the bureau and the director of the bureau was thereafter removed or he found it expedient to resign.

This is a single instance. I can state to the Senator from South Dakota that I think if the truth were known the history of the civil service in the Philippine Islands has been rivaled by only one place in the United States, and that is in this administration during the last two and one-half years, where the civil service has become a shrieking vaudeville farce.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I had not intended to allude to the article to which I now refer, and had not intended to do so out of some deference to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], who last evening called my attention to the article, but the questions of the Senator from Nebraska make further reference quite justifiable. It is an article by Prof. Thomas Lindsey Blayney in the last, the January, number of the Review of Reviews. I wish to read from the introductory statement, in the first place, in order that we may know something of the character and the standing of Mr. Blayney. He says, in correspondence with the editor of the Review of Reviews, which is quoted in this introductory statement:

I had heard so many expressions of dissatisfaction from prominent Americans, both Democrats and Republicans, in various parts of the world concerning the present policies of the administration at Manila that I determined to go to the Philippines and satisfy myself concerning the situation there.

I talked with business men, native and foreign, educators, clergymen, Army and Navy officers, editors, American and British, and many Filipinos of undoubted patriotism and intelligence, and I do not hesitate to assure you that the demoralizing tendency of the policies of the present American administration in the islands is deserving of the widest publicity.

I am an admirer of President Wilson and do not wish to be considered as making an attack upon his policies. I have no direct or indirect interest in the islands other than that of any American citizen who has left nothing undone in the brief time allotted to him to form an unprejudiced opinion, and who cherishes a sincere desire for the prosperity, happiness, and future independence of the islands, whether this be within or without the pale of the American Commonwealth.

Now he has something to say about the very instance alluded to by the Senator from Illinois—the displacement of the deputy or assistant director of the bureau of agriculture. He puts it under this heading:

A HIGH STANDARD OF CIVIL SERVICE ABSOLUTELY NECESSARY.

Then he proceeds:

And this brings us to the very heart of the question. It is the opinion of all Americans and foreigners that the inviolability of the civil service must be reestablished by Gov. Gen. Harrison or by his successor if the good name of our governmental methods is not to be irrecoverably compromised. Also that the mere fact of a Filipino being an aspirant for office should not be a sufficient reason for his appointment, as has been too frequently the case under the present administration. The claim is made by the administration that such charges are not in keeping with the facts and that only Filipinos of unquestionable qualifications have been allowed to supersede American officials. The following incident, the facts of which were received first hand by the writer, will, however, illustrate the "careful" way in which under the new era Filipinos have been appointed to offices of trust.

And then he proceeds to describe the appointment:

The post of assistant director of the bureau of agriculture was to be filled. Without even consulting the American director of the bureau, the Governor General promised the post, at the request of the speaker of the assembly, to a henchman of the latter, the then governor of the Province of Pampanga. Shortly before the appointment was to be made public Gov. Gen. Harrison, at a dinner party, casually informed the director that he had "found an assistant director" for him. Now, it so happened that the Filipino governor selected for the post by the "ring" and accepted by the Governor General had been one of the most recalcitrant of the native governors toward carrying out the hygienic orders issued by the bureau for the prevention of the spread of rinderpest, and a man who had caused the bureau in the past endless trouble. And yet here he was being placed by the administration in a position to enforce in an executive capacity the very regulations which he had insistently ignored. The director endeavored to impress the Governor General with the utter impossibility of the situation, but it was not until after a number of conversations, and until the director had threatened his immediate resignation if a man with such a record were foisted upon him, that the Governor General made what explanations he could to the speaker of the assembly, and found another berth for this "excellently recommended" official. It can readily be imagined that such an uncomplacent director of agriculture was not able to continue to serve the "new régime" very long, and is now numbered among those who have "resigned."

Here is a characterization of this one incident; and I trust that the Senator from Nebraska has found that there is some other authority than Mr. Boyce, and a highly credible authority, whatever he may have to say in disparagement of Mr. Boyce.

Mr. President, I had intended to read some from the testimony taken before the Senate committee on the Jones bill, the testimony especially of Dean C. Worcester, a long-time commissioner in the islands, a man who was acquainted with the islands long prior to his appointment as commissioner by reason of his two visits there, and also to read something from the testimony of ex-President Taft, both protesting in their testimony against the fuller measure of government given by the Jones bill and by this bill, and against the preamble of the bill. But I forego reading that testimony. I will simply call it to the attention of Senators who have not seen it. I shall read very briefly from Dean Worcester's book on "The Philippines, Past and Present." He has commented at length on the various sessions of the Legislature of the Philippines and on the bills enacted and on the controlling influence of the commission in preventing the passage of bad and vicious legislation, and then he proceeds simply to sum up as follows:

This very cursory review of some of the acts which have failed of passage will serve to show, in a general way, the attitudes of the two houses toward a number of important questions.

Had the commission not prevented the passage of much dangerous and vicious legislation approved by the assembly the public service would have suffered seriously and public order would have been endangered.

Heretofore the commission has prevented the enactment of really vicious legislation. By giving the Filipinos a majority in this body a very important safeguard has been removed.

Now, the proposition, Mr. President, is to supplant the commission altogether by an elective senate consisting of 24 senators, each and every one of whom, of course, will be a Filipino. There is no such safeguard as has existed heretofore at all. That is the radical thing and the great objectionable feature in the bill.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. The veto power now exists in the commission. The Senator realizes, does he not, that under this bill the Governor General has a veto power on any legislation, and the President also has a veto power?

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. Is not that a sufficient safeguard?

Mr. STERLING. I do not think it is a sufficient safeguard. The mere fact that there is a veto power, since a two-thirds majority may carry the bill over the veto, is not a sufficient safeguard.

Mr. KENYON. Would not——

Mr. STERLING. Let me say to the Senator in answer to that, if he will pardon me, the fear is that the time of the legislature, composed exclusively as it will be of Filipinos, will be consumed largely in the enactment of vicious legislation, which will require the exercise of the veto power; and that condition ought not to be, and there is no necessity for its being.

Mr. KENYON. That condition exists in our own Government, does it not, or in any government having an elective assembly?

Mr. STERLING. Oh, yes.

Mr. KENYON. There is the power to enact vicious legislation. The same safeguard under this bill rests upon the Philippine Legislature as rests upon our legislature. In fact, there is almost a double check.

Mr. STERLING. But the Senator from Iowa would not compare the legislation enacted by an American State legislature or the Congress with legislation that might be enacted by a Philippine Legislature.

Mr. KENYON. Some of the legislation I have seen enacted by Congress and some by the legislatures could not be much worse.

Mr. STERLING. But the bills vetoed, the Senator will recall, are in comparison with the number enacted comparatively few. It is a rare thing that we have a presidential veto, and it is a rare thing in State legislation to have a veto by the governor.

Mr. KENYON. That is true, of course; but the same safeguard is here. There is as wrong legislation in Congress under our form of government here. We must in the last analysis trust to the good judgment and wisdom and patriotism of the Governor General and the President as we must to patriotism and good government.

Mr. STERLING. The point is, Mr. President, we do not want to be in the position all the time of having to invoke that safeguard. That is the point. We have got the safeguard, but we would prevent a condition of things where we are in danger of having to invoke it frequently. Such a condition would be fraught with discontent, perhaps peril.

Mr. McLEAN. I think I agree with the Senator from South Dakota that one of the problems is to know the Filipinos. Sometimes the best way to know a man is to give him responsibilities. The Senator has stated the conditions as they exist to-day in the Philippine Islands. He understands that under an Executive order a majority of the commission are now Filipinos.

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. McLEAN. The evils which exist there of which he complains will likely continue unless the present law is amended.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President——

Mr. McLEAN. One word more.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. McLEAN. Admitting that all the Senator says is true about the character of the Filipino people, it seems to me that the mistakes which have been made are mistakes that can not be unmade unless we follow out the plan of this bill—that is, give the Filipinos an elective senate. It grants them an elective senate and extends the franchise. We admit they must learn the trade of self-government. They are not masters of it yet, we will admit. It seems to me that unless we give them the tools with which they must learn this trade, we can not expect conditions other than such as exist now.

I think the Senator understands my point, and I hope he will come to discuss the bill and criticize it in comparison with the present situation. It does not seem to me that it changes it in any important regard. We extend the franchise, which we must do if they are ever to reach a state of intelligence sufficient to comprehend the responsibilities of the ballot.

While I was myself somewhat apprehensive about this bill at the opening of the hearings, I have made up my mind to vote for it, because I believe as long as we retain absolute sovereignty and every bill passed by the Philippine Legislature can be vetoed by the Governor General there is no danger. As long as we retain that absolute sovereignty, it is safer on the whole to gradually extend the privilege of self-government; and if we do not do it it seems to me that we can never be sure that they have reached a point where they can be intrusted with independence.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, partly in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Connecticut, I want to say that the principle of the recognition of the minority in government exists almost everywhere. It is recognized in the appointment of the committees of the Senate and in the appointment of the committees of the House. It is recognized in various commissions authorized by Congress, so that different parties and different interests may be represented therein and thereon. But this bill, so far as the election of a senate in place of a commission is concerned, recognizes no other interest than the interest of the Filipinos themselves as they may see it in their legislation. Granting that there is a minority of Americans in the present senate or in the commission they can have, by virtue of their position and by virtue of the character of the people they have to deal with, an important persuasive influence upon the action of the commission or the senate as it is now organized. By making it entirely Filipino you withdraw and withhold every influence of that kind.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator admits that that influence under the present administration has been of no sort of benefit and the conditions there are very bad. I think that is his contention.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from Connecticut misstates me in that. I do not admit that they have been of no benefit. I would rather assert, on the contrary, without knowing the details, that they, the minority on the commission, have been of great benefit. They have been a restraining influence, a wholesome influence upon that commission, and by their arguments and representations they have dissuaded and thus prevented the enactment of what would have been injurious legislation.

Mr. McLEAN. I understood the Senator to convey the idea to the Senate that the conditions there at the present time are bad and retrograding, and that something must be done to remedy the drift that they are now taking.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, as I said at the outset, and I want to be plainly understood on that proposition, I am not in favor of holding the Philippines or that we have a part in the government of the Philippines until they can guarantee their continued independence with free popular government. I do not go to that extreme. But I am in favor of their retention and of their control until it is highly probable that they will be thus capable, although it may be through some travail and some trial with periods of apparent retrogression even—until they can demonstrate that they are capable of self-government; but I say that under the conditions as I read them now they are not yet fit for that experiment.

Mr. President, it is a good deal, as it seems to me, in the matter of giving them independence now, like saying to them, "Go and play at statehood." You admit they lack the experience, but say they will get it in the trial. But, Mr. President, it will be reality; it will be real legislation for good or ill, and it seems to me a good deal like arming boys and sending them to the trenches with loaded guns facing an enemy and telling them to "play soldier."

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator does not suggest that this bill will give them their independence now.

Mr. STERLING. No; I do not suggest that this bill does. My contention is, if the Senator from Connecticut will permit me to say it again, that this bill gives them a fuller measure of self-government than they are now capable of maintaining; it is beyond their present capacity.

Mr. President, I merely wish to call attention to one or two other observations here, and this in the light of the discussion yesterday between the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] and other Senators in regard to the influence of Japan.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator permit me to address an interrogatory to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. STERLING. Most assuredly.

Mr. SHERMAN. What does the Senator think would be the result of a veto of a bill, for instance, by the President of the United States prohibiting slavery in the Philippine Islands? What effect would it produce in the islands in the event such a course would be necessary?

Mr. McLEAN. I think with 10,000 soldiers there and the United States Navy the result would not be very alarming.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator think the islands would acquiesce in it peaceably? To Cubanize the islands would require some corrective influence of the Army or Navy?

Mr. McLEAN. I do not understand that there is any slavery in the Philippine Islands now.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator think the Filipino has more control of himself than the average Cuban?

Mr. McLEAN. Yes; I think they are different. Of course that opens up a subject that we have been discussing here for hours. The Senator knows they are Malayan and the Cuban is not. They all got their extraterritorial ideas of civilization from Spain, and it may be that they may have some Spanish notions and some notions from Mexico, as they were controlled largely from Mexico, but they are a different people. They are a different people, and the testimony, it seems to me, is conclusive of the fact that that difference is to their advantage. They are an amiable, quiet people, and they are fairly honest.

I will say to the Senator from Illinois that in my opinion there is nothing in this bill that gives us the least concern as to our control over the islands. If there was I would not vote for it. We may hold them for a thousand years under this bill. My point is that if they are to learn the trade of self-government, they must have the tools. We can not give self-government to any people; they must learn it by experience. They have been under our jurisdiction something like 12 or 13 years. That is a good while to them and they have advanced very rapidly. We must admit that. It seems to me that we can safely go another step. The more familiar they become with the tools of self-government the quicker they will be able to use them intelligently. That is my belief.

If there was anything in this bill that looked toward the surrender of those islands I certainly would not vote for it. That is one point, it seems to me, the Senator from South Dakota has not discussed, as I hoped he would, because there is nothing in the language of the bill that diminishes the sovereignty of this country or the right of this country at any time to insure the domestic tranquillity of those islands or to reassert itself in any way if the occasion should offer.

It does seem to me that if we decline to pass this bill disturbances may arise which could otherwise be avoided, and there will be disappointment. All the Presidents of the United States since 1900 have promised the inhabitants of those islands their independence at some time, and in the absence of congressional action to the contrary the President has a right to speak for this Government.

It appears to me that if we pass this law now it will encourage their confidence in our good faith. If they can elect a house of representatives, and they have that power now and they have done it and done it with considerable credit, there is no reason why they should not be trusted with an elective senate.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator's last suggestion, let me say a few words, and I think he will understand my position once for all. He has claimed that I have not discussed the question in which he is most interested; that they have already a measurable power in self-government in their power to elect an assembly. In the history of government, and especially in the history of government as pertaining to people like the Filipinos, is it unreasonable, on the contrary, is it not simple prudence to require that they shall remain under that tutelage and with those privileges for a time until they have demonstrated that to that extent they are successful in self-government? Five, six, a dozen years under the present régime is not a sufficient time in which to test their capacity for self-government to the degree already conferred in the election of members of the assembly. Already comes the report and the statement of apparently disinterested observers, of men who have the interest and the welfare of the Filipinos much at heart, to the effect that the changed policy of the administration has worked injuriously to the Filipinos.

Mr. McLEAN. That is just my point, Mr. President. Then we must amend the present law.

Mr. STERLING. Then you would go one step or two or three steps in advance of the present law?

Mr. McLEAN. And you would go back and amend the present law and remove from the inhabitants of the islands any right to control the upper body?

Mr. STERLING. How did the injury of which complaint is made, the grievances of which there has been complaint, arise?

Mr. McLEAN. In the commission.

Mr. STERLING. It is simply in the commission, and now you propose to abolish the commission constituted as it is and substitute therefor a senate of Filipinos.

Mr. McLEAN. You say the commission is bad?

Mr. STERLING. I say it is bad because we are told that giving them a majority of the senate or present commission is bad. It is not bad because of the representation of Americans in the senate or on the commission, although they are in the minority and not in the majority as heretofore.

Mr. McLEAN. That is the fault of the law as it exists to-day. That is my point, that we must change the law to do it. You would go back and insist that a majority of the commission shall be Americans.

Mr. STERLING. That is your position?

Mr. McLEAN. No; that is your position. That is the point I am trying to make. If we are to remedy existing evils, it is your opinion that we must amend the law so that a majority of the commission must be Americans. I prefer to give them an elective senate and hold them entirely responsible.

Mr. STERLING. I believe that we had better amend the law and let a majority of the commission be Americans.

Mr. McLEAN. I do not agree to that.

Mr. STERLING. That is my proposition.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. The suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut is to amend the law. The thing you would have to amend also would be the Democratic platform. The Democratic national platform declared in favor of the independence of these islands and the people have indorsed that proposition, have they not, by putting the Democratic Party in power? So the amendment should come there also.

Mr. STERLING. I do not think they put the Democratic Party in power on that issue.

Mr. McLEAN. Nor do I.

Mr. STERLING. Not by any means, and so far as the platform is concerned——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator from Colorado will excuse me for just a moment, that does not make so much difference. That is not a handicap to the Democratic Party. That is not something which can not be overcome. We remember how in the last Congress a plank in the platform was abrogated by an act we passed—the Panama Canal tolls bill—and yet we remember with what unction it had been declared that that particular plank in the Democratic platform was "not molasses to catch flies."

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from South Dakota to the fact that, while the administration has lost Mr. Bryan, they appear not to have lost his doctrine of imperialism.

Mr. STERLING. That harks back, I will say to the Senator from Minnesota, to the campaign of 1900 and the cry of "imperialism," to the prediction of calamities innumerable that would befall this country if we held on to the Philippines. That cry of "imperialism" is, to some extent, yet influential, though, in my judgment, it should have no influence in this discussion. It has been suggested, however, that we ought to consider our own interests in our treatment of the Philippines; that in granting them a fuller measure of self-government or in granting them independence our own interests should be considered. With that shot at Manila Bay, heard 'round the world, the United States was recognized as a real world power. But it was then, too, that the "white man's burden" in regard to the Philippines began, and we can not, because of our interests now, because it will be a saving to us in money, cast the Philippines adrift, throw them upon their own financial and political resources, and depend upon them to inaugurate and maintain a free popular government.

I want now, just before I conclude, to refer to another authority for a moment. I read from a pamphlet entitled "An American Congressman in the Orient," a document found on my desk last evening, I think, and written by Congressman AUSTIN, of Tennessee. Among the topics discussed is "Should the Philippines be retained?" I shall read only brief extracts. He had been interviewing some of the residents of the islands. He says:

> I quote the following from one of those interviewed: "If the United States should withdraw, it would result in a duplication of the situation and conditions in Mexico, Haiti, and San Domingo multiplied many times over."

This is not so apropos of the bill under discussion and of the provisions of the bill, but it is apropos of some of the discussion yesterday, and particularly of the declaration of the Senator from Colorado, that he thought within two or three years those people would be capable of free self-government, and that they should have their independence. Representative AUSTIN continues:

> A native government would be powerless to control and govern the many tribes, with 15 or 16 different dialects, pagan, heathen, and Christian, warlike and savage, with bitter and long-standing grievances between them. 1,000,000 out of a total of 8,000,000 non-Christians, wild and uncivilized, and of the 7,000,000 Christians less than 10 per cent of the adults educated. In addition to these serious and complicated local problems, without the aid of the United States the natives would be wholly unable to protect and defend themselves from without—from foreign selfishness, covetousness, and aggrandizement.

You will remember that yesterday some reference was made to Japan's attitude toward the Philippine Islands. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] assured us that there was no design upon the part of Japan to acquire the Philippines. I am not asserting that there is; I have no sufficient evidence to state that I believe Japan seeks to acquire the Philippines; but, while not acquiring them for political and sovereign purposes, Japan may acquire them, and I believe, from the alertness of her people, from their designs and their desires with reference to colonization, that the Japanese will dominate if not practically govern the Philippines. I call attention to a further statement upon that point. Mr. AUSTIN says:

> Evidently anticipating our withdrawal from the Philippines, certain Japanese are now negotiating for the purchase of extensive sugar lands in the islands and are quoted in the Manila press as stating that they plan to bring over 100,000 or 200,000 Japs to use in the sugar industry, every man of whom will be a trained soldier.

On yesterday the Senator from Colorado stated that there were a few thousand—I think four or five thousand—Japanese in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The statement that I made was that the number of Japanese in the Philippine Islands to-day amount to 3,000.

Mr. STERLING. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There are 70,000 Chinese there; and I stated that the very fact that the Japanese Government had not attempted colonization in the islands when their people were free to go there if they so desired was pretty conclusive evidence that they had no design on the islands. I also stated that the Japanese do not like the Tropics, that they belong to a country of a temperature something like our own, and that, consequently, unless higher wages or something of that kind should induce them, they would not be likely to go to the Philippines. We hear stories about what is going to be done; that hundreds of thousands of Japanese intend to go to the islands, but nothing of that kind has materialized as yet. If the Japanese do go there, they will go by reason of and at the suggestion of Americans who are there and who want to get cheap labor for the purpose of developing the sugar lands.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the statement is made that in view of the withdrawal of the Americans from the Philippines that withdrawal will result in a great influx of Japanese, as against the 3,000 who are there now. Mr. President, it matters not whether it be the Tropics or the Temperate Zone; the Japanese character, Japanese enterprise, and the Japanese mind are of that alertness that they will go where they can have a free hand, and they will have a free hand upon the withdrawal of the Americans from the government and control of the islands.

Mr. SHERMAN and Mr. WILLIAMS addressed the Chair.

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SHERMAN. In connection with the question and for the information of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] I desire to offer some testimony.

Mr. STERLING. I cheerfully yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SHERMAN. Count Okuma, the premier of Japan, occupying relatively the same position that William J. Bryan recently did in this country, has lately delivered himself of a statement of national policy on behalf of the Japanese Empire. He took occasion to allude to the Japanese land question in the following language:

> Now, as for the California question. It would be proper to look upon this as a preliminary test to sound the capacity of the Japanese whether we are susceptible of still further development. Our future destiny may be said to depend on its successful solution. It may probably require half a century, a century, or even more. Our moderate attitude is quite likely to be interpreted as weak-hearted spiritlessness, while a firm policy would only stir up the fury of anti-Japanese excitement. Really, in respect to this question we have fallen between two buffers.
> Were it not for our honest desire to shun anything like the possibility of hostilities between the two Nations, it might be proper * * * for us to assert strongly our reasonable claim. But, preferring peace to inimical controversies, we appeal only to that high sense of human justice which inspired the ancestors of the Americans when they laid the foundation of the great Republic. Do they remember that their noble-hearted ancestors appealed to the force of arms only after they had exhausted all other imaginable means to bring their differences with Great Britain to a peaceful close? Their peaceful entreaties were scornfully disregarded one after another and the oppression became heavier. They patiently endured what was really unendurable.
> This splendid example we are now intending to follow. We are now prepared to tax our patience to the utmost.
> "The Japanese public," he states, "must become fully conscious of the serious fact that upon the issue of the settlement of the question depends the future welfare and prosperity of 150,000 Japanese on the Pacific coast of the American continent and in Hawaii, and that if the result be unsuccessful we Japanese may hereafter have no outlet on the Pacific side, notwithstanding the rapid increase of population at home."

This states a national question, Mr. President, through the principal authority of the Japanese Empire; it states a question of population and land. It shows why Japan has so zealously cultivated her navy and her army; why she fought with Russia; why she has insisted upon the right of Japanese to hold title to lands within the borders of the State of California; why she has placed herself directly athwart local conditions in this country, where every State in the Union has a right to prescribe the conditions on which title to realty shall be held, raising the question directly that this Senate ultimately will face, Mr. President, of ratifying a treaty modifying the present conditions that regulate the relations between this country and Japan, so as to permit Japanese to hold land inside of the limits of California as well as of other States. Many States of the Union have alien land laws; my own State, among others, has such a law. For more than 20 years we have prohibited the holding of land by aliens who are not qualified for citizenship under the laws, not referring especially to the Japanese, it is true, who can not be naturalized; but it raises exactly the same question.

What answers to the only authority of the Japanese Empire has stated that it is a question of the increasing population in Japan and of acquiring the right on behalf of her citizens elsewhere in the world to hold title to real estate, referring directly to the California question. Does anybody think with this insatiable demand that people——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was merely about to make the ordinary point of order that while a Senator occupying the floor has a right to yield for a question, he has no right to farm out the floor for the rest of the day. I shall not, however, make the point of order at this time, but the next time the rule is violated I shall make it. When a Senator yields for a speech to be made by another Senator instead of for a question, he loses the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am perfectly aware of and am perfectly willing to live under that rule any time the Senator from Mississippi decides that it shall be a law of this Senate, and to transact such business as I may be called upon to transact under the regulation of that rule.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, following the course of the debate of yesterday, I have not sought to refer to the rule or to suggest to Senators that I simply yielded for a question. I have simply yielded for discussion and colloquy between Senators. I thought that in this debate it was a very helpful method of procedure.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am perfectly willing at any time, Mr. President, to support zealously the rule announced by the Senator from Mississippi. I am aware of what the rule is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator yield to me for a question, which I will ask by caroming on him toward the Senator from Illinois? I did not understand what the Senator said last, and should like to hear it repeated.

Mr. SHERMAN. I said I was aware of the rule announced by the senior Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Senator's pardon. I have no questions to ask about it. I misunderstood him.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was a rule which was made, Mr. President, in the stress of the shipping bill fight, that is more or less reminiscent within this Chamber. I had not understood it was the rule prior to that time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I make the point of order, then, that the Senator is out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well, I will desist and will bide my time, when I will get all this in the RECORD.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator from Mississippi, of course, has the right to make the point of order, but I regret very much that he has sought to make it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suggest that the same rule may be applied to the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. STERLING. I wish to refer, Mr. President, very briefly to another statement made by Representative AUSTIN. It is very relevant to two or three suggestions which have been made in regard to the expense the Philippine Islands have been to us. What I am about to read is under the heading, "Our trade with the islands":

OUR TRADE WITH THE ISLANDS.

Last year American merchants and manufacturers sold goods to the value of $27,204,587 to the islands, as against $127,804 in 1898, or an increase of $27,076,783 since we took them over. Our sales in the Philippines for 1914 exceeded our exports to China for the same period and are equal to half of the amount we disposed of in Japan and were greater by $2,000,000 than the amount we shipped to all of the following countries in South America during 1914: Venezuela, Peru, Colombia, Uruguay, Bolivia, and Paraguay—

And so on.

So, Mr. President, upon that score the retention of the Philippines is not by any means all burden, nor does it mean that. We have present benefits and, with the development of trade in the islands, they will greatly increase.

Just a few words in conclusion. First, I wish to call the attention of Senators to a few observations made by the late learned and distinguished British ambassador, Mr. Bryce, on different kinds of government, found in his Studies in History and Jurisprudence. With respect to the races and nations of the world and their forms of government he divides them into four classes, as follows:

I. Nations which have created and maintain permanent political institutions, allotting special functions to each organ of government, and assigning to the citizens some measure of participation in the business of government.

In these nations we discover constitutions in the proper sense of the term. To this class belong all the States of Europe except Russia and Montenegro, and, outside Europe, the British self-governing colonies, the United States and Mexico, the two Republics of South Africa, Japan and Chile, possibly also the Argentine Republic.

II. Nations in which the institutions aforesaid exist in theory but are seldom in normal action, because they are in a state of chronic political disturbance and mostly ruled, with little regard to law, by military adventurers. This class includes the Republics of Central and South America, with the exception of Chile and possibly of Argentina, whose condition has latterly been tolerably stable.

III. Nations in which, although the upper class is educated, the bulk of the population, being backward, has not begun to desire such institutions as aforesaid, and which therefore remain under autocratic monarchies. To this class belong Russia and Montenegro. Japan has lately emerged from it, and two or three of the newest European States might, but for the interposition of other nations, have remained in it.

Here is the fourth class:

IV. Nations which are, for one reason or another, below the level of intellectual life and outside the sphere of ideas which the permanent political institutions aforesaid presuppose and need for their proper working. This class includes all the remaining peoples of the world, from intelligent races like the Chinese, Siamese, and Persians, down to the barbarous tribes of Africa.

In which class will we put the Philippines? Mr. President, we can put them in no other than one or the other of the two latter classes. When we speak about government for the Filipinos what kind of government do we mean—an autocracy, a monarchy, an oligarchy, or do we as American citizens, used to American institutions, demand that when they have their independence they organize not simply a stable government, as a monarchy may be stable or as an autocracy may be stable, but a free, popular government, the ideal of America and American citizens? That is the kind of a government we want them to have. Are they ready for it? Are they ready for the free, full measure of government which this bill contemplates and provides for? I can not believe, from what I know about races, race prejudice, race history, race traditions, and the environment and climate of the Philippines, that they are ready for independence or for the measure of government we propose to give them by this bill.

Mr. President, history records some wonderful things in regard to the development of government, in regard to the slow processes by which at last free, representative government has been reached. History shows not only the genius of the Anglo-Saxon race for self-government, but for the government of colonies and dependencies as well, the world over. I am reminded of what was said yesterday in reprobation of colonial government and colonial ownership. Reference was made to what Lord Macaulay had said. Oh, yes; and I suppose Lord Macaulay lived and wrote, too near the time of Clive and Warren Hastings, and he knew something of the burdens and evils growing out of colonial government during those earlier times; but they are not like the present, with its better conceptions and ideals. Mr. President, if we would know the sentiment of the colonies of the little island across the sea in regard to colonial government, ask it of the Australian, ask it of the man from New South Wales, ask it of the Canadian, all valiantly fighting the battles of the mother country in the trenches of Europe. I remember reading a few days ago—and it stirred my blood to read it—of the Canadian woman whose two sons were in Europe and in the trenches there, and who, standing with others, saw her husband go by, a recruit for the army, on his way to the vessel that was to take him with his regiment across the Atlantic. The woman stood there with tears in her eyes saying as she saw the men march by, "Thank God, I am a Canadian." It may seem a minor incident, but it shows the success of England in the matter of colonial government.

Yes; there has been marvelous success achieved, and one great thing about it is that even a free republic, a federal government, with a dual system like ours, has shown in the Philippines, against the predictions of the prophets of evil, its splendid capacity for the government of a colony or a dependency. History shows these achievements of the great Anglo-Saxon race. It shows also some wonderful successes of other peoples, both ancient and modern, in the work of government and colonization. But history fails to record, Mr. President, that any other race than the white or the Caucasian race in the Tropic Zone ever formed or maintained for any time any system approaching that of popular self-government; and it is a serious question, to say the least, whether it ever will. It will be to our glory if we succeed in teaching them the way, but it will require patience and a long time. Race, custom, tradition, climate, the lessons of history, are considerations we can not escape, but must meet in the discussion of this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I looked forward with some degree of pleasure to an opportunity to reply to the address just made by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. He has hardly left me time, however, to make reply this afternoon.

Mr. President, I am familiar with the condemnation which God cast upon the inference included in the question which Cain asked in the Garden of Eden, "Am I my brother's keeper?" In a certain sense, of course all of us are our brother's keepers, but I have never seen or heard any authority from God or man for the proposition that I was made my brother's keeper to keep him with a club. That is the American proposition, according to the Senator from South Dakota, with regard to the Filipino. That is totally a different proposition. The Senator from South Dakota says that the Filipinos have now "a measureable amount of self-government" or "a measureable power of self-government." Yes; it is "measureable" and it is measured, and what is worse is that it is "measured" by the other fellow. That was just exactly what was the matter with our ancestors when they undertook to fight the War of the Revolution. No intelligent American contended at that time that the American colonies were not the most leniently and the best governed colonies in the world; but they did contend that the moment two rules were set up, one for a British subject in Great Britain and another for a British subject in America, that all freedom on the part of the citizens of America had been surrendered, and that when it came to measure self-government all the English-speaking people measured by it, even those in America, must help measure it. No alien race, unassimilable and not even desirous of assimilation, as is the case with us now, can "measure" the degree or kind of liberty for another and majority race in the Philippines.

I remember, Mr. President, a few years after the war between the States, when a lot of people who were more or less fools but thought themselves wise, north of Mason and Dixon's line, were contending all the time that the South should not have the right of self-government, but should continue to be carpetbagged until the South had "shown itself friendly to the National Government." The hiatus in the reasoning and the hiatus in the feeling was this: That nobody with real good sound statesmanship could ever have expected the South to show itself friendly until the Federal Government had shown itself friendly to the South and until it had been given the opportunity and the freedom and the independence of action to reciprocate, and just as soon as that was given she showed herself friendly. The first boy killed in Cuba in the Spanish-American War was a southerner. Fitz Lee went down to Cuba and consented to allow himself to be called "a blamed Yankee" for two or three years to show his loyalty to the Federal Government.

The English, after they got through the South African trouble, were much wiser than we or much wiser than you—we are all "we" now; it was then "you"—and they invited Botha and the other Boer leaders in to help govern British South Africa. They said, "We have had our war; you have surrendered; we suppose that you have surrendered in good faith; at any rate, we will try you and see." The consequence is that in less than no time Botha, at the head of a South African army, was fighting the great imperial enemy of Great Britain in the hills, in the valleys, and upon the mountain tops of South Africa.

Mr. President, I thank God for this one thing, and all of us, even the humblest of us, can thank Him for it, that is for the one blessed privilege of sweeping aside flyspecks by wiping them out with a sponge moistened at the fountain of eternal and fundamental principle. What is all of this argument that we have heard here to-day? A case lawyer's argument to an ignorant jury. What is all this talk about whether or not Gov. Gen. Harrison did make a right or a wrong appointment about something? Flyspecks!

Great God! Mr. President, if the United States had been charged up with all the ward politics of Philadelphia perpetrated by the Republican Party, or all the ward politics of New York perpetrated by both parties, how long do you think it would have taken us to prove to some sovereign suzerainty somewhere else, asserting superior culture, that we were capable of self-government?

You say that the Filipinos have got to "demonstrate" that they are "capable of self-government." How can a child demonstrate a sum in arithmetic or in algebra as long as the professor keeps working it?

Lord Macaulay has been counted a brilliant man—not a very wise one, and not a very profound one, perhaps; but he once asked a question which has in it a great deal of profundity: "How long do you suppose it will take a child to learn to walk if you never let the child try to walk?"

As for all this talk about "Anglo-Saxon" civilization, do you imagine that anybody is absurd enough to suppose that the Filipino can mount to our standard of self-government to-morrow or within a hundred years? No! Are you, therefore, absurd enough to say that he shall have no self-government because he can not do it? Yes! That is your foolish answer. That is exactly the measure of your absurdity. You assert in one breath your superiority to all the world, and then you demand in the next breath that all the world shall measure up to your standard.

If anything could disintegrate the confidence which other men have in your standard, it would be your subjective influence toward that dual and contradictory proposition.

How in the name of common sense, Mr. President, is any man going to expect this great interracial and international question—because it is international—to be settled by a few carping flyspeck criticisms of the Governor General of the Philippine Islands? I have no brief to defend him. I have known him for 20 years. He is a gentleman, and his father before him was one, and his mother before him was a gentlewoman. He was with me in the House of Representatives. He is a man of integrity and honor, and I will undertake to say that he has done nothing that will stain the escutcheon of the American people, unless he has done it misguidedly; but what has that to do with this question?

Gentlemen then turn around and tell us that there will be "chaos in the Philippine Islands," that there will be labor and travail if we turn loose, "scuttle," and get out. Yes; of course there will be. If an ordinary woman can not give birth to a child without travail, how can a race give birth to law and order and liberty—triplets—without it? The difference is that the period of travail must be a great deal longer for the race than for the woman.

Then in steps another gentleman and says, "Oh, well, if we leave there Japan will come in, and Japan will own the islands." The chances are that that gentleman—I do not mean any particular gentleman, now—the chances are that the man who ordinarily says that never heard of Manila except as a name for a certain character of straw until Dewey won the battle there and Manila came into our possession; and, if Manila had belonged to Japan before the Spanish-American War was ever undertaken, no human being in America would be talking to-day about America owning or exercising suzerainty over the Philippine Archipelago.

Suppose Japan did take the Philippines. Suppose that after we set them free and independent—which is the first proposition within the arena of my desires—Japan did take the Philippines; would it hurt you and me and the American people? An army of Japanese in Manila is farther away from Washington than an army of Germans at Berlin, not only in distance but in time; and not only in distance and time both, but in capacity of mobilizing resources.

Suppose Japan did own them, and suppose Japan did govern them; Japan could govern them much better than you can do it. Japan could govern them much better, because Japanese men and women will intermarry with Filipino men and women. You can not govern any country in the world satisfactorily to them and you both, where there is not at least potential equality. Potential equality comes from voluntary mating together; and without those two things you can not have genuine fraternity nor any approximation to equality. The Japanese might have homogeneity of purpose and ideal with the Filipino. The racial stock is substantially the same—Mongolian grafted on Malay. A Japanese and a Filipino can come nearer to understanding one another, either one of them, than either one of them on one side and you and I on the other can come to understanding one another. There is more homogeneousness of tradition, of ideal, of purpose, and of animal disposition between Japanese and Filipinos than between Americans and either.

Suppose, now, that you take two sides of the proposition. Suppose Japan had the islands, and Japan was a friend. She would become a greater friend at once. If the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] are right, and Japan is seeking an outlet for her population toward the Philippine Islands, she would find it there, and it would relieve the pressure upon Hawaii and upon the Pacific slope. The arrangement would, moreover, recognize the right of the brown and the yellow men to rule the brown and the yellow men's country, while we asserted the right of the white man to rule the white man's country. So it would have a great effect in eliminating all the differences and recent-grown antagonizms that exist between us and the Japanese people.

Suppose, upon the other hand, Japan were our enemy, and Japan got the Philippines. Why, you could not wish a worse curse upon her. You can not wish a worse curse upon any people in the world than a "dependent empire." It is bad because it is bad for the people who are ruled. It is bad because, by reaction, it is bad for the people who do the ruling. The best prayer that any man in this world can make is, "God make me strong enough to defend myself from aggression and humiliation, and make me not so strong as to oppress and humiliate other people."

"Go find thy strength in thy limitation," was the word of the great Jewish poet. Surrounded as all of us are by all sorts of environing limitations, the truth is that you do find your strength in knowing your limitations. One thing that every man who is a citizen of a free country may learn as a limitation on the capacity of a free country is this—that a free democracy can not govern a dependent people without the right of self-government.

You can not keep your cake and eat your cake. You can do one of three things: You can let these people go, and in that way preserve yourself from the reaction in your own mind against your democratic institutions; or you may embody them as part and parcel of the American body politic. The third thing is to keep them, if you choose, and govern them like British Crown colonies, or as King George dreamt that he could govern us. If you attempt to govern them in that way, you train Army officers and Navy officers and civil officers to a contempt of free institutions. If you embody them in the body politic, you poison the body politic with an inalienable and a nonassimilable blood.

My friends, do not forget this: I do not care how much little peccadillo argument of politics may be involved in any question in the world, do not forget that a democratic structure is founded upon these four pillars—liberty, fraternity, equality, and justice; and that no race believing itself superior, even if it is not, and, a fortiori, no race believing itself to be superior and being superior, can really meet in genuine equality and fraternity a race with which it refuses to mix its blood in lawful wedlock. You may take that statement for all it is worth in the Philippines and for all it is worth in Mississippi. It is worth its weight everywhere.

It is not curious that under the McKinley administration and the Roosevelt administration and the Taft administration a lot of two-by-four ward and State and county politicians had been put in office over the Filipinos in the Archipelago; that when a Democratic Governor General went there and removed a few of them there should be a howl "going up to heaven," originating with them, and echoed by a whole lot of other people here. All of it, even if you confess that Gov. Gen. Harrison's administration has been a failure, proves what? It proves that the attempt to govern under American suzerainty, even with what the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] called "a great measure of self-government," is a failure. You did not have to prove that to me. I knew the first day you entered the Philippine Islands that it would be a failure, not only under this Governor General, but under every other Governor General. It has been under all.

But you say to me, "The Filipinos are better off under the American Government than they would be under their own government—materially better off, financially better off, industrially better off." Grant it; it is absolutely true; but I was not elected, and you were not elected, as a representative of the Filipino people. I am thinking of this proposition chiefly as an American proposition. In the first place, I know that the Filipino will be happier even with bad government of his own than he will be with good government of mine and yours. I may not be as wise nor as smart nor as great nor as good a man as the Senator from California, but I will be lots happier and better satisfied if I am allowed to control my own individual conduct than I would be if he controlled it for me and controlled it twenty times as well.

That is the first proposition. The second proposition is that so far as the American people are concerned, upon the military side and upon the naval side and upon the civil side, they are worse off with the Philippines than without them. Consider it a moment from the military-naval side. What does it mean? Why, suppose the Senator from Arizona and I sit down to play a game of chess, and I put a pawn out on the board, two moves in advance of my entire line, and then agree with him to subordinate the entire game to the defense of the pawn. What a fool I would be as a chess player! That is what war means. It is a chess game, only equipped with sure-enough men instead of with nominal men.

Why, to illustrate, in a hearing before the Finance Committee of the Senate I asked a general of the Army: "If we had war, what would we do to protect and defend the Philippines?" He said: "Nothing. We would leave them." But we would not. Military strategy might tell us to do it, but that general was mistaken. The American people, with their pride, national and racial, would not permit any administration to live its life out after it had deserted the Philippines as long as the flag floated there was being attacked by a public enemy. We would be compelled to defend them, and we would be compelled to exhaust men and treasure in doing it, in order to satisfy popular sentiment.

My friends, there is no greater fallacy in the world than the idea that the individual happiness and welfare of the citizens or subjects of a country depend upon the "empire" of that country. I tell you now, going a step farther and speaking about another nation, that the great Empire of Great Britain, from whose people we got our law, our literature, our civilization, our power and capacity and pride in the arena for self-government, will some time read its destruction upon a page upon which will be emblazoned, in substance, these words: "Committed suicide in attempting to defend British India."

What does England get out of India? Free trade; that is all. She grants it to everybody else in the world as well as to herself. She might get it by universal agreement after surrendering empire or by gratitude from India.

In her tight little island she could defend herself against the world; and in this great war if she goes to the wall at all she will go because "Germany can reach India," through Egypt or otherwise. Those people, proud like our people, will forget that they are self-sufficient at home and will sacrifice their youth and their money to defend a distant empire which adds not one thing to their strength, very little to their wealth, absolutely nothing to their intelligence, and less than nothing to their morality.

We Americans can stand here—if we be but true to ourselves—on this continent, and though for a little time we may be unsuccessful, we can in the long run, back to back, defy the world. If we have to defend the Philippines as a part of the game of defying the world, we can not last at it six months. And yet you know the American people well enough, and I know them well enough, to know that they never would make peace in a great war unless under the stress of immense humiliation, defeat, or bankruptcy, as long as the question of their parting with the Philippine Archipelago was a question to be settled by the force of an antagonist. The average Mississippian would rather be killed—he would rather have his son killed; he would rather lose what he has—than to have it said that any great power in the world had whipped him into giving up the Philippines.

Somebody said a long time ago, "Who will haul down the flag?"—one of those great, celebrated, salient, demagogic utterances that history transports to posterity. Why, the people that erected the flag, of course. We had the flag over the hall of the Montezumas once. We took it down. We had it in Tripoli and North Africa once, and we took it down. No disgrace was involved in it. There is no disgrace in doing anything that is right and honest and brave and true. It is neither right nor honest nor brave to hold an unwilling people, of an alien and unassimilable race, in subjection. There is but one possible exception to it, and that is when you need a limited territory for defensive purposes. Then, possibly, it can be excused.

The Philippines are not for us a strategic defense; they are simply a useless offense, by the fact of our occupancy, to all the Orient—to all trans-Pacific peoples, including the Japanese.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I will suggest to the Senator that England had her flag over the Philippines for two years, and took it down without any disgrace.

Mr. WILLIAMS. England not only had her flag over the Philippines, but she had it at one time over San Domingo, and she had it at another time over Cuba, and she has had it over half the world that is now in the possession of other people.

I say that the United States will be stronger and better in every sense with the Philippines independent, and we are not our brother's keeper with a club. I am my brother's keeper with advice and with love and with tenderness and with consideration; but God never made me a club keeper for him and God never made him a club keeper for me, either.

Not one of you would submit to it if you were Filipinos. If I were a Filipino, or had been, if I had been brave enough—about which I have my doubts—but if I had been, I would have fought the United States flag in the Philippines from the first day the announcement was made that they were no longer in alliance with Aguinaldo until the flag was taken away from the islands.

Is it treason to say that? Would it be treason for me to say that if the German flag were posted here; if, after the Revolution, France had undertaken to assert that because she had helped us to win our liberty she therefore had a right to govern us, and raised her standard here, and then our forefathers had said, "We will fight that German flag, or we will fight that French flag, until we all die or are killed or are exhausted," would that have been treason?

Then up steps another man who is a little cheaper, and says, "Oh, well, you are a southerner. You believe white men should rule negroes down in Mississippi, and yet you say the white man shall not rule Filipinos in the Philippine Islands."

That is the utmost extent of enfantillage. To cope with the problems which you have in your own country and to assert the white man's right of government in the white man's country is one proposition; and to go out 6,000 miles to annex race problems and assert the right of the white man to govern the brown man in the brown man's country is another proposition; and, so far from being affiliated propositions, they are absolutely antagonistic one to the other.

Why, Mr. President, sometimes when a man who has from his boyhood studied and loved history casts his eyes over the chronicle of recent events he becomes hopeless and pessimistic. Are mankind condemned forever to repeat the errors of their ancestors or of somebody else's ancestors? Will mankind never learn that God loves freedom more than He loves anything else in the world, and honors it more, as is proven by the fact that He leaves you and me free to go wrong if we choose, when He could have kept us as perfect, angelic angels—flabby angels, it is true—in the Garden of Eden forever, if He had wanted to? Will men never learn that you can not gain physical strength except by the exercise of your physical muscles, and that you can never gain moral strength except by the exercise of your moral muscles, and that you can never gain political strength—the capacity for self-government—except by exercising the art of self-government? And will men never learn that they can make friends of enemies better through magnanimity than through superposition of armed force?

Two things happened in the nineteenth century that are of high importance to the world. One was when Norway said to Sweden, "I wish to dissever the union that binds us together." Sweden said, "Very well; if you think you will be happier apart from us, then we say 'Go.'" Another thing was when Great Britain said to the Boer leaders, "Now, we have fought one another, but this is your country. Come here and help us govern it." If you northern people had said that to Robert E. Lee within two years after the Civil War closed, the whole carpetbag period of reconstruction and the saturnalia of vice that accompanied it all would never have existed. It not only would not have existed, but if a subsequent poet at some time had dreamt that it might have existed, serious-minded men would have said that he was crazy.

Mr. President, it is 5 o'clock, and under the previous order I believe the Senate will adjourn at this time.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no necessity of that at all.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I only make the request to preserve the status of the bill. It has been done heretofore.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over as the unfinished business. Only one minute remains until 5 o'clock.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we extend the session for 10 minutes, so as to hold an executive session.

Mr. SMOOT. I object, Mr. President. It is Saturday, and it is 5 o'clock. It is time we quit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made. Under the order the Senate stands adjourned until 12 o'clock on Monday next.

Thereupon (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 10, 1916, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 8, 1916.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and everliving God, our heavenly Father, let Thy Spirit, we beseech Thee, come mightily upon us, that through its divine influence we may think right, choose right, act right in all the duties and obligations of this day; that at its close we may possess a clear conscience, a tranquil mind, and Thine shall be the praise, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I desire to ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the reading of the Journal, I may address the House for one hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] asks unanimous consent that after the reading of the Journal and the clearing up of business on the Speaker's table on Monday he be allowed to address the House for one hour. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] has the first hour.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Let me have the second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri modifies his request, to follow Mr. LEWIS, of Maryland?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Subject to the same conditions?

The SPEAKER. Yes; subject to the same conditions, of course. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CARLOS HEVIA Y REYES GAVILÁN (S. DOC. NO. 235).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit a report from the Secretary of State inclosing a draft of a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to permit Mr. Carlos Hevia y Reyes Gavilán, a citizen of Cuba, to receive instruction at the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, at the expense of the Government of Cuba.

The Secretary of State points out that the passage of the resolution would be regarded as an act of courtesy by the Government of Cuba, and that it would follow established precedents.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 7, 1916.

RENÉ W. PINTÓ Y WENTWORTH (S. DOC. NO. 236).

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit a report from the Secretary of State inclosing a draft of a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to permit Mr. René W. Pintó y Wentworth, a citizen of Cuba, to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point, at the expense of the Government of Cuba.

The Secretary of State points out that the passage of the resolution would be regarded as an act of courtesy by the Government of Cuba, and that it would follow established precedents.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 7, 1916.

CREW OF NORWEGIAN SHIP "INGRID" (S. DOC. NO. 237).

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

At the request of the Norwegian Minister at this Capital, and in view of the recommendation of the Secretary of State, I transmit the latter's report and the accompanying documents relating to the claim made by the Norwegian Government in behalf of three members of the crew of the Norwegian ship Ingrid, and I recommend that, as an act of grace and without reference to the question of the liability of the United States, an appropriation be made to effect a settlement of this claim in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of State.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 7, 1916.

The SPEAKER. The message will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANN. If it is a claim, the Committee on Foreign Affairs could not report on it. It should go to the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I say, if it is a claim it would go to the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was somewhat in doubt whether it ought to go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs or to the Committee on Appropriations or to the Committee on Claims. The Chair supposes the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois is correct, and that the message should be referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered printed, together with the accompanying documents.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 136. An act granting an extension of time to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois; and

H. R. 4717. An act to authorize Butler County, Mo., to construct a bridge across Black River.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 2409. An act to authorize the Ohio-West Virginia Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Ohio River at the city of Steubenville, Jefferson County, Ohio.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to address the House on next Tuesday, after the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] concludes his remarks, for a period of 30 minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What about?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] asks unanimous consent that next Tuesday, at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], he be allowed to address the House for 30 minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. Not to interfere with privileged bills.

The SPEAKER. Of course that condition attaches to all of these requests, whether it is stated or not. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I rise to make a request similar to that made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER]. I should like to have the privilege of addressing the House for 30 minutes after the gentleman from Illinois has concluded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] asks unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], he be allowed to address the House for 30 minutes, under the conditions that attach to all these other requests. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD. I am not quite prepared to give them now. I merely want to ask to extend them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How much?

Mr. LINDBERGH. The equivalent of an hour's time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 6460, which was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, be transferred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. It has to do with a part of a river improvement.

The SPEAKER. If it is necessary, the Chair asks unanimous consent to make a statement about the reference. There is a committee in this House upon Railways and Canals, and somehow, or somehow else, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors for several years has absorbed all the functions of that Committee on Railways and Canals. There are half a dozen of these bills like the one that the gentleman from Georgia is talking about. One of two things ought to be done about them: Either the bills that apply to that Committee on Railways and Canals ought to be sent to it, or the committee ought to be abolished; so the Chair, not having the power to abolish the committee, referred these bills to the Committee on Railways and Canals. The Chair thought this statement was due to the House. If there is no objection to its going to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, the Chair has none.

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia whether or not he has talked with the chairman of the Committee on Railways and Canals in regard to this reference?

Mr. PARK. No, sir. This applies to a river improvement in southern Georgia. It is supposed to be a part of a system of river improvement.

Mr. GARNER. The bill having gone to the Committee on Railways and Canals, it is a courtesy due to the chairman of that committee, at least, to speak to him about it before it is taken away from his committee. I could not give unanimous consent to the transfer of a bill away from the Committee on Railways and Canals until the chairman of that committee had been consulted about it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this question is one that affects more Members of the House than one. A number of bills were presented several days ago relating to the purchase of canal property, with the idea of continuing the improvement of existing streams upon which the Government is making appropriations for improvements, which would seem to put the matter within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. But, answering the question of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], I would like to say that I consulted both the chairman of the Committee on Railways and Canals and the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and that each of these chairmen feels that jurisdiction in matters of this kind belongs to his respective committee.

Apparently it is a question that must be settled by the Speaker or by whoever the presiding officer is when the question arises. It has been settled once or twice in one or two different ways. The question was ruled upon in the last session by a gentleman who presided over the Committee of the Whole in favor of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Railways and Canals, but it is a serious question. I think many precedents can be cited to prove that the Commtitee on Rivers and Harbors has jurisdiction of matters of this kind.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman a question. Is it not true that when the House has been in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union discussing a river and harbor bill, whenever the point of order has been made against one of these projects it has invariably been bowled out?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will speak of one instance in which my recollection is entirely clear. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] was in the chair during the discussion of the last river and harbor bill. The point of order was made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and it was sustained by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole [Mr. RAINEY]. There had been some debate upon the question. There had been debate on previous occasions, but the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors told me only yesterday that he believed there were ample precedents—I have looked at some of them myself—to justify the reference of bills of this kind to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but the trouble about that is that, as far as the Chair knows, the chairman of every one of these committees, except the Committee on Railways and Canals, is always reaching out for more jurisdiction. That is almost invariably the case, and it grows out of human nature and you can not cure it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I hope the Speaker will not rule on this question this morning, because I think Representatives are preparing themselves to discuss this question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not ruling. The Chair made a statement that he thought was due to the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair bear with me just a moment? I have made the point of order several times on river and harbor bills, in various Congresses, against items for canals, and the point of order has always been sustained where the Chair thought it was an appropriation for a canal. There is no question that the reference of the bill to the Committee on Railways and Canals is a correct reference where it provides for the purchase or construction of a canal. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors has very wide latitude of jurisdiction and it never reports upon these individual bills separately. If it finds that an item is for improvement of a river, it can include that item in its omnibus river and harbor bill if it chooses to do so; but the jurisdiction of the bill, when it is introduced as a separate measure, is in the Committee on Railways and Canals, which committee, I hope, will be revivified and will take action on some of these things.

The SPEAKER. There is no question about that.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. MADDEN. I want to try to illuminate this subject a little if I can.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not want to intervene on some other subject?

Mr. MADDEN. No. I think, Mr. Speaker, that there is a good deal of wisdom in referring matters of this sort to the Committee on Railways and Canals; and it seems to me the wisest part of the wisdom in connection with it is this, that when a bill is introduced for the purchase or construction of a canal, this committee reports that bill by itself, and it comes before the House on its merits, and everybody in the House has a chance to consider the question on its merits; whereas if it goes into the river and harbor bill it is not considered on its merits at all.

I believe bills of this sort ought invariably to go to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and that there ought not to be any opportunity for anybody in the House to shunt aside the Committee on Railways and Canals from the consideration of questions of this kind. It is a good deal more important than may appear on the face. It may involve the Government in the expenditure of millions of dollars that otherwise would not be expended. If the matter goes to the Rivers and Harbors Committee, it may cost the Government millions. If it goes to the other committee, it may not cost the Government a cent.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, upon the recommendation of the minority leader [Mr. MANN] I move the election of Hon. FREDERICK C. HICKS, of New York, to fill the minority vacancy in the Committee on Accounts and in the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], at the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the minority leader, nominates Mr. HICKS, of New York, to the vacancy in the Committee on Accounts and in the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. Is there any further nomination? If not, Mr. HICKS is elected to the position.

THE RETURN OF THE PELICAN FLAG.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] is recognized for 15 minutes, under the special order of the House heretofore made.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, on the 24th day of November, 1814, the rising sun looked down upon a scene of naval activity in English waters in the western world unparalleled since the discovery of America. It was a bright, cloudless day. In the great anchorage formed by two jutting headlands at the western extremity of the island of Jamaica an armada had assembled the like of which the western world had never seen. In Negril Bay 50 great armed ships belonging to the English Navy were slowly unfurling their white sails to the morning breezes. Their decks swarmed with the red-coated soldiery of England. Here was the Tonnant, one of Nelson's prizes in the battle of the Nile, a great warship mounting 80 guns. The Royal Oak, a 74-gun ship, rode majestically in the harbor. The Dictator, one of the most powerful of the English ships, was there, and 47 other ships, the flower of the navy of England, then as now the mistress of the seas, floated majestically in the calm waters of the bay. Somewhere out in the Atlantic another grand fleet was on its way to still further augment this splendid naval aggregation. For months ships and men had been slowly assembling at the island of Jamaica for the purpose of effecting the conquest of New Orleans. The scheme was splendidly conceived. New Orleans was defenseless. This gay capital of the South was not in a position to resist the invaders. With New Orleans in the possession of the foe of the new Republic a junction between the armies then in Canada and the invaders could be easily formed. Such a plan as this, which seemed to the foes of the new Republic sure to succeed, might in part overcome the results of our own war for independence, at least the westward movement of our population across the continent might be forever suspended.

The military forces which had assembled for this grand invasion of the United States comprised four of the regiments which had participated in the Battle of Bladensburg and had burned the public buildings in Washington. The combined fleets would transport to the mouth of the Mississippi four regiments direct from England, the flower of the army of that country. By far the greater part of the men engaged in this enterprise were seasoned soldiers fresh from great victories in the fields of the Peninsula. They had been led by the victorious Wellington himself into France; a triumphal march to participate in the final victories and triumphs of the British armies. In the expedition there were 1,500 marines and 10,000 sailors; in all, a force of nearly 20,000 men. No such stupendous enterprise as this had ever been attempted in the waters of the New World. Victory seemed to be easy and within the grasp of the invading forces. Officers had been selected for the city so soon to be captured. The officer who was to act as collector of the port was already on one of the vessels of the fleet, accompanied by his five daughters. Some of the officers of the fleet were accompanied by their wives and families. These ladies, all of them, anticipated a pleasant winter in the gay, aristocratic, creole society of New Orleans. These great ships, as the sun rose high in the heavens, amid strains of martial music, moved slowly out of the harbor, out past the headlands, out into the sea, and by nightfall the shores of the island of Jamaica had faded from view.

News of the mobilization of this force had reached the Capital at Washington. The alarming news had traveled to New Orleans. There were no fleets to send that could in any way cope with a naval force so strong as this. There were no armies within marching distance of New Orleans. There were no troops there to defend the city. There were no forts. There were no ships to guard the mouth of the Mississippi. Somewhere in the forests far to the north and east of New Orleans a brave soldier of the early American type for 14 months with a small force of frontiersmen had been gallantly battling with the Indian tribes and had won a series of brilliant victories.

From Washington a courier was sent to the far-off forests bearing an order, signed by the President of the United States, directing Gen. Jackson to repair at once to New Orleans and to defend the city against this apparently overwhelming foe. The order was speedily obeyed. For 10 days this old soldier rode on horseback through the long forest avenues, and on the 2d day of December he reached the city of New Orleans, accompanied only by his personal staff of five men. The citizens received him with enthusiastic demonstrations. With his force of five officers he had come to defend a defenseless city, without fleets or forts or men, against an expedition so strong as this. He at once won the confidence of the citizens of New Orleans as he told them that he had come for the purpose of protecting the city or perishing in the attempt. The old Indian fighter was enthusiastically received by the creole society of New Orleans, and, to their surprise, appeared perfectly at home in the drawing-rooms of the cultured leaders of fashionable society in this, the gayest city in the western world. He was perfectly at home also among the rough frontiersmen—those skilled marksmen of that section of the United States—who rapidly assembled to assist in the enterprise of defending the city. His courage attracted the attention and challenged the admiration of the pirates who at that time infested the islands and channels known only to them at the mouth of the great river, and who volunteered their services in the defense of New Orleans. By the middle of December this great military leader had assembled two half-filled regiments of regular troops, numbering 800 men; two regiments of State militia, badly equipped, and a battalion of the brave creole guard of New Orleans, in all about 2,000 men. Somewhere out in the woods, 10 or 15 days' march away, 4,000 men were approaching the city by forced marches, poorly armed, almost without equipment, and badly clothed. Only 800 of them arrived in time to participate in the fight which followed. Then there came the news that the great armada had been safely piloted by treacherous Spanish guides through the channels at the mouth of the Mississippi and up into the great river. Then followed the naval engagement, in which the small fleet of gunboats hastily assembled for the defense of New Orleans was speedily destroyed, and news was brought to New Orleans that the magnificent army of the invaders had effected a landing and were preparing for a victorious march against the city.

Jackson brought confidence back to the citizens and to his army by announcing his determination of driving the invaders into the sea, and the engagement on the 24th day of December followed. Across the narrow strip of land over which the army must pass to reach the city a great wall of earth was speedily constructed, and back of it assembled the little army of Jackson, outnumbered ten to one, facing the best drilled and disciplined troops the world had seen up to that time, equipped, all of them, with the best and most modern arms. In the hastily constructed trenches the little army of Americans awaited the onslaught of the enemy. They were not drilled, as were the troops of the invaders, but every man knew how to shoot and above their ramparts floated the starry banner of the new Republic. They had assembled for the purpose of protecting their homes and for the purpose of defending the women and the children in the city 4 miles to the rear.

During the period of preparation for the defense of New Orleans the ladies of New Orleans had proven always a source of inspiration. By expressing confidence in the old warrior who commanded the force they encouraged the hardy pioneers and trappers and the brave creole soldiery of New Orleans in their preparations for the approaching battle. Fair faces looked down from the windows of beautiful old New Orleans homes as the soldiers drilled in the streets. They enthusiastically applauded the passing regiments. They lined the roadways and smiled encouragement and approval as the troops marched out at the opening of the Christmas holidays of that year to defend the city. Stories of cruelty, outrages, and excesses committed by the regiments now advancing on the city during the progress of their victorious marches in the Peninsula had reached the men and women of New Orleans. Booty and beauty had been the watchword which animated these regiments as they committed their recent outrages in their marches in European countries, and the ladies of New Orleans as well as the men who defended the city knew what to expect if success crowned the efforts of this great invading army. Beautiful homes had been arranged for hospital use by the ladies of New Orleans and fair hands, unaccustomed to labor of that character, made clothing for the soldiers.

The holiday season slowly passed, then as now a time for merriment in the quaint old city. But for the first time at this season an atmosphere of gloom hung heavy over all. The ladies of New Orleans occupied their time after the departure of their defenders in making a beautiful silken banner upon which with excellent workmanship they embroidered the emblem of the new State of Louisiana—a pelican, white and graceful; the emblem which appears upon the great seal of the State, which in the religious art of medieval times symbolized always self-sacrifice. The bird is represented in heraldry as wounding her breast and feeding her young with her own blood. The banner completed was presented to Gen. Jackson a few days before the great battle. On the 30th day of December of that year it was placed in position on the ramparts side by side with the American flag as a constant reminder to the soldiers during the days which followed of all that a victory for the invaders meant to the ladies who had embroidered that banner. Nine days later the great battle was fought. The splendid regiments of the enemy advanced in overwhelming numbers upon the little army of defenders; the magnificent invading force marched confidently forward, prepared and equipped, as every man believed, for an easy victory. The humblest private in the ranks of the invaders on the 8th day of January, 101 years ago, presented in his gay uniform a more martial appearance than the major general commanding the American force. Back of the intrenchments there were no drilled soldiers, but they were prepared—prepared as soldiers ought to be prepared then, prepared as soldiers ought to be prepared now. They knew how to shoot, every one of them. There was but one command given those skilled marksmen: "Hold back your fire until you can see the whites of their eyes." That was the only order obeyed. The advancing red lines were not interrupted until they approached near the ramparts, and then there blazed out along the whole American front the most deadly, the most effective musketry fire that had ever occurred in all the wars. For months the English had been preparing for this moment. For 30 days the Americans had been preparing. On the American side there were no orders to fire in regular volleys, but every man picked out his target. The battle lasted 45 minutes. On the American side seven men were killed. The English Army withdrew. All that night American sentinels marched up and down their ramparts, and over the battle field the Stars and Stripes and the Pelican flag majestically floated side by side. [Applause.]

That night the cold light of stars shone down in the faces and on the stiffening forms of 4,000 of the red-coated soldiery of England, who lay dead just outside the intrenchments. Word was sent back to the ladies of New Orleans to prepare their hospitals not for the wounded of the American Army but for the wounded men of the army of the invaders. Ten days later the remnants of the English force sadly and miserably embarked upon their ships and sailed away forever from American shores. [Applause.] Jackson and his men, with the American flag and the Pelican banner borne proudly at the head of the column, marched in triumph back to the Creole City. [Applause.]

The banner, however, which had inspired Jackson's men in the great battle disappeared from view and was almost forgotten. Nearly half a century passed, and during that long period of time no one knew where that historic banner was kept nor who cared for it. Slowly the decades passed and the War between the States commenced and proceeded with its great battles along the longest battle front the world had ever known. On the 17th day of May, 1863, in the fiercely fought battle at Big Black River Bridge in Mississippi a body of Louisiana soldiers found themselves engaged with a detachment of Cavalry from Illinois; and at the head of the Louisiana soldiers there was carried the old historic Pelican flag; the banner which nearly half a hundred years before had inspired the defenders of New Orleans. During the progress of the battle at the bridge the banner was captured by the Illinois Cavalry under Gen. Osterhaus and was carried back by them to Illinois and deposited with other captured battle emblems in Memorial Hall in the great capital building at Springfield, Ill., and again the ladies of New Orleans lost all trace of the historic banner.

One year ago to-day on the occasion of the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the Battle of New Orleans Mrs. Robert Hall Wiles, of Chicago, the national president of the United Daughters of 1812, was in New Orleans and participated in the ceremonies of that occasion. While there she was advised by Mrs. J. B. Richardson, former president of the Daughters of 1776 and 1812, to the effect that the Pelican banner was in Illinois, and Mrs. Richardson and other ladies of New Orleans belonging to this great patriotic organization, asked her to request its return to New Orleans. On her journey back to Chicago Mrs. Wiles stopped at Springfield and was able, with the assistance of the custodian of our Memorial Hall, to locate, safely preserved by the State of Illinois, the historic old banner embroidered by the ladies of New Orleans over 100 years ago. She appeared before the State senate in Illinois and communicated to them the request from the ladies of New Orleans, the descendants of the ladies who embroidered the banner, that the banner be returned to them.

Hon. Thomas Campbell, of Rock Island, Ill., a member at that time of the State senate and a Grand Army man, presented a joint resolution providing for the return of the banner. In the interval between the introduction of the resolution and its passage the Grand Army organization in Illinois indorsed the resolution. It unanimously passed both houses and was signed by the governor, and to-day the old Pelican flag is home again, back in the city of New Orleans, returned by the great State of Illinois to the descendants of the ladies who made it. [Applause.]

At this very hour, on this the anniversary of the Battle of New Orleans, in this historic old southern city, a high official of Illinois, the adjutant general of that great State, acting on behalf of the governor and for the Legislature of Illinois and for the 6,000,000 people who live in Illinois, is participating in the ceremonies connected with the return of the old Pelican flag to its proper custodians, to the Daughters of 1776 and 1812 of the State of Louisiana, and to them to-day is committed the care and protection of this beautiful silken banner which has played so prominent a part in the history of New Orleans and of the United States. [Applause.]

The city of New Orleans was nearly 100 years old when Jackson and his little army defended it so gallantly. Over it had floated the flag of France and the flag of Spain. Just outside the city boundaries for many years there floated the flag of England, but from 1803 until the outbreak of the Civil War the Stars and Stripes floated over the old city. During a part of the period of the War between the States the banners of the Confederacy waved over its public buildings. About and around the old city five flags have floated, and the citizens of Louisiana have during its history lived under five different Governments. They know something about flags in New Orleans, but on this one hundred and first anniversary of the Battle of New Orleans, next to the Stars and Stripes, dearest and most cherished by every loyal citizen of New Orleans is the old Pelican flag, which to-day the great State I have the honor in part to represent here is returning to the old city and to the descendants of the fair ladies who made it. [Loud applause.] The ceremony which proceeds to-day under sunny skies in this quaint old city of the Southland means that for all of us, whether we live in the North or whether we live in the South, the unpleasant memories of long ago are forgotten, and we remember only the feats of arms of the men who wore the blue and of the men who wore the gray. Proud, whether we live in the South or in the North, of the American courage and manhood displayed in the armies of the North and in the armies of the South in the dark days of the early sixties. The return of the Pelican flag to-day means that all traces of the chasm which divided the sections of our country half a hundred years ago have disappeared, and under one banner all the States of our common country move forward irresistibly to meet the tremendous destiny of the future. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Louisiana, Gen. ESTOPINAL. [Applause.]

Mr. ESTOPINAL. Mr. Speaker, it is with great diffidence that I approach the subject which has been so thoroughly discussed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY]. I address myself, however, to the flag episode.

Mr. Speaker, I was glad when the gentleman from Illinois informed me a few days ago that he would address the House on the subject of the function that is taking place in New Orleans to-day, the subject of which is the return of the Andrew Jackson flag, as this old flag is called, to the ladies of New Orleans by the State of Illinois. This flag was presented by the ladies of New Orleans on the eve of the Battle of New Orleans to Gen. Jackson. It was carried through the Battle of New Orleans and floated from the headquarters of Gen. Jackson. After the battle it lay in some museum. No one had heard of it until 48 years afterward it was unfurled again to the breeze and carried by a Confederate regiment into battle. It was captured from the Confederates at the Battle of Big Black Bridge in Mississippi on the 17th of May, 1863, by the gallant troopers of the great Commonwealth of Illinois, headed by Gen. Osterhaus, and I am sure that if any of them could they would testify to the fact that it was not wrested from its defenders without a struggle.

It was carried to the State of Illinois, and has been until now in the Memorial Hall of that State. Some years ago it was discovered by Mrs. Richardson, a former president of the Daughters of 1776 and 1812, and she followed up her work until a year ago, when Mrs. Wills, I believe, president of the United States Daughters of 1776 and 1812, visited New Orleans on the occasion of the centennial of the Battle of New Orleans, who joined Mrs. Richardson and other ladies of New Orleans in the effort to recover the flag, and from that work resulted the passage of an act of the General Assembly of the State of Illinois authorizing the transfer of the flag to the ladies of New Orleans, the daughters of those ladies who made the flag in 1814.

Now, Mr. Speaker, demonstrations of this kind are manifest proof of the brotherly feeling that exists among all the people of this great country. Here is a flag that was captured 53 years ago, and now the great State of Illinois takes notice of this and by act of the legislature authorizes the return of this emblem to the custody of those from whom it was taken, which is another of the manifestations so frequent in recent times that have contributed so largely to show that we are indeed reunited. [Applause.] I am sure that this demonstration to-day, this beautiful function, with all its official ceremony and social eclat, taking place in New Orleans, will implant in the breast of every patriotic American citizen a feeling of pride and of abiding faith in our ability to maintain the honor and integrity of our country against any odds, no matter who they are.

I happened to be at the Battle of Big Black Bridge, though I was not in the ranks. It is a peculiar incident, and I will relate it briefly, because it forms a remarkable coincidence. I was detailed just a few hours before to take out of the city of Vicksburg the Federal prisoners we had on our hands. There were but few of them, and they had been rescued from the waters of the Mississippi River, and I myself had assisted in rescuing some of them from the boats we sank as they attempted to go by our batteries. [Applause.] At 12 o'clock at night I was ordered to prepare to leave on the next train, and at daybreak we left with our prisoners on the last train that left Vicksburg and went through the battle field while the battle was going on. Extending from the bridge head the Confederates were lying along the railroad embankment. Within a mile probably, or less, came the Federal line, just emerging from the woods. They had not brought up their artillery yet; the battle was just beginning. But they tried their best to stop the train by rifle fire. We, however, pulled through without any disaster, and that is how I participated in the Battle of Big Black Bridge.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Illinois in my name and in the name of the people of my State for the magnificent address that he delivered here to-day, and for his flattering allusions to the people of New Orleans. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ALLEN] may proceed for three minutes before we take up the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ALLEN] may address the House for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. Speaker, I was not on the floor when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] delivered his speech yesterday, having been called out on account of the serious illness of a relative. I have since read it in the RECORD, however, and I must say it is a very intemperate, indiscreet, and unfortunate utterance. Such speeches do no good, but, on the contrary, stir up strife at a time when our Representatives, of all men, should keep cool. He makes sweeping charges against the German-Americans as a class which I know to be untrue. I have lived among German-Americans all my life. They are liberty-loving, law-abiding citizens. In the war to preserve this Union there were no more patriotic citizens than they. I know many who served in my father's company, and often heard him speak of their bravery and patriotism. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] attempts to indict a race, but he shows that he knows nothing about that race or its contribution to the history of our country. One might have expected to hear such a speech in the British Parliament, but certainly not in the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, entirely apart from what has just occurred, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] may proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] may proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Speaker, in my address yesterday I spoke as follows:

> Ammunition—
> Says the German-American—
> helps the allies; so, by hook or by crook, by laws or by strikes, by gold or by dynamite, by torpedo or by mine, let us do what we can to keep ammunition from reaching our enemies.

Whereupon the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] interrupted me and asked me what authority I had for my statement. To this I replied that the metropolitan press was my authority. I totally forgot to add "and likewise the President of the United States." For I find in President Wilson's message these words:

> There are citizens of the United States, I blush to admit, born under other flags but welcomed under our generous naturalization laws to the full freedom and opportunity of America, who have poured the poison of disloyalty into the very arteries of our national life; who have sought to bring the authority and good name of our Government into contempt, to destroy our industries wherever they thought it effective for their vindictive purposes to strike at them, and to debase our politics to the uses of foreign intrigue.

Now, later in the day the gentleman from Wisconsin made a number of comments on my words. At the time he spoke I happened to be in the gallery, and I was one of those who thought that perhaps there was something personal in his remarks, though he says, and I accept his statement with great good will, that there was nothing of the kind intended. He did not direct any of his remarks toward me, it appears. Furthermore, the gentleman from Wisconsin came to me later and asked me if I wanted anything struck out of the RECORD. I said, "No." Because, Mr. Speaker, striking matters out of the RECORD does not strike them out of the press. Now, here is what the gentleman said, when he spoke of the enlistments from Massachusetts for service in the Spanish War:

> If Germany or Austria-Hungary should attempt by any deliberate act to insult our Government or to invade our rights, I am sure that these German-Americans who in times past have shown their loyalty would respond to the colors nobly, and not as some of the volunteers from effete New England in the Spanish War did when they enlisted in that little war, against a little and crumbling country, when after they enlisted they had their mothers go and beg the governor of Massachusetts, Gov. Wolcott, not to send them to the front. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, it never occurred to me to answer the gentleman. It seemed to me foolish to suppose that anybody in Massachusetts would be interested in trivial chatter of that sort. We are accustomed to casual vituperation there. We consider it rather a compliment. If you did not say anything about us we should think that really we had become effete. But the newspaper men tell me that I am expected to say something.

However, I shall not defend Massachusetts. Her defense is in the pages of this country's history; but I am going to defend these wretched young Massachusetts volunteers if it so be that they are not the figment of the gentleman's imagination. I am going to say a word about these young gentlemen, real or fictitious, whose mothers went to Gov. Wolcott and tried to arrange that they should not be sent to the front. At all events, Mr. Speaker, I can say in their defense that they actually enlisted; that they took the risk of being sent to the front. It was not everybody who did that. As to their mothers' efforts to save them from service of a dangerous nature, those efforts were singularly unsuccessful. In the Spanish War Massachusetts furnished six volunteer regiments. One of them was a regiment of Coast Artillery, which is always at the front, but we will not reckon it as at the front for it had no casualties in action. There were five Infantry regiments, of which three were at the front, all of them having casualties in action. A fourth Infantry regiment, the Eighth Massachusetts, garrisoned Matanzas, Cuba, after the war.

I hold in my hand the Historical Register and Dictionary of the United States Army, volume 2, and I refer you to page 290. There I find that, outside of the Rough Riders, the only volunteer regiments which had casualties in action in Cuba were the Thirty-third Michigan, the Seventy-first New York, the Second Massachusetts, and the Ninth Massachusetts. Here in my hand I hold the Operations of the Army for 1898. I turn to that part of the report of the Major General Commanding the Army which refers to the Porto Rican campaign. There I find that the only regiments of volunteers in Porto Rico which had casualties were the Sixteenth Pennsylvania, the Fourth Ohio, the Third Wisconsin, and the Sixth Massachusetts. So, you see, that out of nine volunteer regiments in Cuba and Porto Rico which had casualties in action no less than three came from Massachusetts.

Mr. Speaker, I know something about the Wisconsin troops in the Spanish War. There were two regiments of them, the Second and Third Wisconsin, in the brigade with which I served in Porto Rico. I could not ask for any finer young Americans than there were in the Second and Third Wisconsin. I was proud of them as fellow volunteers. Yet I venture to say that if I were to delve into the court-martial records of Gen. Ernst's brigade I should find that some discreditable acts had been performed, not only by a few of the boys in the Second and Third Wisconsin Regiments but by a few of the boys in the Sixteenth Pennsylvania as well. Wherever you gather 3,000 young men together there is sure to be misdemeanor and even crime. Surely no one would judge those stout troops by the few rascals in their ranks. Why judge the Massachusetts troops by a few silly mothers, if any silly mothers there actually were?

Now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is not a new Member of the House. He has been here a great many years. He knows that he is not an irresponsible muckraker who can get up and make statements and not have them challenged and not be asked to specify. He knows better than that. He aspires to be a leader, and he sits at the table of the near leaders. When the Republican leader, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], is absent the gentleman from Wisconsin, as a volunteer or otherwise, to some extent at least fills our leader's shoes. [Laughter.] The gentleman has certain specialties of leadership which he has assumed. Perhaps he has been elected to perform them. I do not know. At all events, at times, he has assumed the leadership. Now, one of the qualities of leadership is to command the respect of the House. There is only one way in which you can command the respect of the House, and that is to make good what you say and tell where you got the information on which you base your charges. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to address the House not exceeding two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] asks unanimous consent for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to become a party to the quarrel between the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. For my part I have not felt that I should indulge in speeches that might serve to affect or at least appear to affect that neutrality which is peculiarly incumbent upon a Member of this House to exhibit at all times. But inasmuch as the gentleman from Massachusetts has seen fit this morning to undertake to back his speech of yesterday by a quotation from the address delivered by the President of the United States to the Congress, I think it is but fitting that that part of the address which relates to the subject matter should be given in its entirety. The gentleman unfortunately stops at a point in his remarks where the quotation might give to those not familiar with the entire text a totally wrong impression. The gentleman read as follows, reading from the President's address:

> There are citizens of the United States, I blush to admit, born under other flags but welcomed under our generous naturalization laws to the full freedom and opportunity of America, who have poured the poison of disloyalty into the very arteries of our national life; who have sought to bring the authority and good name of our Government into contempt, to destroy our industries wherever they thought it effective for their vindictive purposes to strike at them, and to debase our policies to the uses of foreign intrigue.

I desire to continue the quotation by reading the following, that immediately comes after:

> Their number is not great as compared with the whole number of those sturdy hosts by which our Nation has been enriched in recent generations out of virile foreign stocks.

It is one thing to condemn those, no matter where they come from or what their lineage, who are disloyal to the American people, to the American Government, and to our flag. It is another thing to condemn wholesale a people because of their particular lineage. [Applause.]

WATER-POWER DEVELOPMENT ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes, and move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for its consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes, with Mr. HARRISON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 408. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill for amendment.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FERRIS. I understand that all debate on the paragraph is exhausted, except five minutes reserved to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Seven minutes remain. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amend, page 6, line 10, after the word "act," by inserting "or its cancellation as herein provided."

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the chairman of the committee has no serious objection to this amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to say that. The debate on this section is closed to all except the committee. I think sections 1 and 6 both take care of the amendment offered, and I really hope that the gentleman will not ask that it go in at this time. Since talking with the gentleman I have read section 1 and section 6, and I am convinced that the gentleman's amendment is unnecessary. I do not think it will do any harm, but I do not want to accept an amendment that is unnecessary.

Mr. BENNET. I ask a vote on it. I think the gentleman from Oklahoma is mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Add, at the end of section 6:
> "Provided, however, That such leases shall, whenever practicable, be made at public lettings on competitive bids after notice publicly given."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. We have passed section 6 and read section 7, and closed debate on that.

Mr. BENNET. The gentleman is in error.

Mr. FERRIS. No; I am not in error.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that we were on section 6 when the House adjourned last night.

Mr. BENNET. And a motion was made to strike it out.

Mr. FERRIS. I am in error about that, and I withdraw my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BENNET. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 11, noes 42.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], to strike out the section.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That where, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, the public interest requires or justifies the execution by any lessee of contracts for the sale and delivery of electrical energy for periods extending beyond the life of the lease, but for not more than 20 years thereafter, such contracts may be entered into upon the approval of the said Secretary, and thereafter, in the event of the exercise by the United States of the option to take over the plant in the manner provided in section 5 or 6 hereof, the United States or its new lessee shall assume and fulfill all such contracts entered into by the first lessee.

Mr. BENNET. I move to amend the section, Mr. Chairman, by inserting, in line 23, after the word "in," the word "either."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The gentleman from New York will restate his amendment.

Mr. MANN. That is easy.

Mr. BENNET. On line 23, page 6, after the second use of the word "in," insert the word "either."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 23, after the second word "in" insert the word "either."

So that the line will read:

In the manner provided in either section 5 or 6 hereof.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, yesterday the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] said, very wisely, that this bill would come under the scrutiny of very able men, who would take advantage even of commas. There is no "manner provided by section 5 or 6." As the bill now reads there may be a manner provided by section 5 and another manner provided by section 6; and if the chairman and the committee want certainty, and if the House wants certainty, they ought to accept this amendment. That is all I have to say on it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will remember that in the last Congress it read "five or six," which may have been an incongruity. The committee amended it to read "section 5 or 6." That may be a matter of grammar, and I am inclined to think the amendment offered is a proper one.

Mr. FERRIS. I have no serious objection to the amendment, but I was of the opinion that the word "or" between "5" and "6," under any ordinary, reasonable construction, would let them proceed under each one.

Mr. MANN. I fully agree with the gentleman, and I think that the words "section 5 or 6," while they might not be grammatically correct, would accomplish the purpose. Yet it is safe to put it in the best form.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET] feels keenly about it, I shall not oppose it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "first," in line 25, page 6, and to insert in lieu thereof the word "prior."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 25, strike out the word "first" and insert the word "prior."

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, under the provisions of section 12 of this bill there might be five or six lessees during the 50-year period. If the language is left as it is in the bill—

The United States or its new lessee shall assume and fulfill all such contracts entered into by the first lessee.

That is not what is intended. What is intended is that the United States or the new lessee shall assume and fulfill all such contracts entered into by the lessee immediately prior thereto, because there might be five or six.

Mr. LENROOT. If the gentleman's criticism is well taken, does not the same objection apply to the use of the word "prior," which would relate only to the lessee immediately prior, and if there were four more preceding him they would not be covered by the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. BENNET. That is exactly my idea of what the bill means.

Mr. MANN. I am inclined to think the gentleman's criticism was well taken. Supposing there is a second lessee. He is required to fulfill the contracts entered into by the first lessee. The second lessee does not make the contracts. Now, under the gentleman's amendment a third lessee would not be required to fulfill any contract of the first lessee.

Mr. BENNET. What I had in mind particularly was a case arising under section 12 where there was a cancellation of a lease.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BENNET. And if the United States could enter into it—I do not think it could, after the House voted down my amendment a moment or two ago, but assuming that it could—then the provisions that ought to be carried out would be the provisions of the lease immediately preceding the cancellation, because there is a lapse of time conditions——

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not get my point. The first lessee makes a contract.

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The first lease is canceled, and a second lease is made. The contract has been made by the first lessee. The second lessee is required to carry out the contracts of the first lessee. The second lessee has made no contracts. Now, the gentleman's amendment would not require the carrying out of these contracts at all by the third lessee, because it would only refer to the contracts made by the second lessee, who had made no contracts, although the contracts of the first lessee would have to be carried out by the second lessee while he had the lease.

Mr. BENNET. Oh, I think the gentleman overlooks the language of section 6, applicable to still another condition, and that is where the Secretary of the Interior has taken over a lease. On the expiration of a lease he is given the power there to grant it to another lessee, under such conditions and for such periods as the law may authorize, which may be entirely different from the original contract entered into by the first lessee.

Mr. MANN. Oh, but here is the first lessee making a contract to supply power. His lease is canceled. The purpose of this bill is to require the second lessee to carry out the contract. That is the purpose of section 7.

Mr. BENNET. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Now, if that is a proper purpose, these contracts ought to be carried out also by the third lessee.

Mr. BENNET. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman's amendment would not require that.

Mr. BENNET. A gentleman sitting by me suggests that we might reach it by saying "all prior lessees."

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. I should like to answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and then I will yield. Let us assume that there are four or five cancellations——

Mr. MANN. I understand the gentleman's purpose.

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Should not the third lessee carry out the contracts made by the first lessee as well as by the second lessee?

Mr. BENNET. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I think the bill as reported is open to criticism, but I think the gentleman's amendment makes it worse.

Mr. BENNET. How about the words "all prior lessees"? Then there can be no question.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Section 7 describes the contracts referred to. Why not stop with the words "such contracts" and strike out the words "entered into by the first lessee"? Then I think the section will sufficiently describe the contracts referred to.

Mr. BENNET. I think that accomplishes the object, and I shall be very glad to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask unanimous consent to close the debate on this paragraph and amendments in five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman have any objection to this amendment?

Mr. FERRIS. I could not hear it.

Mr. BENNET. It seems to me the gentleman from Michigan suggests an amendment which would cover the whole thing.

Mr. FERRIS. What is it?

Mr. CRAMTON. To strike out the words "entered into by the first lessee" and let the paragraph stop with the words "such contracts."

Mr. MANN. In other words, the bill authorizes the making of contracts with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. If a lease is canceled, the purpose would be to have the contracts carried out by whomever has them. I think this will do it.

Mr. FERRIS. Let me submit a suggestion. The first lease is the one that has been well under observation. This first lease might pass into the hands of subsequent holders. There are so many things that might intervene that we have thought it well to lean on the first lease rather than on any subsequent lease.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman would say at once that the second lessee, if there be one, could make a contract with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And if he made a contract it should be carried out and the amendment would carry out all the contracts.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment and offer the following: On line 25, after the word "contracts," strike out the remainder of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment and offer another. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "contracts," on page 6, line 25.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 8. That for the occupancy and use of lands and other property of the United States permitted under this act the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to specify in the lease and to collect charges or rentals for all power developed and sold or used by the lessee for any purpose other than the operation of the plant, and the proceeds shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act, and after use thereof in the construction of reclamation works and upon return to the reclamation fund of any such moneys in the manner provided by the reclamation act and acts amendatory thereof and supplemental thereto, 50 per cent of the amounts so utilized in and returned to the reclamation fund shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury after the expiration of each fiscal year to the State within the boundaries of which the hydroelectric power or energy is generated and developed, said moneys to be used by such State for the support of public schools or other educational institutions or for the construction of public improvements, or both, as the legislature of the State may direct: Provided, That leases for the development of power by municipal corporations solely for municipal use shall be issued without rental charge, and that leases for development of power not in excess of 25 horsepower may be issued to individuals or associations for domestic, mining, or irrigation use without such charge.

SEC. 9. That in case of the development, generation, transmission, or use of power or energy under a lease given under this act in a State which has not provided a commission or other authority having power to regulate rates and service of electrical energy and the issuance of stock and bonds by public-utility corporations engaged in power development, transmission, and distribution, the control of service and of charges for service to consumers and stock and bond issues shall be vested in the Secretary of the Interior or committed to such body as may be authorized by Federal statute until such time as the State shall provide a commission or other authority for such regulation and control.

SEC. 10. That where the Secretary of the Interior shall determine that the value of any lands heretofore or hereafter reserved as water-power sites or for purposes in connection with water-power development or electrical transmission will not be materially injured for such purposes by either location, entry, or disposal, the same may be allowed under applicable land laws upon the express condition that all such locations, entries, or other methods of disposal shall be subject to the sole right of the United States and its authorized lessees to enter upon, occupy, and use any part or all of such lands reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of all purposes connected with the development, generation, transmission, or utilization of power or energy, and all rights acquired in such lands shall be subject to a reservation of such sole right to the United States and its lessees, which reservation shall be expressed in the patent or other evidence of title: Provided, That locations, entries, selections, or filings heretofore allowed for lands reserved as water-power sites or in connection with water-power development or electrical transmission may proceed to approval or patent under and subject to the limitations and conditions in this section contained, but nothing herein shall be construed to deny or abridge rights now granted by law to those seeking to use the public lands for purposes of irrigation or mining alone.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the committee amendment.

The Clerk read the committee amendment, as follows:

On page 7, line 4, strike out the language "for all power developed and sold or used" and insert the following: "therefor, which charges or rentals in all cases where the power is generated and developed in whole or in part upon lands belonging to the United States may be measured by the power so developed and sold or used."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to amend the committee amendment by leaving out the word "therefor" from the language inserted on page 7, line 5.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to amend the committee amendment by striking out the word "therefor" in line 5. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the committee amendment as modified.

The committee amendment as modified was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next committee amendment as follows:

Page 7, line 33, insert after the word "State" the words "or subdivisions thereof for the construction and maintenance of public roads or."

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BENNET. If this amendment is adopted, would it thereafter estop an amendment striking out language including this language?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think the gentleman is precluded from offering an amendment to the paragraph striking out language which includes this language. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next committee amendment as follows:

Page 7, line 35, after the word "other," insert the word "public."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 10, after the word "plant," insert the words "in developing power."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this was to permit the charge measured by the power developed, for all the power other than that necessary for the operation of the dam. My attention was called this morning to the possible construction of the language as it appears in the bill. A manufactory plant might be used in connection and conjunction with it, and all be regarded as one plant. To avoid any possibility of that construction my amendment inserts the words "in developing power," so that that power could not be charged for, and the power that will be charged for will be such power as is necessary for the dam and accessory work.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Acknowledging the point, which I think is a good one, it might be, however, that there would be navigation somewhere developed through locks which would have no particular business in developing the power. If you operated locks for the purpose of navigation, the Government would not want to charge for the use of the power consumed in opening and closing the locks in the interest of navigation. I make this suggestion so that it may be taken care of later.

Mr. LENROOT. The committee will bear that in mind; but I think that for the present it is taken care of.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 7, at the end of the section add the following words: "And provided further, That all charges or rentals received for or arising out of the use of land or property within a national forest shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as are other receipts of national forests, and shall be used and distributed in the same manner as such other receipts."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, we are carrying on a forestry policy at large expense, and there is considerable criticism of it, as everyone very well knows who has been on this floor and heard or taken part in debate when the Agricultural appropriation bill was under consideration. I think no feature of the Agricultural appropriation bill stirs up so much feeling as that relating to the national forests, and largely on account of the expense of administering the forests. It seems to me it is only fair that when these forests are to be used, when their resources are made available and placed at the disposal of private interests and revenue arises from them, the national forests ought to be credited with the proceeds, ought to be credited with that revenue. That revenue ought not to be diverted to any other service or used for any other purpose.

The revenue of the national forests arising from the sale of timber and for the use of grazing land is all put into the Federal Treasury. Twenty-five per cent of the total receipts are paid back to the States or to the local communities where the property out of which the receipts or revenues accrue is situated. The Congress several times has had occasion to consider the wisdom of that provision and has discussed the proper amount of the receipts that should properly be payable to local communities, and 25 per cent has been determined as the proper proportion they shall receive. That is the disposition that would be made of this money if it were paid into the Federal Treasury in accordance with my amendment. I think it is the proper disposition to be made of the money. The forests, which are maintained at large expense, that expense being severely criticized, ought to have the benefit of all their resources and of all their revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of three minutes debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that at the expiration of three minutes debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close. Is there objection?

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes, whether now or a little later.

Mr. FERRIS. Will a later section do just as well?

Mr. FORDNEY. I think this is the section upon which I ought to speak.

Mr. FERRIS. Then I ask unanimous consent to close the debate at the expiration of 10 minutes, 5 minutes of that time to be consumed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and 5 minutes by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of amendments to this section which I desire to offer. This section has a good many different provisions in it.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request and ask that at the expiration of 10 minutes all debate on the present amendment shall cease.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma as modified?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, what I want to say is this: In 1902 an act was passed which provided for the creation of a fund to be made up from a portion of the proceeds of the sale of land in various States for a reclamation fund. In that act it was provided that no project should be begun until there was money in the fund to complete the project under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. Money came into that fund very rapidly for a few years, and it was finally discovered that there was some twenty-odd million dollars in it. The men who had the matter in charge evidently being very anxious to get at the money to expend it, investigated and recommended 32 reclamation projects. I am not opposed to reclamation. Those 32 projects were estimated to cost $48,000,000. Work began on the entire 32 projects at about the same time.

In 1910 representatives of the Department of the Interior came before the Committee on Ways and Means and asked for a bond issue of $30,000,000 to replenish that fund, recommended by the President. A Mr. Davis, who represented the Interior Department, made the statement that the finest crew of engineers ever assembled in a body had been assembled and was at work on those projects, and that on those 32 projects, estimated to cost a total of $48,000,000, the sum of $73,000,000 had been expended, and it had been discovered that it would require $75,000,000 more to finish the work. Yet they were the greatest and most efficient body of engineers ever assembled. Congress at that time declined to authorize the issue of $30,000,000 of bonds, the proceeds of which were to be used in the reclamation fund, but as I now remember it an authorization of $10,000,000 was made.

Mr. MONDELL. Twenty million dollars.

Mr. FORDNEY. Twenty million dollars, the gentleman from Wyoming says; but the proceeds of the sale of those lands, instead of going into the fund for the furthering of these projects, should be retained to pay those bonds when they came due. It was further shown that when those funds had been exhausted a great number of men had settled upon the lands that were to be reclaimed by those irrigation projects, and had been working for the Government. When the money that was in the fund had been exhausted, their wages were increased, and a certificate, in every sense a due bill, was issued to each of these men, which certificate, it was understood, would be accepted by the Government as so much cash when they came to pay for the land. The plan of payment of this land was to be based upon the cost of the project, prorated on the number of acres of land to be reclaimed. In some instances it was estimated the cost would be $210 for every acre reclaimed. Secretary Ballinger called the attention of the Attorney General to the methods then being used, and the Attorney General replied there was no authorization of law for these methods, and that those due bills were not worth the paper they were written upon, and ordered the system stopped. At that point a breach between the Secretary of the Interior and Mr. Pinchot took place. But the proceedings were stopped. It was found also that, contrary to the law, money had been diverted from one State to another State in these projects.

The law provided no money should be taken from one State and used upon a project in another State without its return to its proper State within a given time. The system was started. The lands to be reclaimed were very valuable and are valuable, but those funds were handled with a criminal negligence and mismanagement of the Government's money.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. SLOAN. I am interested to know something about those engineers. What were they—construction, civil engineers, or were they financial and credit engineers that have arisen recently in this country?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will say to the gentleman the only information I had was given by a gentleman by the name of Davis, who appeared before the committee and stated this corps of engineers had been sent out to examine the reclamation projects to see if it would be entirely practicable to establish and reclaim a certain amount of land.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman give me one or two minutes in order to answer the question?

Mr. FERRIS. I will yield to the gentleman one minute of my time, although the debate is limited.

Mr. MONDELL. May I ask the attention of the gentleman from Oklahoma for a moment? I suppose the 10-minute discussion was to be on the bill. The gentleman from Michigan is discussing an entirely different matter.

Mr. FORDNEY. No; I understood, sir, the funds from the sale of lands in the forest reserves are to be diverted to this reclamation purpose, and that is what I am talking about.

Mr. SLOAN. Does not the gentleman believe that if these gentlemen were given the opportunity they could so adjust their bookkeeping that the amounts would be appropriated so as to show it is a winning instead of a losing proposition, as the gentleman seems to try to show it to be?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; it is the Interior Department and not the Treasury of the United States I am talking about, a different method of bookkeeping. [Laughter.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] offered an amendment proposing to take the proceeds from such water power as may be developed from national forests and put it into the funds of the forest reserves. That course is impractical for a number of reasons. I have no quarrel with the forest reserves. There is no quarrel, so far as I know, between the forest reserve and the Interior Department.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. No; I can not do so, as I have only a minute and I want to use it all. The act of 1902, which was the reclamation act, provided that every penny from the sales of public lands should go into the reclamation fund to irrigate the barren, dry, arid lands of the West. In 1908, from that source, there was received $9,430,573.98; in 1909 there was received $7,755,466.81; in 1910 there was received $7,028,185.73; in 1911 there was received $6,135,547.76; in 1912 there was received $5,657,498.88; in 1913 there was received $3,737,910.55; in 1914, $3,460,451.63; and in 1915 the amount received, it is estimated, is only $3,222,281.79.

Now this bill proposes to do what? This bill does not propose to pass the fee title in these water-power sites at all, but does propose a leasing system, and the bill proposes to take therefrom a royalty. And now, certainly, if it was wise to take the money from the sale of the fee and put it in the Reclamation Service to the end that that service may not dwindle and die, surely it would be equally wise to put the royalty of the leasehold title, as distinguished from the fee-simple title, in the same place. I am not one who agrees with the gentlemen from Michigan that the irrigation proposition has been either a total or partial failure. On the contrary, my own State has contributed about six and a half million dollars to the irrigation fund, and we never have had an acre irrigated, so I can speak entirely dispassionately upon it. Not one acre has been irrigated in my State out of that expenditure of six and a half million dollars, but it has been elsewhere distributed. I mention this to show I have no selfish interest in the matter one way or the other.

Mr. FORDNEY. But it has been diverted from the gentleman's State to others.

Mr. FERRIS. I shall not be so selfish and look so closely at home when a great service is being carried on. If my own State momentarily suffers, I shall not help to strike down a service when we find that within a period of six or seven years the fund has dwindled from $9,000,000 to $3,000,000. I would not be a party to striking down such a service which Congress has helped to create, and I therefore hope the amendment will not be agreed to, as I am sure it is as unwise as it is unworkable. I am sure that its adoption would mean a step toward striking down a service of which we are all proud and which we desire to perpetuate after once being created.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 8, page 7, by striking out all after the word "plant," in line 10, and all of line 1, page 8, down to the word "direct," and insert: "And of the proceeds one-half shall be paid to the State within which the power or energy is generated or developed, to be used for the support of schools and the construction and maintenance of roads or other public improvement as the legislature may provide, and one-half shall be paid to the reclamation fund."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman how much time is desired over there?

Mr. MONDELL. I desire 5 minutes on this amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of 10 minutes, 5 to be controlled by some member of the committee and 5 by the other side, that debate on this section be closed.

Mr. SINNOTT. I should like to have 5 minutes.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I would like to have a little time.

Mr. FERRIS. I will say 25 minutes, 10 minutes to be controlled by the committee and 15 by the gentlemen in favor of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that debate on this section shall end at the expiration of 25 minutes, 10 of which to be controlled by the committee and 15 by those in favor of the amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the section under discussion provides that all the sums received from leases shall flow into the reclamation fund, but that after the fund has been so used one-half, when returned, shall be paid to the State in which the power is generated for certain State and local uses referred to in the section. My amendment provides that the receipts shall be divided, half to flow into the reclamation fund, and remain there, and half to be paid to the State in which the power is generated, for the maintenance of schools, for construction and repair of roads, as the legislature may provide. At the present time all of the proceeds of the sales of public land flow into the reclamation fund, and if we were to continue our past policy of selling lands, disposing of them, those funds should continue to be a part of the reclamation fund. But we are starting on an entirely new plan. We do not propose to part with the title to these lands but retain them in public ownership, receiving an annual revenue from them. The effect of that policy will be that the States and communities where public lands are located will no longer, as they do now, have the opportunity to tax the land values. There is some question as to whether the States and communities will be able to tax the improvements placed on the land. My own opinion is that they will, but a decision was recently rendered by an official of the Interior Department in a reclamation case which would indicate that the improvements could not be taxed. In any event, the land and the land value can not be taxed.

Furthermore, it is proposed under this bill to levy on the industry in proportion to the power that it generates. The royalties so collected might be very large, probably in some cases would be quite large, if the plan works. The result of the legislation would then be the establishment of plants, a large portion of the value of which the communities would not tax. The companies would be heavily burdened by paying a royalty, and the communities would be unable, without confiscating the property or unfairly burdening the people, to levy taxes over and above the burdens already placed by the Government.

If the land were to continue to be disposed of and become taxable, then the money received from the disposition of the land, except for the 5 per cent that now goes to the State, should continue to go to the reclamation fund. But when we permanently take from the community its power to tax and, in addition to that, lay a Federal burden on the enterprise which may be very considerable, we have established a condition under which the balance of the community will be called upon to bear very heavy burdens while its opportunity of securing funds for its schools and its roads and other purposes of government will be very greatly reduced. As a matter of justice, under a plan like this all of the royalties should go to the State to be distributed among the communities and for the benefit of the people of the State generally, as the legislature may provide, but inasmuch as the reclamation fund will be reduced as sales are abandoned and the fund is needed for western development, it has seemed a fair division to divide it half and half.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, just 100 years after the thirteen original colonies by a compact "writ in blood" were welded into one great Nation, with each of these jealously and justly retaining a certain sovereignty of its own, another star was added to the then glorious galaxy of States.

In 1876 Colorado, equally tenacious of her State sovereignty, was admitted into the Union, and in honor of the event named the Centennial State, and to-day I represent that State. A State proud of her history, proud of her achievement in political and industrial development, and justly proud and jealous of her great wealth of undeveloped natural resources, and did I not raise my voice and cast my vote against the relinquishment of her inalienable rights to these possessions, I should feel derelict in my duty and a traitor to the trust reposed in me.

Colorado has always opposed the claims proposed in this bill of ownership and control by leasing or otherwise of the natural resources within her borders by the General Government. The legislature of my State having memorialized against the provisions of this bill, I felt that in the work of the committee I could not support the provisions there. I thought then and I think now that the severity to my State might be lessened if an amendment similar to that offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] should prevail, and in the committee I earnestly supported this amendment. In the judgment of the committee, however, this was not acceded to and I filed a minority report. I feel that Colorado needs these funds and needs them now. Only about one-half of the land of our State is subject to taxation, over 21,000,000 acres being withdrawn for different purposes, leaving too small a portion of the State resources that can be taxed for the support of the government of the State.

In accordance with my own convictions and the expressed sentiment of the district I represent, I have opposed the provisions of this bill. Yet, it having passed the committee, over the protest of the opposing Representatives, we now seek to mitigate its injustice and inequality by the introduction of an amendment as to the disposition of the funds accruing from its operation. The average westerner appreciates the truth of the ancient adage "that a whole loaf is better than a half loaf, but that a half loaf is better than no loaf at all."

Now, if we can get one-half the proceeds derived from the operation of this bill placed at once into our State treasury, with which to build our roads and support our schools, it will be gratifying indeed. I shall, therefore, support the amendment, and sincerely hope it may prevail.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I am not opposed to the main objects of this bill. The people in my State, the State of Oregon, welcome regulation. They have it at the present time. I was a member of the Oregon Legislature when we passed the law limiting a water-right appropriation for power purposes to 40 years. But I am opposed to the rental, to the taxation provision of this bill. I do not think that there should be any Federal taxation upon our water powers under the guise and the subterfuge of rental of the United States public land. That is what I am particularly opposed to, because every dollar of rental, every dollar of taxation you euphemistically call rental, must be paid by the residents, by the water users residing in my State and the other States affected by this bill. What will be the result if this provision is left here? I call your attention to the hearings before the committee last year, on page 513, where there is inserted the blank form of the water-power contract, Form 61, revised December 20, 1913, when the present administration was in power, having the same officials as there are now in the department. The charges are placed, beginning at the first year with 10 cents, the fifth year at 50 cents per horsepower; the tenth year, and each succeeding year, the charges are to be $1 per horsepower. And then again, on page 753 of the hearings, under this caption, "Determination of capital values of power sites, together with a possible basis for rentals," the department again inserts the rental of $1 per horsepower. Now, what does that mean to my State and to the other Western States affected by this bill?

On page 649 of the hearings we have this statement prepared by the Geological Survey and the Forestry Department:

The accompanying tables show the estimated capacity of machinery that may reasonably be expected—

And mind you, "reasonably be expected"—

To be installed in the development of the water-power possibilities of power-site reserves outside of the national forests. It is estimated by the officials of the Forest Service that about 12,000,000 horsepower can be developed on the national forests on the basis of low-water conditions, with consideration, however, to some storage sites. It is roughly estimated, therefore, that installation of water wheels aggregating 18,000,000 horsepower capacity may reasonably be made on power sites of the public domain on the basis of low-water conditions, and this may be increased to 29,000,000 horsepower if all storage facilities are utilized.

Now, these figures relate only to the 11 Western States. A possibility of developing on the public domain 29,000,000 horsepower taxed at $1 per horsepower, the 11 Western States paying into the coffers of the Government $29,000,000 a year when the horsepower that may reasonably be expected to be developed is developed.

In the report of the committee accompanying this bill, signed by the chairman, we find on page 11 that the horsepower outside of the 11 Western States amounts to about 7,700,000 horsepower. Not a dollar rental, not a dollar taxation can be imposed on these water powers in the North Atlantic, the South Atlantic, the North Central, and the South Central States, because they are not upon the public domain.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. The time is closed by unanimous consent. Can the gentleman use time on the next section?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman in charge of this bill will let the gentleman from Oregon have five minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. I will yield to him three minutes of my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. There are very few people here and the House is engaged on a very important subject. I do not want to suggest the absence of a quorum, but this is a matter of great importance to the Western States.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes by extending the order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SINNOTT. Therefore they are offering to us a bait of 50 per cent of this contingent taxation and expect us to swallow it. You want us complacently to submit to this inequality? My own State, on the basis of these figures, prepared by the department, will pay annually over $2,000,000 into the coffers of the United States Government; and yet you tell us that we are on a footing of equality. You tell us that you are not encroaching upon the right that you concede we have to control and regulate our water powers. You say you are not encroaching upon that. You say that you are just charging a rental for the land. Here is your language:

* * * For use of land * * * rentals * * * measured by the power so developed and sold.

And yet you say you are not charging for the power. Why, Mr. Chairman, it is the sheerest sophistry and hypocrisy to say that that is not a charge for our water powers. It is a charge for the water power. Why, I heard the same defense made by a man who was arrested for violating the Sunday law, for selling a glass of beer on Sunday and charging for it. His defense was that he sold a sandwich and made a present of the glass of beer; that he made no charge for the beer; that he made the charge for the sandwich. And that is your position here. You make the sandwich charge upon the land, and you give us our empty jurisdiction over our water powers.

Mr. Chairman, I want to read from the United States Statutes at Large, volume 11, page 383, from the act admitting the State of Oregon into the Union. I read the preamble:

Whereas the people of Oregon have framed, ratified, and adopted a constitution of State government which is republican in form, and in conformity with the Constitution of the United States, and have applied for admission to the Union on an equal footing—

Mind you, "on an equal footing"— with the other States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That Oregon be, and she is hereby, received into the Union on an equal footing with the other States in all respects whatever.

Oh, we may have the empty, the tenuous, technical, legal equal footing if you enact this law; the shadow, not the substance; but we certainly will not be on an actual equal footing with the other States, we paying, these 11 Western States paying, $29,000,000 or $30,000,000 a year into the Treasury, and the States not affected by this bill having from 7,000,000 to 10,000,000 horse power not paying a dollar into the Treasury. Is this the equal footing contemplated by the act admitting us into the Union? If it is, it is an illusory footing.

Why, Mr. Chairman, there are only 33 Members of this House out of the 435 membership that are interested in protesting, only 33 are vitally affected by this bill. You may override these 33.

O, it is excellent
To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant.

[Applause.]

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, we have all been interested, I am sure, by the eloquence of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT], but I want to say to him that if he desires that equality for the Western States that the Eastern States enjoyed with reference to the public lands, instead of this money going into the reclamation fund and 50 per cent of it eventually to be used for the benefit of the States, all of the money will go into the United States Treasury.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. All I desire is our right to tax our water power the same as you have your right, unhampered by another sovereign, of taxing those same water powers. [Applause.]

Mr. LENROOT. In reply to that I want to say to the gentleman that his State never had, and he knew that it never had, the right to tax the public domain. It has not the right now, either equitably or morally, to tax it.

Mr. SINNOTT. If the gentleman will yield, we do not claim any such right.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not yield until I finish this statement. So far as taxing the water-power development of your State is concerned, you are as free to tax it to-day, you will be as free to tax it after this bill passes, as you ever have been. You are taxing it in your own State of Oregon to-day. Your water-power taxation law will apply to all of the water power that is developed under this act, as well as to the water power developed upon private lands. Now I will permit an interruption, to let the gentleman say whether that is not so.

Mr. MONDELL rose.

Mr. LENROOT. I am asking the gentleman from Oregon. The gentleman from Wyoming can keep his seat.

Mr. MONDELL. I will if I am disposed to.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman will, unless I yield for an interruption.

Mr. SINNOTT. My position is that under the guise of renting this land you are taxing our water powers. You concede that you have no right to tax our water powers, but under the subterfuge of a rental upon the land you impose a tax upon our water powers.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman says "our water powers." The gentleman's State has no water powers upon the public lands of the United States. You are free to deal with the water running through the streams upon the public lands as you choose, and this bill does not interfere with you in the slightest degree; but when you speak of "our water powers," the land belongs to the Government of the United States and not to the State of Oregon, and the land is as necessary for the development of power as is the water.

Mr. Chairman, the only objection that can be made to this bill in this respect is that it is too liberal to the Western States, that a portion at least of this money should go into the Federal Treasury to pay the cost of the administration of this law. We do not take one cent for that purpose. We give it all to you people in the West, to the 13 States involved. Every dollar of it goes into the reclamation fund. We hear from you gentlemen that you desire the building up of homes; but when we propose to put the money into a fund that will go to the making of homes in the West, you then object and say, "We want half of it to go into the State treasury." Gentlemen, so far as liberality is concerned, if there is any inequity in the provisions of this section, it is that we are doing too much for the West and not too little.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from California for a question?

Mr. LENROOT. If I have any time, I yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. LENROOT. Does that leave some time for the gentleman from Oklahoma?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] has five minutes remaining.

Mr. KAHN. The complaint of the men of the West is that under your law there will be so little development in the West that you will not have any money for reclamation purposes or anything else.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman from California quite disagrees, then, with the gentleman from Oregon, who said a moment ago that there would be some $2,000,000 from Oregon alone going into this fund?

Mr. KAHN. I do not think there will be a dollar.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the attitude of the two gentlemen reminds me of the dilemma of the farmer who said he did not know what he came to town for, but he was bound to have it. One gentleman says they will get nothing at all out of the law and the other says they will get $2,000,000 a year out of his State alone.

I want to proceed to the amendment under discussion. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] offers an amendment which proposes to take half the proceeds from these royalties and put them into the State treasury. I think if a careful poll of this House were taken, rather than adopt the amendment of the gentleman, they would adopt an amendment putting 50 per cent of the proceeds into the Federal Treasury. I do not support that proposition, however; neither do I support the proposition of the gentleman. There are members of the Public Lands Committee who in the committee—and they belong to both political parties—ardently supported the proposition to give half the money direct to the States. They believe in it, and they want it now; but rather than jeopardize the whole fund, and rather than take the chance of having the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] and the Appropriations Committee come in and take it all away from them, they are standing on the best possible proposition, and that is to do with these receipts what we do with the proceeds of public-land sales, and in this they are doing the sensible thing.

The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is not a member of the committee. He is opposed to the whole legislation. He would like to throw a monkey wrench into the machinery if he knew how, and he thinks this is the best way.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Not now. I am speaking in the best of good humor——

Mr. MONDELL. I simply want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. FERRIS. I want to proceed now with my remarks. I think both sides clearly recognize that all through the debate you have had 40 or 50 minutes over there on each proposition, while we have occupied 1 or 2 minutes ourselves.

Mr. MONDELL. I have a very pertinent question I should like to ask.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not yield now. I have a few remarks of my own that I would like to make. The gentleman has been saying these things so long that he begins to believe some of them himself.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to ask the gentleman if he did not say to me on the floor of this House that such a provision as this was in the bill?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to ask the gentleman if he did not say to me in the presence of the governor of my State that that was a provision of the bill, and that he would stand by it.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, no; the gentleman is mistaken. The gentleman says these things so often that he believes them himself.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman deny the truth of the statement I have just made?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. I am entitled to know whether the gentleman denies the statement I have made.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, to come back for a moment to the question under discussion, I repeat that some of the keen, level-headed men of this House, with much support behind them, believe this money ought to go into the Federal Treasury. That is one side of it. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] amidst the clamor of his own trumpet, comes in here and offers an amendment to embarrass the Members of the House by making it appear that he is the only tribune of the West.

If he is the only tribune of the people in the West, what will become of the West? He has little support behind him for his views. He offers spurious amendments that he knows have no support in the House and are uniformly voted down. I did not mean to speak with such earnestness but this committee has sat here taking this eternal mauling, good humoredly, but, I fear, too long. Members on both sides of the House will think that this side of the House has nothing to say about this eternal protesting and wailing coming up from the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MONDELL) there were 22 ayes and 54 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do it so that there shall be no misunderstanding in regard to the amendment just offered. Last year when this bill was before the committee it was generally conceded, I thought, by almost everyone that the loss of taxes to the States under this legislation would be such that they must have at least half of the proceeds of these leases in order to reimburse them for the loss of revenue through taxation. I thought I had the promise of gentlemen promoting the legislation that such would be the provision with regard to the fund when the bill was reported. I understood later that there was pressure outside of Congress which compelled gentlemen to change their minds.

Earlier in the session the governor of my State, a Democrat and a good man, felt so earnestly about the matter that he desired to talk to the chairman in regard to it. I should not have referred to this matter at all if the gentlemen on the other side had kept good natured and good tempered in this discussion; but they did not see fit to do so. The governor and myself talked with the chairman of the committee over yonder on the Democratic side. The governor and I suggested to him what we thought would be a fair thing, and the gentleman assured us that the provision in the bill as it had just been reported was even better than we proposed.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, let us get that straight.

Mr. MONDELL. I asked the chairman if he would agree that such a provision for dividing the fund would remain in the bill. He would not promise to do that, but kept insisting that it was in the bill, with one little difference. The gentleman said that the provision in the bill was better than ours. The provision that he said was in the bill was that the fund was divided in halves, one to go directly to the State and the other to the reclamation fund, and, when the fund was repaid, then another half of the portion that went into the reclamation fund was to go to the State.

I have had no desire to make any statement of what then transpired; but the gentleman has seen fit to take me to task for defending my Commonwealth and the West generally against this kind of legislation, and I want it thoroughly understood what his attitude has been in the past. There is not a western Member who has ever studied this matter who does not know that this amendment ought to be adopted. I understand that certain gentlemen have been persuaded or coerced into agreeing not to contest the matter, with the promise that elsewhere, at some future time, another body will correct this iniquity.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes, after which all debate is to be closed on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that all debate be closed in three minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. I will make that five minutes, Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from Kentucky wants a little time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BENNET. Reserving the right to object, I want to say to the chairman that there is a formal amendment which ought to be adopted, and I would like to have it made 10 minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. I will say 10 minutes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that at the expiration of 10 minutes all debate on the section and amendments thereto be closed. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I shall not say anything that will bring on a further colloquy as to what may have been said by the gentleman. Undoubtedly the gentleman from Wyoming is mistaken or I am mistaken as to what was said or at least as to what was understood. The gentleman from Wyoming and the governor of his State did have a conversation with me about this matter. As I recollect, this was what was said: That this bill gave nothing at all to the Western States; that they would never receive a cent, and so forth. I said, "How can you say that; it puts every cent into the reclamation fund, and 50 per cent of it goes to the State." The gentleman from Wyoming said, "What we want is 50 per cent to go to the State right now." I said, "Does not it do that?" I did not have in mind then just what the bill provided. He said, "No." He said, "If it does not do that, will you put it in?" I said, "No; I do not want to make any agreement about it." Last year the bill was reported just as it is now. But, Mr. Chairman, what we said in conversation, even if I made a mistake—and, of course, I had no intention of making an erroneous statement—but if I did it has no bearing upon what we should do now. We did not have the bill before us. It was a question as to what the bill did contain. It is possible that we were both for the moment mistaken.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe much in intimation and threats as to what is going to happen legislatively. Certainly there are some of us who are not altogether satisfied with all this money going to the West indirectly, as it does here; but since we are told that in some other legislative body, where western representation happens to bear a larger proportion to the sum total of votes than it does here, that certain things are going to be done, I desire to say that Members representing constituencies with more people in them than there are in some of the Western States propose to see that the Federal Treasury also is protected; and if legislation is going to be on the basis of threats, gentlemen had better understand that some of us who have made concessions because we want to help the West are not prepared to tamely submit to having the interests of the United States run over. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Amen!

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 26, page 7, the last word, and on page 8, in line 1, the first word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the word "or," in line 26, page 7, and the word "both," in the beginning of line 1, page 8.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, just a moment, to call the attention of the chairman of the committee and the House to the fact that preceding the words "or both" are three alternatives——

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is right about that and the committee accepts the amendment. A committee amendment was made adding public roads, and we did not make the corresponding amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I now move to strike out, on page 7, line 22, the word "said" and the remainder of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "said," in line 22, page 7, and the remainder of the section down to and including line 7 on page 8.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, yesterday I took a few minutes to call to the attention of the House what this bill is doing in the way of diminishing the efficiency of the separate States. I am not a thorough believer in the extreme doctrine of State rights, and this side of the House has never advocated it as a party doctrine, but I do believe in the separate State as an efficient instrument of government. Do we no longer trust the State legislatures? Do we no longer trust the people within the States? I have no desire to enter into a controversy as to how much money shall go to the State or how much shall go to the reclamation fund, but so long as this bill gives half of the money to the States, let us permit those States to determine what they shall do with it, and not attempt to tie them down to these three or four separate things.

Mr. MONDELL. They will not get any of it, so the gentleman need not worry.

Mr. BENNET. Why could not a State use its quota for the benefit of agriculture, if it desired to? I am proud of State organizations, I am proud of the State from which I come, and I think every man ought to be proud of the State from which he comes, and ought to be willing to stand up and say that he trusts the legislatures of the States to deal wisely and honestly and justly with the money that they will obtain under this bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENNET. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I will say to the gentleman that this provision was put in at the request solely of Members of the Western States, who were willing to trust their own legislatures.

Mr. BENNET. I think they were wrong. I think that any man who has studied the question of the decadence of State governments as it has continued for some time, the man who has studied how we are taking more and more away from the States and the legislatures of the States, ought to pause when we have an opportunity as we have here to give more power to the State legislatures, for unless we give more power to them it will be more and more difficult to get good men who will take the time to go to the State legislatures.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The gentleman does not mean to strike out the provisio on page 8? He does not include that in his amendment.

Mr. BENNET. I think the gentleman is correct in that, and I ask unanimous consent to modify the amendment to that extent.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We do not want to agree to the amendment as modified, but I do not believe his argument applies to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the last word in line 22 and all of lines 23, 24, 25, 26, on page 7, and line 1, on page 8, down to and including the word "direct."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that debate on that section and all amendments thereto is closed under order of the committee, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That in case of the development, generation, transmission, or use of power or energy under a lease given under this act in a State which has not provided a commission or other authority having power to regulate rates and service of electrical energy and the issuance of stock and bonds, by public utility corporations engaged in power development, transmission, and distribution, the control of service and of charges for service to consumers and stock and bond issues shall be vested in the Secretary of the Interior or committed to such body as may be authorized by Federal statute until such time as the State shall provide a commission or other authority for such regulation and control.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 8, line 10, strike out the word "in" and insert the words "wholly within."

Provided, That the control of the Secretary of the Interior, or other Federal authority, shall cease and determine as to each specific matter of control described in this section so soon as the State shall have provided a commission or other authority for the regulation and control of that specific matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling the attention of the chairman of the committee to a verbal change that, perhaps, ought to be made in the language in the first part of the section. The section reads:

That in case of the development, generation, transmission, or use of power or energy under a lease given under this act wholly within a State—

And so forth.

The words "wholly within a State" refer to the "lease" as thus placed. Evidently they were intended to refer to "power" and "energy." Perhaps the transposition of those words might correct the difficulty, and I suggest this form:

That in case, under a lease given under this act, of the development, transmission, or use of power or energy which are wholly within a State which has not provided—

And so forth.

This language would properly express the meaning intended. If there is no objection on the part of the chairman of the committee, I will move that amendment. If it is not necessary the chairman need not accept it.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say the committee is not infallible as grammarians, and if the gentleman is right—on the spur of the moment I can not tell whether the gentleman's language is any better than ours. However, if the gentleman feels keenly about it——

Mr. TOWNER. No; I do not, but I am merely making the suggestion.

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman think there is anything fatal about the meaning as it stands?

Mr. TOWNER. I suppose not. Certainly, however, I think it would be better to endeavor to clearly express the meaning intended, and the language used in the bill does not do so.

Mr. FERRIS. I am not sure but what the gentleman is right about it.

Mr. TOWNER. I think that should be clear.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman cares to send up an amendment, let him do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to withdraw his pro forma amendment and offer a new amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert, after the word "case," in line 8, the following, "under a lease given under this act," and close the phrase with a comma. Also strike out, in lines 9 and 10, the words "under a lease given under this act" and insert in lieu thereof the words "which are."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, may we have that amendment reported?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, in line 8, by inserting, after the word "case," the words "under a lease given under this act," and strike out the words in lines 9 and 10, "under a lease given under this act," and insert in lieu thereof the words "which are."

Mr. TOWNER. So that it will read, Mr. Chairman:

That in case, under a lease given under this act, of the development, generation, transmission, or use of power or energy which are wholly within a State—

And so forth.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid the language is not as symmetrical as the language we have. For instance, "that in case under a lease" is not very smooth, is it?

Mr. TOWNER. I am just trying to readjust the language of the bill with as little change as possible. It would be better if it were entirely rewritten; and if the chairman prefers, I will withdraw the amendment and he can reconsider it, and we can then go back to it.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will.

Mr. TOWNER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment and to let this paragraph go over and to be amended later. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KAHN rose.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to close debate on this section and all amendments at the end of six minutes, five of it to go to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to have five.

Mr. FERRIS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will say 11 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that at the expiration of 11 minutes all discussion on the amendments offered to this section be closed. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I am afraid all this dispute as to what shall be done with the revenue derived through this proposed legislation is a waste of words as well as of time. To my mind, this bill will not produce any revenue. It will restrict development of the water-power possibilities of the great West. Take my own State of California as an illustration, and I am sure the conditions that prevail in the other States are identical with those that prevail in California.

I believe there are 15 private companies or corporations there that have invested their funds in water-power plants. In addition to these, several municipal corporations have likewise developed water power for the use of their respecitve municipalities. The total horsepower that has been developed is approximately 600,000. According to various estimates that have been made, it will be possible to develop a minimum of about 3,000,000 horsepower or a maximum of in the neighborhood of 7,000,000 horsepower.

The 15 organizations now selling horsepower are independent corporations. So far as I know there is no combination among them, but each owns its own power sites without any strings attached. The sites are owned in fee simple, and, outside of the payment of taxes, the companies do not have to pay anything into the Treasury of the United States or any other governmental authority for the use of the water or the land on which, or by means of which, the power is developed. These corporations, having received their grants prior to all this conservation outcry, naturally selected the cream of all the sites. Those least expensive to develop, those nearest to the great centers of population were naturally selected.

I doubt whether any site that could now be selected in California would be as good a piece of property as those already fully developed. Does anyone believe for a moment that capital will be willing to invest in new power companies under such conditions, with all the additional burdens this legislation imposes? It is idle to think of it. The old companies, in order to prevent competition, could underbid the new companies that might be organized under the conditions imposed by this bill to just the extent that the latter would have to pay into the Federal Treasury. By so doing they could, and they would, drive every new concern into bankruptcy. Capital will not take such desperate chances. It is too timid. It will decline to invest in such precarious enterprises. I contend, therefore, that this bill, if enacted into law, will arrest the development of the West. It will give a practical monopoly to every company already in existence. It will prove a dead letter, even as the law of 1902 proved a dead letter, and it ought to be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that in my feeble efforts to protect the people of the Western country from legislation like this, I irritate the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], but I must do my duty, even though I may make him feel uncomfortable.

The gentleman suggested that our hammering of this bill had been largely ineffective. Far from it; far from it. It has brought about an understanding, an underground, subterranean understanding on the other side, that they will agree to certain amendments which they are sure will be placed in the bill elsewhere. I want to say to my friend from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] that he misunderstood me if he understood me to have suggested that these changes would be made elsewhere. That is the suggestion from the other side, not mine.

In my discussion of the bill the other day, during general debate and in my discussion last year, I referred to two features of the bill that were peculiarly iniquitous, one under which by passing a transmission line over a State border all control over the operations of a power company, all control over its rates and charges by the State where the power was generated, would cease and be transferred from the State to the Secretary of the Interior. The chairman and the committee insisted that the bill was just as it should be, and yet yesterday we adopted a most important amendment which largely remedied that situation. I called attention also in the general discussion of the bill last year and this year to the fact that even admitting that it is right or just for the Federal Government to lease its land and charge rental for power development, even admitting that to be true, there certainly could be no justification or defense of legislation under which a great power plant, all on private land, would, if compelled to use even a small fraction of public land of little value, be laid under a heavy Federal charge having no relation to the value of the public land used, thus placing a burden which must be paid by consumers and depriving the State of a portion of its power of taxation.

Although a power plant might use but an acre of public land, and use that only for the passing of a transmission line, burdens of taxation on the basis of horsepower developed might be laid that would amount in the aggregate to tens of thousands of dollars annually. That is certainly unjust and inequitable. Last year the committee paid no attention to our protest on that point, and they are not at first apparently disposed to do so this year. But in the section we have just passed we find an amendment brought in by the committee which largely remedies the evil in that respect of which we have complained, an amendment which is intended, at least, to limit the authority of the Secretary of the Interior to a charge per horsepower of development to those cases where the development is on public land. Even in that case the charge should not be per horsepower development. It should be a fair charge on the value of the land.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. There are two minutes of the time remaining.

Mr. LENROOT. Just a word in reply to the gentleman from Wyoming. I merely want to say to him that this amendment that he has been speaking on, instead of being brought in yesterday and first considered yesterday——

Mr. MONDELL. I did not say that.

Mr. LENROOT. I thought you did.

Mr. MONDELL. No; I said it was in the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to say that that amendment was adopted by the committee at the very first session it had in the consideration of this bill and before the gentleman himself made his very eloquent and lengthy speech before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] withdraw his pro forma amendment? If so, the Clerk will read.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that under an order the debate is closed on all amendments to this section. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That any such lease may be forfeited and canceled, by appropriate proceedings, in a court of competent jurisdiction whenever the lessee, after reasonable notice, in writing, as prescribed in the lease, shall fail to comply with the terms of this act or with such conditions not inconsistent herewith as may be specifically recited in the lease.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

In lines 12 and 13, strike out the words "in a court of competent jurisdiction" and insert "in the United States court for the district in which said property or some part thereof is situated."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify the committee amendment by inserting the word "district" before the word "court," in line 13, so that it will read "United States district court."

Mr. FERRIS. I think that ought to be done, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the United States district court for the district in which said property or some part thereof is situated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the adoption of the committee amendment as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee if there ought not to be inserted, after the word "regulations," in line 21, the words "not inconsistent with this act." Those words are usual in sections of this character.

Mr. FERRIS. I have no objection.

Mr. BENNET. I move, then, after the word "regulations," in line 21, that the words "not inconsistent with this act" be inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 21, by inserting, after the word "regulations," the words "not inconsistent with this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 13, after the word "Interior," line 19, insert the words "subject to the approval of the President of the United States."

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I am not generally in favor of placing arbitrary power in the hands of an officer who is appointed. I feel that the Secretary of the Interior might be a person who was interested in some of these schemes, and he might be working in their interests; that he might make rules against the interests of the people or the smaller holders of rights within these territories, and if an appeal could be made to the President, who is elected by the people, some rights might be given to those who are interested in receiving those rights. In other words, a Secretary of the Interior might be appointed with that end in view, for instance, and the President, while he might exert indirect power over him, might not desire to assert that power if he was not compelled to do so. But if an appeal could be taken from the Secretary of the Interior to the President of the United States he would be compelled to act, and when the President is compelled to act upon questions of public policy as a general rule he acts on the side of right. We Republican Members well know that the Secretary of the Interior in the last Republican administration was the rock on which our party practically split in the incipiency of its splitting, and it resulted in finally turning the power over to the Democrats. And I am in favor of placing this power in the hands of one who can be reached by the people, and in not placing it in the hands of one who can not be reached directly by the people themselves.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that, at the expiration of two minutes, debate close on this section and on all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CRISP). The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that, at the expiration of two minutes, debate on this section and all amendments thereto be closed. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, to the amendment offered by the gentleman I have no serious and far-reaching objection, so far as I know, other than this one: That is, everyone must know that a great mass of details comes out in the administration of an estate of this sort. In other words, the electric stations in the United States are 7,000 in number. Everybody knows that the President can not give all these details his close personal attention.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I have only two minutes. That being true, the Secretary of the Interior, a creature of the President, if he does not do his duty, can be appealed from. You can always appeal to the President, who gets his power direct from the people, and the President in turn can very readily supplant any erroneous judgment that the Secretary may have made or arrived at; and the only effect the gentleman's amendment would have would be delay and duplication of action, first, by appealing to the Interior Department and then going over the head of the Secretary of the Interior by an appeal to the President. It would be a duplication of work that looks good on its face, but would not work in practice.

Mr. EMERSON. I want to ask the gentleman a question. How could you get an appeal without this provision?

The CHAIRMAN. All time is expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. EMERSON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 42.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That nothing in this act shall be construed as affecting or intended to affect or to in any way interfere with the laws of any State relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water.

With committee amendments, as follows:

Strike out the first word in section 14 and insert:

"That each lease under this act act shall be conditioned upon the acceptance by the lessee of all the terms and conditions of this act and of conditions authorized by law and specified in the lease, which acceptance shall be expressed in the lease as a part of the contract entered into and that."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, there is one more committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 6, after the word "State," insert the words "including Alaska."

Mr. MANN. Would not that read a little bit better by saying "or Alaska" instead of saying "any State, including Alaska."

Mr. FERRIS. Yes; I guess it might.

Mr. MANN. I suppose it was intended to leave out Hawaii. I suggest that you make the change by striking out "including" and substituting "or."

Mr. FERRIS. I accept that suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the language as it will be when modified. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] will restate his suggestion.

Mr. FERRIS. On page 11, line 6, the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] was—and the committee gladly adopted it—to strike out the word "including" and insert the word "or."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 6, strike out the word "including," in the committee amendment, and insert the word "or."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the committee amendment will be modified as indicated.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as modified.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to stroke out the last word.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the latter part of this section provides that "Nothing in this act shall be construed as affecting or intended to affect or to in any way interfere with the laws of any State relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water." It is doubtful if any legislation which Congress might enact could, as a matter of fact, directly interfere with the laws of any State relating to the control, appropriation, use, or distribution of water, but in the administration of this bill the control of the State over the distribution of water will be seriously interfered with, assuming, of course, that the features of administration that will so interfere can be carried on without interference from the courts.

That is one of the very objectionable features of the bill. While the bill contains this self-denying ordinance on the part of the Federal Government, the provisions in the bill are, in fact, intended to do the very thing which the Congress in this section declares it has not the power to do.

In the Western States, the States to which the law applies, the law of appropriation is the rule. The people in their collective capacity own the water. No one can use any water except as the right to use it is secured from the proper officer of the State, and it must be used at all times under the complete control of the State.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The gentleman from Wyoming is familiar, of course, with the fact that this is the language that was used in the original reclamation act of June 17, 1902, and we put it in the Hetch Hetchy California bill, and I think I may claim the authorship of it in that bill and in this and other bills, to prevent any question arising as to whether or not Congress intended to in any way interfere with our water rights or doctrine of priority; and I am confident the sentiment of the West is very much in favor of retaining this language. Whether or not it may be necessary, it will do no harm, and I must insist upon that provision remaining in the bill.

It has been approved a number of times by Congress. I put it in this bill when we reported it last year, and the House approved of it at the time we passed the bill last year. Does not the gentleman from Wyoming think it ought to stay in the bill now?

Mr. MONDELL. I am very glad it is in the bill. I am simply calling attention to the fact that there is a conflict between this declaration and the provisions of the bill. The gentleman from Colorado realizes that.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; I realize there might be, but at the same time——

Mr. MONDELL. Now, in the excess of caution, in the hope that by use of this language an administrative officer might not go as far as he would go otherwise, the gentleman from Colorado asks to have this provision placed in the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes, by all means; we do not want our decrees as to the distribution of water in the Western States disturbed or any possibility of any interference with our priority or any other water rights if we can prevent it, and I am in hopes this clause will prevent it.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; but nevertheless and notwithstanding all that, the Federal Government under this bill proposes to lease a power site to a man who may have no right to appropriate the water. The Secretary may refuse to lease a power site to the only man who has a right to use the water. At the end of 50 years it is proposed that the Government shall take over and recapture a water right that belongs to the people of the State, whereupon either the Federal Government may utilize it or it may be turned over by the Secretary of the Interior to some one who has no right to use the waters of the State and who has had no interest in the enterprise up to that time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The great trouble with this bill is that the House will not permit the gentleman and me to write this legislation. We could suggest a great many beneficial changes.

Mr. MONDELL. That is the difficulty.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the pro forma amendment. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. That all acts or parts of acts providing for the use of the lands of the United States for any of the purposes to which this act is applicable are hereby repealed to the extent only of any conflict with this act: Provided, however, That the provisions of the act of February 15, 1901 (31 Stat. L., p. 790), shall continue in full force and effect as lands within the Yosemite, Sequoia, and General Grant National Parks in the State of California: And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not be construed as revoking or affecting any permits or valid existing rights of way heretofore given or granted pursuant to law, but at the option of the permittee any permit heretofore given for the development, generation, transmission, or utilization of hydroelectric power may be surrendered and the permittee given a lease for the same premises under the provisions of this act.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 11, after the word "California," in line 16, insert the following: "And provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be held or construed to modify or repeal any of the provisions of the act of Congress approved December 19, 1913, granting certain rights of way to the city and county of San Francisco."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

Page 12, after the word "further," in line 5, insert the following: "And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be held or construed as preventing the granting of rights of way for irrigation purposes under existing and applicable laws, and the granting in connection therewith of a lease under this act for such power or energy as may be developed, generated, and transmitted as incident or subsidiary to the main purpose of irrigation."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss this committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. When I appeared before the committee a few days ago the question which is affected by this amendment was under discussion, and attention was called to the fact that under the amendment to the right-of-way act of 1891 power plants built in connection with irrigation projects were entitled to the same grant of right of way as projects for irrigation only. Some members of the committee suggested a doubt as to whether the bill as then written fully protected such power-plant development as a part of irrigation development. That being true, I am somewhat surprised at this amendment.

The bill as it stood before would, I think, still leave the amendment to the act of 1891 in force, so that power development subsidiary to the main purpose of irrigation would not come under the provisions of the bill. But this amendment clearly brings such subsidiary development under the provisions of the bill. I wonder if the gentlemen have considered the effect that the provision would have, not only on powers subsidiary to general schemes of irrigation but on the development of power under reclamation projects? It seems to me the amendment is a very dangerous one. While the bill without the amendment was not clear, because there was no specific provision, I think the fact was that, without amendment and in the absence of any specific provision, those power developments subsidiary to irrigation would come under the right-of-way act of 1891. But clearly through this amendment they are brought under this bill. That would raise a very peculiar condition of affairs, I will suggest to my friends on the other side, with regard to some of the power plants, and particularly with regard to power plants on national reclamation projects. There are some large ones now, and there will be some larger ones in the future.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that his time be extended for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentlemen will recall that these plants belong to the settlers. They are the property of the settlers on the project, or will be when the project is finally turned over. Now, query: Did the committee intend, or is it wise, to bring such projects under this bill? I doubt it.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, when the committee had this particular matter under consideration I called their attention to the fact that it repealed that part of the act of 1891 referred to by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. I then took it up with the department, under the direction of the committee, and the department, through their legal advisers, stated that the bill did repeal, that it intended to repeal, and that it was the purpose of the act to repeal the provisions of the act of 1891 permitting the development of hydroelectric power incident to irrigation because of the many complicated cases and the trouble had in the department from a man applying for an irrigation project and at the same time intending it for hydroelectric development.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. In just a minute. Now, this intends to permit a man to develop to the very utmost every irrigation project, and in developing the irrigation project he is not to be interfered with if hydroelectric energy is developed; but he then applies to the Secretary of the Interior and pays a royalty for the use of the land, just as the other man does if the main purpose is the development of hydroelectric power, so that there can not be any question in the mind of the department and so that a man can not get a large lease of land for irrigation purposes and his rights of way, which he gets free, and then turn them into a hydroelectric plant.

Mr. MONDELL. Then I understand it is the intention of the committee to take away the right granted by the amendment to the act of 1891 and to bring these subsidiary enterprises under this act.

Mr. RAKER. No; it was not the intention of the committee; but as the bill originally passed under the scrutiny of the gentleman's watchful eye last year, it was the intention of the department to take it away, and under the language of the bill it did take away that provision.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me, certainly this takes it away.

Mr. RAKER. The general bill takes it away. This reserves the right of the man to proceed with his irrigation project.

Mr. MONDELL. Not at all—if the gentleman will read the provision carefully—but quite the contrary.

Mr. RAKER. Then I will proceed. Formerly, if a man built a dam or a reservoir for the purpose of hydroelectric energy, he was not given the right to use the water for the purposes of irrigation. Now this is made clear and distinct, that he may fully develop the irrigation project without any cost; but if in developing his irrigation project he develops hydroelectric energy he obtains a lease and pays a royalty for the hydroelectric energy developed, just like the man who first makes application for the hydroelectric plant or for any part thereof. This is in the interest of the irrigationist, and is concurred in by the department after consideration and investigating the matter fully. The department will not have the trouble and conflict; it will not be compelled to hold up developments as they have been held up under the act of 1891.

The act of May 11, 1898, will be and is permitted to remain in full force and effect, with the exception when developed for power. Then for the part used for such purposes there will have to be a royalty paid, after application and full adjustment; but no development will be hindered or delayed, and no permits will be refused for irrigation; for if, perchance, there is power later developed, that can and will be readily cared for by the original irrigation applicant and the Government.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may discuss this for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to speak for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that debate close at the end of five minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I want five minutes after the gentleman from Wyoming gets through.

Mr. FERRIS. Then at the close of 10 minutes—5 to be used by the gentleman from Wyoming and 5 by the gentleman from California—I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the section be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, my only purpose in further discussing the amendment is that there shall be no misunderstanding as to its intent and what it accomplishes. Let us consider what the present situation is. At the present time those desiring to secure a right of way for irrigation may secure it under the right-of-way act of 1891. If under the development of such an irrigation enterprise it becomes possible and desirable to develop power, then by an amendment to that act the same grant of permanent easement is made for the development of power subsidiary to the main purpose of irrigation. We have believed that that was a wise law. It enabled irrigation enterprises to develop power which is often used for pumping water to land that can not be reached by gravity. It is sometimes used for power or for heat and light by the farmers on the irrigation project. The Federal Government, under the irrigation laws, is carrying out some very large projects, on which has been and will be developed a large amount of power, the largest plant in existence being the one at the Roosevelt Dam, which produces a large amount of horsepower. Under existing law the settlers, who will eventually own that great power plant as a part of the project, will not be compelled to pay to the Federal Government any lease or annual charge or tax for the water power developed, but under the amendment proposed to be adopted they will be called upon to pay to the Secretary of the Interior annually such amount as he may lay on their project per horsepower.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield? The Government is not going to make a lease with itself of this power.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman assumes that the plant at the Roosevelt Dam will remain the property of the Federal Government.

Mr. HAYDEN. The reclamation act provides that the title shall remain in the Government until otherwise provided by Congress.

Mr. MONDELL. The title to the dam; but if the gentleman will read the reclamation law he will find that while the title to the dam remains in the Federal Government the ownership of the property is in the settlers, and whenever the project is turned over to the settlers it should go to them, power plant and all. They are charged with building the power plant, they pay for it, and it should become theirs.

Mr. HAYDEN. The title does not pass.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is trying to escape the consequences of the amendment by assuming that it is a Government power plant and the Government is not going to charge itself. Well, that is begging the question.

Mr. HAYDEN. It may be begging the question, but it is a matter of fact.

Mr. MONDELL. There should be no such provision as this in the bill or in any bill. I can think of no reason why power developed subsidiary to the main purpose of irrigation should be taxed by Uncle Sam, even if other power plants on public land are so taxed. If, in addition to the other burdens placed upon the people, the gentlemen want these burdens placed on the farmers, that is their affair. If that is the kind of thing they want, they should have it; but I can not indorse it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 11, line 11, after the colon, insert as follows: "Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to affect any prosecution, suit, action, or proceedings brought, or any act, thing, or matter, civil or criminal, done or existing at the time of the taking effect of this act; but as to all such prosecutions, suits, actions, proceedings, acts, things, or matters the laws or parts of laws repealed or amended by this act are hereby continued in force and effect."

Mr. BENNET. Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee and the committee to the fact that this is the usual saving clause that is almost invariably adopted whenever a statute is repealed, so that if there is a prosecution or action or a penalty it will not fail with the repeal of the act.

The language as reported by the Clerk is the saving clause contained in the immigration law, framed with some care by the committee, and I assume that the committee will not object to the amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to close debate on this section and all amendments thereto in two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the gentleman seeks to do there. This is not the repeal of any criminal or penal section. To offer an amendment of that length that has not been submitted to the committee or referred to the department nor digested by anyone except the gentleman who offers it, I do not think we can accept it, and I hope the gentleman will not insist upon its adoption.

Mr. BENNET. Did I not show the gentleman that amendment in the lobby before to-day's session, and did he not say he thought there would be no objection to it?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think so—this amendment.

Mr. BENNET. Yes; that is the one.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman says he did, he did. He showed me some amendments there. I do not remember that particular one. I certainly intended to tell him I could not accept those amendments as I did not know what they were.

Mr. BENNET. This particular one I explained to the gentleman. I explained to him the danger of repealing the law without a saving clause, and he was inclined to agree with me.

Mr. FERRIS. I think the gentleman must be in error. Of course, I have a number of things on my mind and can not remember everything. I may have said at the glance I could see nothing wrong, but I did not intend to commit myself to it, surely.

Mr. BENNET. I do not accuse the gentleman of bad faith.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman says he showed it to me, he did, but I really hope the committee will not adopt any such far-reaching amendment as that at this time. It is not safe to accept a long amendment like that on the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BENNET) there were—ayes 13, noes 54.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 16. That this act shall not apply to navigation dams or structures under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War or Chief of Engineers, or to lands purchased or acquired by condemnation by the United States, or withdrawn by the President under the act approved June 25, 1910, entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to make withdrawals of public lands in certain cases," where such lands are purchased, acquired by condemnation, or withdrawn by the President for the sole purpose of promoting navigation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has been called to the telephone. He would like to have five minutes in which to explain a motion to recommit. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma have any objection to that when we get back into the House?

Mr. FERRIS. Not at all. I have a couple of requests for unanimous consent that I desire to make, with respect to returning to former sections of the bill to offer amendments.

Mr. MANN. Very well.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, leaving section 15 open for the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] to take up when he comes back, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 1 of the bill, page 1, in order that the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MAYS] may offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to return to section 1 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 1, page 2, line 17, after the word "acquired" by inserting the following:

"Provided further, That the right to use rights of way through the public lands of the United States, including the national forests, for lines for the transmission of hydroelectric power or energy shall be upon the express condition that such lines shall be constructed, operated, and maintained as common carriers, and no right to use public lands, including the national forests, for the transmission of hydroelectric power or energy shall hereafter be given, except under and subject to the provisions, limitations, and conditions of this proviso."

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Chairman, this is practically a committee amendment. The only reason that it was not inserted in the bill before it was reported was that we were not quite ready on the question of the language of the amendment. It was to be submitted to the Interior Department, with the request that the proper language be given. The idea was introduced, however, in the committee and appeared to be satisfactory. It is a common thing to make pipe lines and railways and canals that ask for a grant of a right of way across public lands common carriers. It is just as practicable that a transmission line should be operated as a common carrier as it is that a pipe line should be so operated and maintained.

We have pipe lines now running from Oklahoma to New Jersey, crossing in some places, perhaps, the public lands. We have a bill here which has been favorably reported by a committee which provides that any such pipe line receiving a grant of a right of way across public lands or forest reservations shall be operated as a common carrier. Pipe lines are granted a certain right of way less than is required as a rule for a transmission lien. It is necessary for a transmission line to have at least 100 feet through the public forest in order that trees may not fall and crush transmission wires, and therefore they should also come in here as common carriers in order that we should not have multiplicity of rights of way across public forests. The matter was submitted to the Department of Commerce, and an expert electrician was sent over to my office. He discussed the matter at some length. He said it was entirely feasible to meter on the energy and meter it off where it was necessary to be diverted as much so as it was for a pipe line to take oil from a consumer and measure that oil at the point of diversion.

The courts have held that oil-pipe lines, in a case reported in the United States Reports 234, page 548, are in fact common carriers. It has been held, of course, that canal systems asking grants of rights of way with power of eminent domain should be common carriers. This amendment, I believe, would be the best thing about the bill. It would, as gentlemen have said, go further toward the prevention of monopoly in the manufacture and use of energy in the country than any other one thing. In the State of Utah, for instance—which has been held up here as a benighted and oppressed community—one power company has control of 70 per cent of all the power developed in that State. In one instance they charge in one town in my district at the rate of $135 per horsepower year and to other people within the same district they charge as low as $28 per horsepower year.

There ought to be, of course, some way of preventing such extortion and such injustice; and if a power company, not being able to build a transmission line across a long distance and through a public forest, could develop a small amount of energy, say, from 100 or 500 to 1,000 horsepower, and compel that transmission company taking this grant to carry that energy and charge for carrying it at a proper rate under regulations of public utility commissions or of interstate commerce, that should be, I think, inserted in this law and should be made a condition precedent to the granting of rights of way.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MAYS] presents a new proposition entirely on this bill. I have no doubt he presents it in absolute good faith, though I apprehend that the gentlemen here who have been opposing the principles of this bill and trying to do everything they can to bring about that effect would secure their desire if this amendment were agreed to. There is no control of the Interstate Commerce Commission over these transmission lines if this amendment goes in, so far as that is concerned, but the purpose of this bill is to develop the water power in the country, especially in the West, under suitable and proper saving to the Government of its rights. If you put such onerous provisions in here which will keep capital from making the investment, the bill might as well be thrown in the wastebasket instead of going through its wearisome stages of legislation. We have put enough provisions in the bill to safeguard the rights of the public, to safeguard the rights of the consumer, to see that the consumers are not imposed upon by exaggerated and burdensome prices. Now, it is proposed to put in the bill a denial of the rights of a company or a man who constructs a water power and strings a transmission line to have control of it. You can not get money invested in that way. If the bill simply gave to some one the right to construct hydroelectric power plants upon the Government domain with no regulations, the amendment would be a very proper one, but it is already regulated by the terms of the bill.

What company or people with money would propose to invest millions of dollars, as will be required in great development of water power, and then when they construct a transmission line find it is used at the other end by their competitors against them?

Mr. MAYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. By people whose services are not controlled, by people whose rates are not fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, as provided by this bill. Certainly I will yield.

Mr. MAYS. Would not the same argument apply to the construction and maintenance of pipe lines——

Mr. MANN. It will not at all.

Mr. MAYS. Owned by an oil company?

Mr. MANN. They are entirely different propositions. The pipe lines are not constructed by men who bring the oil from below the surface of the ground, in the main. It is an entirely different proposition. If there were transmission lines constructed for the purpose of gathering up electrical energy which was developed along the line, then it ought to be made a common carrier, but a transmission line is a part of the plant in the development of hydroelectric power where you construct a plant at a particular place. You might as well say that the plant itself shall be a common carrier; that anybody who chooses can take something there and have it made into electric energy. If it were a plant operated by coal—these are not, of course—you might as well say anybody who carried a bushel of coal to them will have the right to have that turned into electric power on the ground that the plant was a common carrier. You put this amendment into the bill and you might as well throw the bill away.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, this amendment was presented to the committee, and at that time I was inclined to oppose it upon the ground that it would require the lessee of the Government to furnish the capital, or a portion of it, for the transmission line of a private company. The gentleman from Utah [Mr. MAYS] in urging the amendment stated that practically speaking there was no limit to the capacity of a transmission line, and therefore it would not involve any additional capital upon the part of the lessee, and the gentleman said he would consult with electrical experts upon that question. The matter was left with the understanding, I think, that the gentleman might offer the amendment upon the floor. He brought the amendment to me this morning and stated that he had gotten that advice, and I told him I did not believe I would oppose the amendment. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has just raised a most serious question in reference to this matter, and that is that a private corporation having its plant upon private land, unregulated by any anybody, can have the privilege of using the property of this lessee that is regulated by the Government. Now, it does not seem to me that that is a fair proposition. For the present, at least, I think that the amendment should not be adopted until that question is settled or more fully considered.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to section 9, in order that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] may make a suggestion in regard to some language.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to return to section 9. Is there objection? [After a pause.] None is heard. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 9 by striking out the word "that" in line 8, on page 8, and insert in lieu thereof the words "under a lease given by this act," and strike out of lines 9 and 10, on page 8, the following: "under a lease given under this act."

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, that is a mere verbal correction to which I called the attention of the committee a little while ago. It has been changed now so that I believe that language is satisfactory to the chairman and to the committee. It will read as follows:

Under a lease given in this act in case of the development, generation, transmission, or use of power or energy wholly within a State—

And so forth. That is merely a verbal correction in order to make "wholly within a State" apply.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have the Clerk report the language as it will read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as it will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendment, as follows:

SEC. 9. Under the lease given in this act in case of the development, generation, transmission, or use of power or energy under a lease——

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. While the Clerk is getting it straight I would like to suggest to my friend from Iowa that personally I do not like the word "that" at the beginning of a section, but as the word "that" begins every other section, I think I would insert it here.

Mr. TOWNER. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. Inasmuch as there is some disagreement about the grammatical phase of it, would the gentleman object to letting it stay like this? He does not intend to change the meaning?

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly not. I am not contentious about it at all. It makes no difference to me, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. FERRIS. Of course the gentleman was trying to help us, and perhaps he is right about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] withdraws his amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. If I may have the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], we are all through with the bill and ready to move to rise, but I would like to ask the gentleman what his request was as to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Wyoming have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] have five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I propose at the proper time to make a motion to recommit, and I wanted to just briefly explain the character of the legislation which I would substitute for this legislation. I shall not take the time of the House to have the bill read. I will explain very briefly what its provisions are. Instead of the provisions of this bill, in which we are to lease the public land, tax the enterprise per horsepower developed, and attempt to control the operatives through the agency of the Federal Government, I would grant them right of way practically in conformity with the provisions of the right-of-way act of 1891, a right-of-way act under which all rights of way for the use of water, except for power developments, are cared for and provided for. The bill is carefully guarded, in my opinion, and perhaps the most important section of it is the one which I shall read.

SEC. 6. That such rights of way and uses are granted upon the condition and subject to the reservation that at all times during the use and enjoyment thereof, and of the water so appropriated and used in connection therewith, the service and charges therefor, including all electric power generated or used in connection therewith, shall be subject to the regulation and control of the State within which the same is situated and used and subject to the fixing of the rates and charges for the use thereof by such State or under its authority.

My opinion is that the paramount interest which the people have in water-power development is that of securing the very largest development at the very lowest possible rate. This being accomplished, it is not a matter of particular interest to the people who own or operate the water powers so long as they are developed as there is demand for the power and so long as they are absolutely under the control of the people; so there is the widest use at the least cost the interests of the people are served. That being my view of the matter, I do not believe that you can aid the people, increase development, or cheapen the product by laying Federal taxes on the enterprise. Further, my opinion is that the bill before us will have the effect of bringing about vexatious, harmful, and unnecessary conflicts between State and Federal authority; that out of these conflicts will come not perfect control, but lack of perfect or satisfactory control. And as the result of the charges laid upon these enterprises by the Federal Government our people will have to pay more for their power than they would otherwise. The divided control will not prove to be effective control. I believe in complete control of these enterprises by the people in the States where the power is generated. I would go to the very length in passing title or in granting rights or easements over public land to make it clear beyond question that the public shall control all operations, all rates and charges. I believe we can best secure this control and serve the public in this matter by such legislation as I have in mind, and I shall propose it at the proper time on the motion to recommit.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to close debate on the last section, section 16, at the end of five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, the State which I have the honor to represent in part is credited by the Department of the Interior with having 10,376,000 horsepower available for power purposes in its streams and waterfalls. That is almost one-fourth of what is credited to the entire United States. They credit the United States with something like 44,000,000. It is my opinion that as to the State of Washington they are at least 50 per cent under its potential possibilities. Naturally my State is greatly interested in water-power legislation.

There are many features of this bill that I do not like. I am very doubtful of development under this bill, but knowing our immense possibilities and being anxious for something to be done and fully realizing that under the present state of public feeling about our natural resources and utilities we have got to have some trial legislation, I shall support this bill, and I sincerely hope that it will work out to the best interests of the West. [Applause.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill, with amendments, to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HARRISON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes, had directed him to report it back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a motion to recommit with instructions to report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming will send up his motion, and the Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MONDELL moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Public Lands, with instructions to report the following bill as a substitute.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma moves the previous question on the motion to recommit.

Mr. MANN. He can not move it, Mr. Speaker, until the amendment is fully reported.

Mr. FERRIS. No. I thought the Clerk had finished.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MONDELL moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Public Lands, with instructions to report the following bill as a substitute:

"A bill granting locations and rights of way for purposes of irrigation and other beneficial use of water through the public lands and reservations of the United States.

"Be it enacted, etc."——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as having been read. It will be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read, to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, Mr. Speaker, I think that is the most vicious practice that can develop—that of not reading a motion to recommit.

Mr. MANN. That is true as a general practice, but in this case the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has fully explained the contents of his bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] objects, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the right of way through the public lands, national forests, and reservations of the United States is hereby granted to any individual, or association or corporation formed for such purpose, who shall file with the Secretary of the Interior satisfactory proof of right, under the laws of the State or Territory within which the right of way sought is situated, to divert and use the water of said State or Territory from the source and for the purposes proposed, for the purpose of irrigation or any other beneficial use of water, including the development of power, for the construction, maintenance, and use of water conduits, canals, ditches, aqueducts, dams, reservoirs, transmission and telephone lines, houses, buildings, and all appurtenant structures necessary to the appropriation or beneficial use of such water or the products thereof to the extent of the ground occupied thereby and 50 feet on each side of the marginal limits thereof. Also the right to take or remove from such rights of way and lands adjacent thereto material, earth, stone, and timber necessary for the construction and maintenance of such water conduits, canals, ditches, and other structures or works authorized under this act: Provided, That no such right of way shall be so located as to interfere with the proper occupation by the Government of any such reservation, and all maps of locations shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and the privilege herein granted shall not be construed to interfere with the control of water for irrigation and other purposes under the authority of the respective States or Territories.

SEC. 2. That any such individual, association, or corporation entitled to the benefits of this act shall, within 12 months after the location of its water conduits, canals, ditches, or any part thereof, or of other structures and works herein authorized, if the same be upon surveyed lands, and if upon unsurveyed lands within 12 months after the approval of the survey thereof by the United States, file with the register of the land office for the district within which such land is located a map of its canals, ditches, water conduits, and other structures and works herein authorized, and showing adjacent lands to be used or occupied under the provisions of this act, and upon approval thereof by the Secretary of the Interior the same shall be noted upon the plats in said office, and all such land over which such rights of way shall pass shall be disposed of subject to such right of way. Whenever any person or corporation, in the construction of any water conduit, canal, ditch, or other structure or works herein authorized, injures or damages the possession of any settler or allottee, the party committing such injury shall be liable to the party injured for such injury or damage.

SEC. 3. That the provisions of this act shall apply to all water conduits, canals, ditches, or other structures or works herein authorized heretofore or hereafter constructed, whether constructed by corporations, individuals, or associations of individuals, upon the filing of the proof certificates and maps herein provided for. Plats heretofore filed shall have the benefit of this act from the date of their filings as though filed under it: Provided, That if any section of water conduit, canal, or ditch shall not be completed, or lands to be used and occupied under this act are not so used and occupied, within five years after the approval of said map, the rights herein granted shall be forfeited as to any uncompleted section of said water conduit, canal, ditch, or reservoir, or as to any unused or unoccupied portion of such adjacent lands, to the extent that the same is not completed at the date of the forfeiture: Provided, That the time for the completion of any such works or structures and the use of such lands may be extended for the additional period of not exceeding five years, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. And such forfeiture, in the event of such extension, shall not take effect until expiration of the time so extended. The rights herein granted shall be forfeited and shall ipso facto terminate and end on violation of any of the provisions hereof by any person or association or corporation receiving the benefits hereof or failure to comply with the provisions of this act, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to declare such forfeiture and to enforce the same.

SEC. 4. That nothing in this act shall authorize the occupancy of such right of way except for the purposes of said water conduit, canal, or ditch, or other structures and occupancies permitted hereunder, and then only so far as may be necessary for the construction, maintenance, and care thereof and the appropriation, reservoiring, and beneficial use of such waters or electric power generated thereby.

SEC. 5. That such right of way, occupation, and use as is in this act authorized is granted upon the condition that the grantee, its successors or assigns, shall pay to the United States Government the market value of all timber or wood cut or removed from any such right of way or reservoir site or adjacent lands at the time of cutting and before the removal thereof, and as fixed by the Secretary of the Interior; and also for all lands included within such areas or rights of way or reservoir sites not less than $1.25 per acre nor more than $20 per acre, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and paid at the time the map or maps provided in section 2 hereof are filed: Provided, That for rights of way exclusively for purposes of irrigation there shall be no charge imposed for material, earth, stone, or timber, or lands used.

SEC. 6. That such rights of way and uses are granted upon the condition and subject to the reservation that at all times during the use and enjoyment thereof, and of the water so appropriated and used in connection therewith, the service and charges therefor, including all electric power generated or used in connection therewith, shall be subject to the regulation and control of the State within which the same is situated and used and subject to the fixing of the rates and charges for the use thereof by such State or under its authority.

SEC. 7. That the right of way and appurtenances hereby granted shall continue so long, and so long only, as the grantee, its successors or assigns, is and remains entitled to the appropriation and beneficial use of the water so appropriated or reservoired or used, and whenever such right to the use of such water shall cease the right of way so granted shall immediately revert to and vest in the United States, subject, however, to the prior right of the person or corporation in whom the right to such water shall have vested, and who shall be entitled to the use and enjoyment thereof, to apply for and acquire the rights of way and appurtenances so granted, needed, and used in connection with the appropriation and use of such water: Provided also, That if such water right is entirely lost or abandoned or forfeited, thereupon such rights of way and appurtenances so granted shall immediately revert to and vest in the United States.

SEC. 8. That any of the persons or corporations referred to in this act may construct and maintain necessary roads and trails over any of the lands referred to in this act for use in connection with the construction and operation of the works and appurtenances herein provided for, with like privileges in connection with the use of materials, earth, and stone, for the construction and maintenance thereof; and such roads and trails, when constructed, shall be subject to the free use of the grantee, successors and assigns, and also subject to the officers and agents of the Government of the United States and all persons who may desire to use the same. All lands over which said roads or trails pass shall be subject to the right of way therefor, and if disposed of, shall be disposed of subject thereto.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] moves the previous question on the motion to recommit. Without objection, the previous question will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] to recommit.

The question was taken, and the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BROWN of West Virginia, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. DEWALT, until Tuesday next.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE—COTTON FUTURES BILL.

Mr. LEVER rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from South Carolina rise?

Mr. LEVER. I rise to ask unanimous consent for a change of reference in the case of the bill (H. R. 8018) to tax the privilege of dealing on exchanges, boards of trade, and similar places in contracts of sale of cotton for future delivery, and for other purposes.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted, that this bill is a reintroduction of a law that was held to be unconstitutional by Circuit Judge Hough recently, for the reason that the bill is supposed to have originated in the Senate instead of in the House. But the bill heretofore has been invariably sent to the Committee on Agriculture, and I ask unanimous consent that the change of reference be made to the Committee on Agriculture from the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. Did the Committee on Agriculture report that bill last year?

Mr. LEVER. Yes, sir. It is the same bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that it be done?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think properly it is before the Committee on Ways and Means, but under the circumstances I have no objection to its going to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. MANN. It never ought to have gone to the Committee on Agriculture in the first place, but owing to the fact that the gentleman from South Carolina is the chairman of that committee I think that everybody agrees that it ought to go there now. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. That is not the reason. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEVER. That is a good enough reason.

The SPEAKER. The reason is that the Speaker for several sessions has been referring it to that committee, and it is better to have some kind of a rule, even if it is a bad one, than no rule at all. Without objection, it will be rereferred.

There was no objection.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE FOX RIVER AT AURORA, ILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following Senate bill, there being a House bill of identical tenor on the calendar. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 1230) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Fox River at Aurora, Ill.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate two bridges across the Fox River, in the city of Aurora, State of Illinois, in accordance with the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges across navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, as follows:

(1) A bridge over the east branch or channel of the Fox River in the city of Aurora, State of Illinois, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, about 400 feet below the existing North Avenue Bridge over the Fox River.

(2) A bridge over the west branch or channel of the Fox River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, about 1,600 feet below the North Avenue Bridge, in the city of Aurora, State of Illinois.

SEC. 2. And it is further authorized that the work which has already been done upon these bridges, which may be approved by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, may be used as a part of the proposed bridges.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. MANN. Is this identical with the bill reported from the House committee?

Mr. COPLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The report was made yesterday.

Mr. COPLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It has been approved by the War Department?

Mr COPLEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. COPLEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent, the corresponding House bill was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] is, under a special order, entitled to address the House now for one hour. It is a quarter past 4 o'clock. I ask that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], instead of addressing the House this afternoon, may address the House on Monday next at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS].

The SPEAKER. There are two other gentlemen who come in ahead on Monday.

Mr. MANN. There are three or four ahead on Tuesday. I ask that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] be permitted to address the House on Monday at the conclusion of the special orders already made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent, considering the lateness of the hour which has been set apart for the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR], that next Monday, after those who have already obtained permission to address the House have concluded, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] may have an hour, subject to the conditions that have been imposed on all these gentlemen. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the special order has been disposed of on Monday H. R. 406 be in order, without prejudice to the right of the bill to be considered on Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. Without prejudice, on Wednesday?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes. We have the committee call next Wednesday, and what I am trying to do in addition to that is to utilize the time that is not consumed on other matters before that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent that after these speeches are concluded on Monday——

Mr. FERRIS. And on Tuesday, not to interfere with any special order.

The SPEAKER. That excepting the routine business and the speech making that has been provided for on Monday and Tuesday, House bill 406 shall have a privileged status, not to be deprived of its right on Wednesday. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. That privileged status would not run over beyond Wednesday?

Mr. FERRIS. No.

The SPEAKER. Not the next day. It would come up again on Wednesday week.

Mr. HEFLIN. I understand provision has been made in the request that speeches to be made on Tuesday shall not be interrupted by this.

The SPEAKER. No. They are excepted.

Mr. FERRIS. This is subject to all special orders.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, under a unanimous-consent agreement, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] addressed the House in a well-prepared and forcefully delivered speech. In that address he made not only an uncalled-for, but, as it seems to me, an unjust attack upon a good part of our citizenship. It is doubtless true that many American citizens of German birth or extraction sympathize with the Fatherland in the present struggle. Is that of itself an indictment against them? Wherein does that prove disloyalty to the United States? I do not think the gentleman from Massachusetts made a good case, nor do I think that the citation to-day of evidence from the message of the President of the United States helps the matter in the least. Even the newspapers of the country have not furnished sufficient evidence to establish a case of disloyalty against any of our German-American citizens. We all know that they are not only as good a part of our citizenship as there is, but that they are just as loyal and heretofore in every crisis have been just as patriotic. Crime is to be abhorred and should be not only condemned but punished wherever the guilt can be fixed. It is wicked, however, to unjustly accuse a whole people. I object to a generalization from sporadic cases, even though it should develop that in rare instances crime or disloyalty has appeared. I shall protest against an accusation sweeping enough to include the citizenship of any nationality if the only basis for it is the crime of an individual.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] followed, and attempted to deliver a castigation to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]. So far as it was individually applied to that gentleman, I think it was well timed, well directed, well delivered, and well deserved. [Laughter.] If he had stopped there, he would have done well. But instead of stopping there he proceeded upon the fallacious theory that two wrongs make a right, or that if you mix two evils sufficiently you will produce good; and he proceeded in a still more intemperate manner to attack a whole section of the country and to speak disparagingly, as it seems to me, of the services of those young men, from all parts of the country, who volunteered their services, and their lives if necessary, at the time of the Spanish War. For my part, like the dying Mercutio, I say, "A plague on both your houses."

The gentleman refers to New England as effete and to her people as an aristocracy. New England needs no defense at my hands. Her deeds speak more eloquently and more effectively than any words of mine; but if it be effete on the part of the people of New England to be fair and to be just and to be unwilling to approve unjust and unfair criticism, whether it comes from one of her own distinguished sons, from the gentleman from Wisconsin, or from the President of the United States, then I own the soft impeachment.

If it be a badge of aristocracy to be unwilling to sit silently by and hear my section of the country maligned and the services belittled of those young men who were patriotic enough to offer their services at a time when the country called for them—if that constitutes aristocracy, then on behalf of New England, so far as I represent her, I plead guilty to that impeachment also.

The gentleman also spoke in belittling terms of the Spanish War itself. I shall not attempt to argue the merits or the magnitude of that war; but even if it were all that my friend says of it and no more, these young men who offered their services when volunteers were called for were not to blame. Who has the power of declaring war in this country, anyway? Is it not the Congress? Does not everyone know that the Spanish War was declared by Congress and the newspapers? [Laughter.] And the only offense that these young men committed, whether they were in favor of the war or not, whether it was a big war or a little war, was that when the States were called upon to send their quota, these young men responded.

The length and kind of services to be rendered by them was not theirs to determine. Each one who raised his right hand and took the oath of a soldier thus obligated himself not only to obey the lawful orders of his superior officers but to go wherever sent and there perform such duties as might be required of him. No one could do more. These did no less; and, Mr. Speaker, no service is unimportant or small when rendered at our country's call under and for its flag. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to continue the incident that was occasioned by the unfair, as I considered it, attack by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] in his well-prepared, committed-to-memory address of yesterday, and I only rise to disclaim any intention on my part to disparage the services of any of the young men who enlisted in the Spanish-American War. It was farthest from my thought when I spoke, and I think it is very unfair and very far-fetched for the gentleman to draw any such inference from any expression I used in referring to the Spanish-American War. This closes the matter, so far as I have anything to say.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman need not have said that, because no one believed that the gentleman intended to speak disparagingly of those who enlisted in the Spanish War.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 900. An act amending sections 476, 477, and 440 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; to the Committee on Patents.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 136. An act granting an extension of time to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois; and

H. R. 4717. An act to authorize Butler County, Mo., to construct a bridge across Black River.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 3681. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near Tulsa, Okla.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, January 10, 1916, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Secretary of War, submitting an estimate of appropriation for "Salaries, Adjutant General's office," for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917 (H. Doc. No. 510); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. SENATE.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we thank Thee for the great part Thou hast assigned us in the world's vast enterprise. Thou hast given to us a voice, an influence, and a power among the nations of the earth. We thank Thee that Thou dost breathe upon us Thy Holy Spirit, giving to us reverence for Thy name and loyalty to Thy law. We pray that all added grace may be given to us that we may seize the opportunity and have the divine wisdom to meet the obligations, that Thy name may be glorified through the life and work and ministry of this great nation. For Christ's sake. Amen.

REPORT OF COMPTROLLER OF CURRENCY.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Comptroller of the Currency for the year ended October 31, 1915, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1230) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Fox River at Aurora, Ill.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 408) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 136. An act granting an extension of time to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois; and

H. R. 4717. An act to authorize Butler County, Mo., to construct a bridge across Black River.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GALLINGER presented the petition of Lois D. Beck, of Greenland, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Lincoln, Va., and a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Brooklyn, N. Y., praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ASHURST presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Nogales, Ariz., praying for the enactment of legislation to change the present method of promotions in the Army, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have a petition, signed by the governor of the State of Michigan, members of the supreme court, and others, indorsing the plan for the prevention and real cause of international wars, prepared by Homer L. Boyle, of Lansing, the author of a book entitled "History of Peace," that is used as a textbook in our schools. I present the petition and ask to have that portion of it printed in the RECORD which contains the peace proposal, and that the entire petition may be referred to the appropriate committee.

There being no objection, the part referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PEACE PROPOSAL.

SETTING FORTH THE PREVENTION AND REAL CAUSE OF INTERNATIONAL WARS.

[By Homer L. Boyle, Lansing, Mich., United States of America, author of a book, "History of Peace."]

To the Congress of the United States of America, assembled:

GENTLEMEN: In the interest of peace and harmony between nations, may I suggest that a law be passed, with a penalty incorporated, providing that henceforward for all time to come all notes of complaints, ultimatums, and declarations of war arising between this and any other nations, that the President or any other person within the United States having a complaint against another nation, submit the same to The Hague, or other arbitrational tribunal, with full plenary power for its investigation and adjudication.

The great commercial intercourse between all nations of the world causes many differences to arise almost constantly. The rulers of the nations, in the best of friendship, vainly try to settle these differences direct by diplomacy. Owing to this poor method, the complications in many instances grow speedily worse until an unexpected war is brought about within a very short time.

If the complaining ruler would submit the complaint, in the first instance, to a board of arbitration, while the two nations are in good friendship, peace and prosperity would always prevail between them.

Under the present policy one nation sends to another a note of complaint or demand. The nation receiving the note may take a different view and send its reply accordingly. The complaining nation then makes its further reply, and the defendant nation begins to feel that the note or demand is unjust, and the notes passing between the two nations in this way grow worse, causing grave complications—one does not want to be bossed, and the other will not give in. They often act hastily and make a limited ultimatum, which would not occur if their differences were submitted to an arbitrational tribunal.

The complaining nation only sees its own side of the controversy and naturally believes itself to be wholly in the right and the other nation wholly in the wrong, whereas each has rights and wrongs to be considered.

There are always two sides to all questions. If there were not, there would be no need for attorneys, judges, courts, or arbitrational tribunals.

Rulers are quite liable to disagree as to who shall be the judge, which disagreement creates a war sentiment and makes it difficult for the nations to agree to arbitrate their controversy, which would have been an easy matter had they in the first instance submitted the same to an arbitrational tribunal.

When differences between nations are submitted to arbitration, they do create a sentiment for peace, for the reason that the matter is looked upon in a decidely different light, thus avoiding mistakes, different views, false impressions, and misunderstandings.

For the past century arbitration has never failed when international questions were submitted; and while there have been adjournments and disagreements, later the matters were taken up and satisfactorily adjudicated to all nations in interest. Should the arbitrators disagree, there would be another board appointed, as has been proven in past cases. No nation since modern times has refused to accept the findings of an arbitrational tribunal.

If this proposed law was passed by a nation, and the nation would submit its complaint against another nation through an arbitrational tribunal for its investigation and adjudication, the nation receiving the complaint could not look upon it in the light of force and selfish motives.

It is dishonorable for a nation to take the same law as the animal creation. It is only just and honorable for a nation to leave its differences to a third party. Every kind of difference has been settled by human methods—the loss of lives, of the Italians at New Orleans and the United States sailors at Valparaiso, insults, thefts, damages, boundary lines, etc.

It may be said, how will a nation know if it has a case against another nation or not, if it does not take the matter up directly in the first instance and try to settle it?

If the nation presents its claim to the arbitrational tribunal for investigation and adjudication and it has no case, that tribunal will so advise, as would be the case in any court of justice. If the tribunal found no cause for complaint, the nation making the complaint would be better satisfied than it would if the other nation were to deny the cause as then the complaining nation would be quite liable to take it as an insult and declare war.

As a rule the defendant nation requests that these complaints be submitted to arbitration, but this does not apply in all cases to a nation in a state of rebellion.

Nations often go to war over very small matters, and for this reason they should submit all questions in the first instance to an arbitrational tribunal for investigation and adjudication.

Since the year 1796 direct negotiations have failed 67 times between the United States and other nations alone, as follows:

Sixty-four times direct negotiations have failed to adjust the differences and each controversy was submitted to arbitration, which arbitration was successful in all of those cases.

Three other cases of direct negotiation resulted in the three wars of 1812, 1846, and 1898, of which the calamity is too inhuman to contemplate.

If such a proclamation or law as suggested were passed by any nation and the nation should submit its complaint in the first instance to an arbitrational tribunal for its investigation and adjudication, while the nations are in good friendship, it would prevent any war sentiment being started; or, if one had been started, it would be the means of putting an end to it.

It is the present poor system of making complaint or demands by direct negotiation which causes all of the international wars, and if there was a law passed no future ruler would want to break such a humane law. It is now an opportune time.

Under existing conditions of wars and unsettled international questions and more questions constantly arising it is believed that our Nation and also other nations will make a law as suggested. National and State Congresses have passed laws to cause their people, whether ordinary citizens, lawyers, judges, governors, Congressmen, or executives to use human methods in settling their differences.

It would be far better and the proper diplomacy for a nation to submit its contentions in the first instance to The Hague tribunal, or some other arbitrational tribunal, for adjustment, which policy would save the ruler, representatives, and citizens from the grave responsibility of being drawn into bloody warfare.

May I be further pardoned for suggesting the kind of penalty to be incorporated, which penalty should provide it to be considered a heinous crime for any person within the United States to make a demand or complaint against any nation direct; but it will be only lawful to submit the complaint or demand to The Hague or any other arbitrational tribunal with full plenary power for its investigation and adjudication.

This proposed law would not interfere with peace treaties, arbitrational tribunals, or national armament. To prevent international wars is to prevent the real cause that makes the war.

As matters stand now between nations in many instances, to come when disagreement sounds alarm, the nations rush to arms.

This outline is respectfully submitted in the interest of peace and world-wide patriotism.

HOMER L. BOYLE.

BRIEF REMARKS.

1. If a complaint were submitted to an arbitrational tribunal for its investigation and adjudication the nation receiving the complaint would look upon the complaint in a more favorable light.

2. No terms of a treaty to be broken or misinterpreted.

3. If this law was passed by our Government it would soon become general.

4. It would be far easier to submit the complaint in the first instance to an arbitrational tribunal for its investigation and adjudication than it would be to stop a war.

It is a fact that the disagreement of the rulers is the real cause of international wars.

Yours, in the interest of peace and world-wide citizenship.

HOMER L. BOYLE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I also present a similar paper from Mr. Carl Storm, of Detroit, Mich., and ask that it be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the paper was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DETROIT, MICH., January 7, 1916.

Hon. CHAS. E. TOWNSEND,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed herewith find a pamphlet prepared by me which I believe is worthy of your earnest consideration and cooperation. In my judgment, it proposes the only feasible plan for permanent world peace. Will you please look it over carefully at once, and if it meets your approval, is there not something substantial you can do to advance the idea? The object should have the attention of all earnest and conscientious public officers.

With kind regards to you and wishing I may hear personally from you in regard to this important matter, I am,

Yours, very truly,

CARL STORM.

EXHORTATUM OR AN APPEAL FOR THE AWAKENING OF STATESMEN AND SCHOLARS AND THE OUTLINE OF AN INTERNATIONAL CONSTITUTION.

[By Carl Storm, Detroit, Mich.]

The time for permanent international peace is at hand. Millions of decimated homes implore it, and the memory of countless millions slain on the field of war cry out for it.

The world is ready for peace, and has been ready for years, but the means have not been at hand. Progress, prosperity, education, commerce, communication, there have all but forged a fraternal chain about the world. The one missing link has been the instrumentality, the practical plan.

Not that the object has been impossible of achievement, but its advocates were beset with fear and awe at the undertaking.

The world's greatest statesmen have not been great enough; the world's greatest scholars have not been schooled enough; fear and doubt deterred them.

Had their fears been absent, the means would be at hand; had the means existed, their fears would be unknown.

The protection of a seal or salmon; the deciphering of a dusty parchment or hieroglyphic, these have been the achievements of statesmen and scholars. And while thus they toiled, humanity has suffered, and the one great overreaching duty has been neglected.

The immediate, the familiar, the simple, has usurped the remote, the unfamiliar, the complex.

Dark and distant and unattainable has seemed the star of world peace to them, and yet the multitude has worshiped it on its knees.

There has been no constant effort to dispel the dark, no incessant stride to span the distance, no unceasing struggle to attain the heights. With them the complex would have been simplified, the unfamiliar would have been commonized, and the remote would be at hand.

But regardless of the great men of the past and present, their achievements and struggles, world peace must come. No insurmountable obstacle confronts it. The word "impossible" is no longer in the lexicon of wise men. The task before the thirteen Colonies was a greater one.

We need but turn to the history of our own land to behold an illustrious example. There we find many Commonwealths or units bound together by a Constitution hewn out of the cold, hard rocks that supported monarchies for centuries. Necessity drove the colonial statesmen, and thus they mothered a great Republic. Humanity and the world's greatest good will cheer and strengthen the leaders of to-day.

The nations of the world are but commonwealths or units in an international government. In population, wealth, area, many of them do not equal several of the American States. Yet the burden of war in them is heavy. All will welcome, yea, cry, for permanent peace.

The international units are at hand, but the international constitution is still in embryo. The missing link is still unforged.

Greater than the Bill of Rights; greater than the Declaration of Independence; greater than the discovery of electricity; the power of steam, the telegraph, the telephone, the phonograph; greater than the discovery of antitoxins, anesthetics, antiseptics; greater than the unburying of the pillars of Babylon or the vaults of the Pyramids; greater than any of these and all of these and all others is permanent world peace. And yet not one hero, not one martyr, has died for it.

Will not the statesmen, the scholars, the heroes, and the martyrs turn their attention to the cause of humanity?

Where are the Thomas Jeffersons, the Alexander Hamiltons, the Patrick Henrys of to-day? Where are the champions for the greatest cause in history? Truly, the world's great men have slumbered. And yet, when universal peace comes it will rival the glory of the Christian Era on the pages of history and immortalize those who lived and died for it.

All hail to the strong, all hail to the weak, that struggle—give their all—lay down their lives for mankind.

PROPOSAL.

(1) That the President of the United States immediately urge upon all nations of the earth that five delegates from each be sent to Washington, there to convene at an early day (to be set by the President) and outline a constitution for an international government, which, after being drafted, shall be submitted promptly to all nations for ratification.

(2) The immediate designation by the President of five delegates for the United States to such a convention.

(3) The construction of a constitution for an international government by that convention.

OUTLINE OF INTERNATIONAL CONSTITUTION.

(Preamble.)

Whereas we believe that war is at once the sin, the sorrow, and the scourge of man; that humanity has emerged from the pale of ignorance and blindness; that education and enlightenment should transcend war; and that the momentous period in history has come when war should cease and be controlled by an international government which will justly rule the world and permit of converting the energies of war into science and discovery for the general welfare and advancement of man: Therefore be it

Resolved, (1) That a majority in power of the nations of the earth combine in a government to be known as the international government which, in form and substance, shall consist of the following: (a) An international congress; (b) an international judiciary; (c) an international executive.

(2) Said international congress shall consist of (a) an international senate; (b) an international house of delegates.

(3) Said international senate shall consist of five senators from every represented nation, regardless of population. The international house of delegates shall consist of one delegate for every 5,000,000 people, or fraction thereof, in each represented nation: Provided, however, That every nation shall be represented by at least five delegates.

(4) Members of the international senate shall be appointed by the executive or ruler of their respective Governments and shall hold office for a period of 10 years. Provision shall be made for one member's term to expire and one new member to be appointed every two years.

(5) Members of the international house of delegates shall be elected by the people in their respective countries, and shall hold their office for the term of four years.

(6) Each represented Government shall provide its own eligibility rules.

(7) The international judiciary shall consist of five representatives from each represented Government, who shall be appointed and hold their offices for a period of 10 years. A two-thirds majority shall be necessary to make the vote of the judiciary binding.

(8) Each Government shall provide at least three alternate delegates, who, in the order of their appointment, shall succeed to any vacancies in the representation of their respective Governments in any branch of the international government. Such alternates shall not possess any powers or privileges in the government.

(9) Each represented Government shall provide the salaries and expenses of its representatives.

(10) The international executive shall be chosen by the members of the international senate, house of delegates, and judiciary, sitting in joint session, from among their number, and shall hold his office for a period of five years. He shall not be eligible to reelection, but may afterwards sit as a member in any other branch of the government.

(11) The armies and navies of existing Governments shall not be enlarged.

(12) All armies shall be reduced 25 per cent within one year after the inauguration of the international government, 15 per cent the second year, 10 per cent the third year, and 5 per cent each year thereafter, until said armies shall not exceed one-fifth of 1 per cent of the population of said Government.

(13) Provision shall be made for the gradual reduction of all governmental navies: Provided, however, That said armies and navies shall not be reduced below a standard as determined by the international congress: Provided also, That the international government shall have the power to arrange for and take over on an equitable basis such portions of existing navies as it may deem advisable.

(14) Said international government shall convene on the 1st day of January, 1920, and every year thereafter in the various capital cities of the Governments represented, beginning in the alphabetical order of said nations in regular rotation: Provided, however, That congress may, in its judgment, intercept the regular rotation, if deemed advisable, and that the international judiciary shall not consider any international dispute in any nation that shall be directly interested therein, but said judiciary shall either defer consideration of said dispute until the following year or adjourn to another country.

(15) Said international congress shall have exclusive power and control over all military trainings and the right to declare and engage in war; over international boundaries, waters, and highways; over all aerial navigation and international commerce, and shall enact laws for the maintenance and establishment of an international army and navy; for the collection of revenues; for the admission of colonies or nations not theretofore represented; for the submission of amendments hereto; provide penalties for the violation of international laws and rules; and shall have such other powers as are consistent with the object of the government.

(16) The international executive shall preserve peace between the nations; shall guarantee and maintain all present international boundaries and rights; shall compel support and compliance with this constitution and obedience to all international laws and mandates; convene the international congress at any time and direct its attention to beneficial legislation; shall have command over the army and navy of the international government and, in case of impending rebellion, over the armies and navies of represented Governments; and shall have full power to enforce all laws and commands of the government or any branch thereof.

(17) The international judiciary shall have full and exclusive power to hear and determine all international questions and disputes and to formulate rules and regulations for the proceedings before it. Its judgments and decrees shall be law.

(18) We recommend and urge the immediate ratification and adoption of the foregoing constitution by all the nations of the earth and hereby declare the same effective and binding upon all nations when ratified by the leading nations of the world.

(Signatures of delegates.)

Mr. STONE. I have a telegram sent to me setting forth resolutions adopted by the Missouri Cattle, Swine, and Sheep Feeders' Association, adopted at Columbia, Mo., January 7, 1916, which I ask to have read and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the telegram was read and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

[Telegram.]

COLUMBIA, MO., January 8, 1916.

Senator W. J. STONE,
Care Senators from Missouri, Washington, D. C.:

Resolutions of the Missouri Cattle, Swine, and Sheep Feeders' Association, January 7, 1916:

"Whereas the live-stock industry of the corn belt is fundamental to the welfare of the people of the corn belt and to the consumers of meats in the United States; and

"Whereas this great industry is suffering from depression because of unsatisfactory market conditions: Be it

"Resolved, That we favor early action by Congress conferring upon the Bureau of Markets and Country Organizations of the Department of Agriculture the duty of enforcing a uniform system of accounting upon all corporations doing an interstate business in the manufacturing, buying, and selling of food products, with a view to making more insistent a proper relation between demand, supply, and price; that we favor an early enactment by Congress of a law providing for the standardization of agricultural products; that the United States Department of Agriculture be respectfully asked to issue frequent public reports on the meat supply of the United States, as it now does in the case of the grain supply; and that we favor the strictest enforcement of the antitrust laws."

COMMITTEE ON RESOLUTIONS,
H. O. ALLISON, Secretary.

Mr. CUMMINS. I present 19 petitions from citizens of my State asking Congress to prohibit the traffic in arms and munitions of war. They are all of the same tenor and effect, and I move that they be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina presented memorials of sundry citizens of South Carolina, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit interstate commerce in the products of child labor, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Oregon, praying that an appropriation be made for the construction of a military road in that State, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KENYON presented petitions of sundry citizens of Dubuque, Independence, Parkersburg, Hopkinton, Earlville, Colesburg, Lamont, Belmond, and Bennington, all in the State of Iowa, praying for an embargo on the exportation of munitions of war, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the memorial of James Fox and sundry other citizens of Pocahontas County, Iowa, remonstrating against an increase in armaments, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BEVERLY E. WHITEHEAD.

Mr. HARDWICK, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to which was referred the bill (S. 707) for the relief of Beverly E. Whitehead, reported it with an amendment.

REPORT ON DISEASES OF THE HORSE.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 25) authorizing the printing of 200,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of the Horse, to report it favorably with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 36) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were, in line 3, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "fifty"; in line 7, before "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty"; and in lines 7 and 8 to strike out "one hundred and fifty" before the word "thousand" and insert "thirty," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed and bound in cloth 50,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of the Horse, the same to be first revised and brought to date under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture; 20,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 30,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution authorizing the printing of 50,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of the Horse."

REPORT ON DISEASES OF CATTLE.

Mr. GALLINGER. From the Committee on Printing I report back favorably, with amendments, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 19) authorizing the printing of 200,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle, and I submit a report (No. 37) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The amendments were, in line 3, before the word "thousand," to strike out "two hundred" and insert "fifty"; in line 6, before "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty"; and in line 7, before "thousand," to strike out "one hundred and fifty" and insert "thirty," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That there be printed and bound in cloth 50,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle, the same to be first revised and brought to date under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture; 20,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 30,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution authorizing the printing of 50,000 copies of the Special Report on the Diseases of Cattle."

POSTAL SAVINGS SYSTEM.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, on the 8th of January I reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads the bill (H. R. 562) to amend the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing a postal savings system, and it went to the calendar. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. BRYAN. I inquire of the Senator what is the bill?

Mr. VARDAMAN. It is the bill I reported from the committee on Saturday, the 8th, authorizing a postal savings system.

Mr. BRYAN. I think the bill ought to go back to the committee.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am glad the Senator agrees with me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

CONTRABAND OF WAR.

Mr. GORE. I introduce a joint resolution, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 73) authorizing and directing the President to interdict the exportation of contraband of war to the signatory powers of the Declaration of London, when such power shall be ascertained to be interfering with the neutral commerce of the United States in articles designated as noncontraband in such declaration, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Declaration of London when referred to in this act shall signify the declaration agreed to by the international naval conference and signed by certain signatory powers on February 26, 1909, and on subsequent dates to March 20, 1909, the ratification of which was advised and consented to by the Senate of the United States on April 24, 1912. The term "contraband of war" as used herein shall signify those articles and only those articles which are designated and declared to be contraband of war in article 22 of the Declaration of London. The term "noncontraband of war" as used herein shall signify those articles and only those articles designated and declared to be noncontraband of war in said declaration.

SEC. 2. That whenever the President shall ascertain it to be a fact that any of the signatory powers to the Declaration of London is obstructing, hindering, or interfering with the neutral commerce of the United States in any article or articles designated as noncontraband of war in articles 28 and 29 of said declaration, except in case of requisition provided for in the latter article, it shall be his duty to issue a proclamation declaring the facts so ascertained and designating the signatory power or powers so obstructing, hindering, or interfering with our neutral commerce.

SEC. 3. That when the President shall issue the proclamation authorized in the preceding section, it shall be conclusive as to the facts so ascertained and declared, and after the day on which such proclamation shall be issued it shall be unlawful to sell, ship, export, or transport, or to contract to sell, ship, export, or transport, any articles, contraband of war, at or from any place or port in the United States to any place or port in the jurisdiction or control of any signatory power, or its ally, or to any place or port for the use and benefit of any signatory power, or its ally, or to the agent or representative of any such power which shall be ascertained or designated by the President as obstructing, hindering, or interferring with the neutral commerce of the United States.

SEC. 4. That any person, acting for himself or for any partnership, company, or corporation, or in whatever capacity acting, who shall violate the provisions of this act after the issuance of the proclamation above provided for, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $5,000 nor more than $50,000, or by imprisonment for not less than 2 years nor more than 10 years, or both.

SEC. 5. That whenever after the issuance of said proclamation the President shall receive satisfactory assurances and guaranties from any such offending signatory power that such obstruction, hindrance, or interference with the neutral commerce of the United States in noncontraband goods will be discontinued for the future, he is authorized to suspend the operation of this act during such time as said assurances and guaranties shall be observed in good faith.

SEC. 6. That after the issuance of said proclamation and while this act is in operation the collectors of customs of the several ports of the United States shall withhold clearance from any vessel receiving as a part of its cargo any articles, contraband of war, designed for the use or destined to any port or place under the jurisdiction or control of any of the powers, or their allies, ascertained and declared in the President's proclamation to be obstructing, hindering, or interfering with the neutral commerce of the United States in noncontraband goods.

SEC. 7. That the President is empowered to cause suitable rules and regulations to be prepared and promulgated by the Secretary of Commerce or the Secretary of the Treasury, as the case may be, for carrying into effect the provisions of this act.

SEC. 8. That all acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

SEC. 9. That this act shall take effect from and after its approval.

Mr. GORE. I introduce a joint resolution, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 74) authorizing and directing the President by proclamation to prohibit any national banking association to make any loan to, or to act as agent for, any of the signatory powers to the Declaration of London which shall be ascertained to be obstructing the neutral commerce of the United States in noncontraband articles, as defined in such declaration, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Declaration of London, when referred to in this act, shall signify the declaration agreed to by the International Naval Conference, and signed by certain signatory powers on February 26, 1909, and on subsequent dates to March 20, 1909, the ratification of which was advised and consented to by the Senate of the United States on April 24, 1912. The term "contraband of war," as used herein, shall signify those articles, and only those articles, which are designated and declared to be contraband of war in article 22 of the Declaration of London. The term "noncontraband of war," as used herein, shall signify those articles, and only those articles, designated and declared to be noncontraband of war in said declaration.

SEC. 2. That whenever the President shall ascertain it to be a fact that any of the signatory powers to the Declaration of London is obstructing, hindering, or interfering with the neutral commerce of the United States in any article or articles designated as noncontraband of war in articles 28 and 29 of said declaration, except in case of requisition provided for in the latter article, it shall be his duty to issue a proclamation declaring the facts so ascertained and designating the signatory power or powers so obstructing, hindering, or interfering with our neutral commerce.

SEC. 3. That when the President shall issue the proclamation authorized in the preceding section it shall be conclusive as to the facts so ascertained and declared, and after the day on which such proclamation shall be issued it shall be unlawful for any national banking association organized under the laws of the United States to act as agent for or to make any loan, or to assist in making any loan, either directly or indirectly, to any of the signatory powers, or the agents, representatives, or allies thereof which shall have been ascertained and declared in said proclamation to be obstructing, hindering, or interfering with the neutral commerce of the United States in noncontraband goods.

SEC. 4. That any national banking association violating the provisions of this act shall forfeit all the privileges granted to it under the laws of the United States, and any officer or agent of such banking association violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not less than one year.

SEC. 5. That whenever, after the issuance of said proclamation, the President shall receive satisfactory assurances and guarantees from any such offending signatory power that such obstruction, hindrance, or interference with the neutral commerce of the United States in noncontraband goods will be discontinued for the future, he is authorized to suspend the operation of this act during such time as said assurances and guarantees shall be observed in good faith.

SEC. 6. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

SEC. 7. That this act shall take effect from and after its approval.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to submit a statement to accompany the joint resolutions just introduced by me, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The object of the two joint resolutions that I have just introduced is to insist that the powers which agreed to and signed the Declaration of London shall observe that agreement. Article 22 of that declaration enumerated certain articles as absolute contraband of war, such, of course, as arms, munitions, and the like. Articles 28 and 29 enumerated certain other articles as noncontraband, such as raw cotton, wool, other raw materials of the textile industries, rubber, rawhide, paper and paper-making machinery, agricultural implements, articles serving exclusively to aid the sick and wounded, and many others, expressly providing that they "may not be declared contraband of war"—I quote the language.

Articles 23 and 24 enumerated still other articles as conditional contraband. The two joint resolutions relate to the first and second classes of articles and exclude the third class, because their character was not absolutely fixed by the declaration.

These measures recognize the right of belligerent nations under the laws of war to interfere with the shipment of contraband articles. Neither joint resolution would interfere in the slightest measure with any commerce with any belligerent which has not interfered with the neutral commerce of the United States in noncontraband articles defined by the Declaration of London. One of the joint resolutions is designed to prohibit the exportation of all contraband to those signatory powers which are now obstructing our neutral and innocent commerce. Nothing more. It authorizes the President to suspend the operation of the act whenever the offending power shall give satisfactory assurance that it will discontinue for the future such interference with our noncontraband neutral trade.

I do not believe in a general embargo or nonintercourse act. I do not favor the passage of a law absolutely and unconditionally forbidding the exportation of arms and munitions of war. All belligerents have a right to purchase contraband here, subject, of course, to the right of capture, and we could not abolish this ancient right in time of war without the commission of an unneutral act on our own part. If this right operates unequally, that is due to the fortunes of war and not to the law itself or to the act of this Government. Our neutrality should be neutral without reference to our sympathies or antipathies. This Government has the power, however, to refuse the shipment of contraband to any belligerent, and I think especially to any signatory power to the Declaration of London that insists upon interfering with the innocent commerce of this country. This right should be exercised purely as a defensive measure, and it could not possibly involve us in an international quarrel.

The other joint resolution forbids national banks from acting as agents for or making any loan to a belligerent country that was a signatory of the declaration of London which is violating the letter and spirit of that Declaration by obstructing our commerce in noncontraband goods. The President can also suspend the operation of this act whenever he receives sufficient guarantees that the interfering nation will discontinue its obstruction of neutral American commerce.

Every American citizen has the right under international law to engage in innocent commerce with neutral nations and no belligerent Government has authority to abrogate that right.

It is quite as important to protect this right of American citizens to ship innocent goods to neutral countries as it is to protect their right to run the risk of involving this country in a carnival of slaughter. It will be interesting to see whether those who insist so vehemently that every American citizen should have the right to travel on a belligerent rather than on a neutral ship at the peril of engulfing the country in a sea of blood will be equally insistent that American citizens should be protected in their immemorial and sacred right to ship noncontraband goods on neutral vessels. I trust these joint resolution seeking to protect the rights of American citizens will commend themselves to the favor of all those who stand for the interest and security of the American citizen and the American people without reference to the interest or the fortunes of any belligerent.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

Mr. TILLMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 63), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized during the Sixty-fourth Congress to employ a stenographer, at a price not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before the said committee, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers approved by the chairman.

RELATIONS WITH JAPAN.

Mr. PHELAN. I present a newspaper article by Count Premier Okuma from the New York Sun of December 4, 1915, showing the feeling between this Nation and that great Empire. I ask that the article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Sun, Dec. 4, 1915.]

OKUMA APPEALS TO UNITED STATES TO DROP RACIAL BARRIERS—JAPANESE PREMIER SAYS ISOLATION OF HIS RACE HERE IS DUE TO AMERICAN ALOOFNESS—ASKS RELIGIONISTS TO AID IN LAND PROBLEMS.

[By Count Premier Okuma.]

TOKIO, October 28.

The Japanese question in California should not be considered as a problem within the boundaries of the State or merely between Japanese and Americans. It is of far deeper meaning and wider scope, being an expression of the racial prejudice lying at the bottom of the affair. It is, in fact, no exaggeration to say that from its satisfactory solution will date the harmonization of different civilizations of the east and the west, thus marking an epoch in the history of human civilization.

If, on the other hand, the solution be proved unattainable, one must then forever despair of the possibility of harmonizing the different thoughts and systems of cultures of different races. In this sense the importance of the problem is universal. Again, from the more limited standpoint of Japan, the future destiny of this Empire may well be said to depend, at least in part, upon the issue of this question.

If the above premise that this is an expression of racial prejudice be true, then we can expect the problem to work out its own solution by the operation of the law of the survival of the fittest. If the white be essentially superior to the colored, the latter will be spontaneously weeded out in the course of time. With the present rate of population increase steadily maintained, there will be no more free space left on earth after about 300 years for human beings to settle. Before this stage is reached the stronger will necessarily weed out the weaker in order to protect their own existence. If the colored be really inferior, they will have to die their own death before the existence of the white reaches its critical stages.

JAPANESE PHYSICALLY INFERIOR.

For the sake of clearness of argument, in most cases I understand by the white the Teutonic and Latin races, represented by Germans, French, and Americans, and by the colored the Japanese people (unless an extended meaning be deduced from the context), and I will proceed first from the rough comparison of the mental and physical qualities inherent to both the races.

From the physical point of view the average Japanese body is 3 to 5 inches shorter than that of the white people. In point of weight also the Japanese are lighter by 10 to 15 pounds. Again, in the proportion of physical development, Japanese are assuredly inferior to the Europeans. This inferiority has been wrought chiefly by the oppressive social system of the olden days. We suffered long from the pressure of the caste system, which necessitated our formal and bodily humiliation on numberless occasions. Only 50 years ago, for example, we had to kneel in the mud of the streets when we encountered a procession of feudal lords. We sat with our legs folded under our bodies on the mats.

Our short legs support our long trunks. While Japanese remain sitting beside Europeans their bodily disproportion does not appear, but once they stand their low stature becomes quite conspicuous. This is because of the undue shortness of the legs as compared with the length of the body. Also the posture of the Japanese is very awkward. The long oppression of the caste system habituated them to remain always a little bent forward. Such a humiliating posture has had a very unfavorable effect on their mental condition, which has become consequently gloomy, negative, and pessimistic. In one word, the average Japanese has lost the dignity of human stature.

REASONS FOR REDUCED STATURE.

The chief physical difference between a human being and the animal lies in the fact that the former walks standing erect while the latter goes on all fours. The human head rests on the top of the body, while that of the animals is attached to the horizontal extremity of the trunk. The animals of far lower classes creep with the body itself. So argued, the status of standing erect must be the prime condition for maintaining the dignity of a human body. But strangely enough such a dignified posture was denounced by the Japanese as haughty and arrogant. In fact, their constant effort to appear friendly has had a very unfavorable effect on the posture as well as the spirit of the Japanese people. They could not boldly conceive, as the Chinese, the equality of all men before God. They silently acquiesced in the difference of artificial ranks. Such a morbid thought combined with such a humiliating posture must have contributed largely to the physical degeneration of the Japanese race.

Now, the case was quite the opposite with the Europeans. They walk with dignified postures, keeping the body always upright. Their appearance is bright and happy and light-hearted. However proud Japanese may be of things Japanese, none of them will be courageous enough to assert the superiority of the Japanese over the Europeans in this respect. If the Japanese physical inferiority be an undisputed fact, what will be their ultimate destiny in the evermore violent competition for life among all human races? Are they to be finally weeded out by the superior Europeans? Are they to fall prey in the end to fatten the superior races of white complexion? Is the virtual confiscation of Japanese property in California to be regarded as the first step in the process leading to this fatal end? Will not this American threat against Japanese property be followed by more dreadful persecution? It may or may not be, but if the Japanese should continue to acquiesce silently in such a merciless persecution I am afraid the inevitable annihilation of the Japanese race would be realized at no very distant future.

"INFERIORITY MUST END."

Must we Japanese accept such a state of affairs as our inevitable destiny because we are an inferior race? No! It is my idea, without being unduly partial to the Japanese, that we can not be a priori inferior to the Europeans. Most certainly it is the power of long habit and tradition that caused such a physical degeneration of this people. This degeneration is, so to speak, a posteriori, being of a temporary kind. Our awakening and consequent endeavor to develop will restore to us our original place in the course of time. The correctness of the view that Japanese have great potentiality of development is more than sufficiently proved by the amount of work they have completed in the last 50 years. We Japanese must become more self-confident in our intrinsic value. We must take firm resolution to fight our way with our own energy and ability, boldly confronting the pressure of the white races.

For two or three centuries most colored races have without spirit acknowledged their essential inferiority to the white. The Turks, the Arabian, the Hidus, the Siamese, and others pitifully entreated the mercy of the Europeans, whom they humbly accepted as their superior being. Indeed, it was not until the Japanese defeated the Russians that all those colored peoples came to the consciousness that they were not invariably and necessarily inferior to the white Europeans, and that through strenuous efforts and steady application the colored races could excel the white in mental and material civilization. Such a consciousness gave them new courage and fresh hope to cope with the "superior" whites.

In fact, for my part, I am of the firm belief that we Japanese were not originally and essentially inferior to the white peoples, but only that the combinations of various unfortunate circumstances checked the natural progress of evolution. Therefore if we should in future pay close attention to this point and do all in our power to eliminate the causes that may act harmfully on our physical constitution, then it would be quite possible for us to recover the well-balanced physical proportion of our ancestors to have a corresponding increase of bodily capacity and present a bold front against the aggressive expansion of the white races.

RACES COMPARED MENTALLY.

Turning to a comparison of the mental capacities of the two races we must frankly acknowledge that in this respect also our progress has been far slower than that of the white race. In Japan there have as yet been neither erudite scholars of world-wide renown nor great founders of a religion. We have developed only in imitation, apparently lacking in originality of thought. But this inferiority of ours was but a natural result of the combination of social and natural circumstances. Great men are the products of the age, of surrounding situations. The great French Revolution called Napoleon to appear on the stage. The demoralization of the Roman Church necessitated the severe remonstrances of Martin Luther before the Diet of Worms.

Japan, surrounded on all sides by water, was for a considerable period quite safe from the encroachment of foreign invaders. Grains, fish, and other foods were abundant enough to nourish the insular population, which was not so large as at present. The mild temperature has spared us the necessity of vigorously fighting with the elements of nature. There has been practically no violent competition for life, no necessity and no chance to display our mental powers to the utmost. It is not the congenital deficiency of our brain but the lack of opportunity to develop the latent potentiality that made us Japanese appear mentally inferior to the European races.

Once a European professor in the employ of our Government, acting on the belief that human capacity was proportioned to the weight of the brain, made an analytical examination of the peoples of various nationalities and obtained the result that the English brain was the heaviest, the French and the Japanese almost equal, the Indian's was third, and that of the negro was the lightest. The Japanese brains submitted to examination belonged to a culprit sentenced to death, assuredly no very favorable one to prove the mental capacity of the Japanese.

PLANS TO GAIN EQUALITY.

Anyhow, in the past there have been no ample opportunities to test and drill our brain power. The peaceful dreams of the feudal period, cut off from the general progress of the world, have in some sense been extremely unfavorable for the development of our cerebral capacity. Consequently we are rather gross in our thought, lacking somewhat in tenacity and patience and at the same time inclined to be a little fickle and unsteady. Our high spirits over the victories in two successive wars were easily dampened by the financial embarrassment that followed. We must do away with such a fickleness of thought and sentiment, otherwise it is absurd to think of competing on equal terms with the advanced Westerners. We must constantly bear in mind the development of our mental capacities, which were not a priori inferior to those of the white races.

Now, as for the California question. It would be proper to look upon it as a preliminary test to sound the capacity of the Japanese, whether we are susceptible of still further development. Our future destiny may be said to depend on its successful solution. A temporizing measure may be thought out to meet the demand of this particular case. But the fundamental essence of the American-Japanese problem can not be thereby radically disposed of. One trouble may call forth another, for which we must carefully and courageously prepare. It may probably require half a century, a century, or even more. Our moderate attitude is quite likely to be interpreted as weak-hearted spiritlessness, while a firm policy would only stir up the fury of the anti-Japanese excitement. Really, in respect to this question, we have fallen between two buffers.

Were it not for our honest desire to shun anything like the possibility of hostilities between the two nations it might be proper for us to assert strongly our reasonable claim. But preferring friendly peace to inimical controversies we appeal only to that high sense of human justice which inspired the ancestors of the Americans when they laid the foundation of the great Republic. Do they remember that their noble-hearted ancestors appealed to the force of arms only after they had exhausted all other imaginable means to bring their differences with the British Government to a peaceful close? Their repeated entreaties were scornfully disregarded, one after another, and the oppression became heavier. They patiently endured what was really unendurable.

This splendid example we are now intending to follow. We are now prepared to tax our patience to the utmost. Such being the case I can not but profoundly desire that the Americans, considering the precepts of humanity and justice which formed the cornerstone of their national policy, will spare no effort to bring the differences to a reciprocally satisfactory conclusion.

For a solution of this problem, whose remote causes must be ultimately found in the racial prejudices, the power of religious faith should not be overlooked. And it is with conviction that I have asked many distinguished American religionists to do their best for the reestablishment of the old friendship between the people of the two nations. The Japanese public must become fully conscious of the serious fact that upon the issue of the settlement of the question depends the future welfare and prosperity of 150,000 Japanese on the Pacific coast of the American Continent and in Hawaii, and that if the result be unsuccessful we Japanese may hereafter have no outlet on the Pacific side, notwithstanding the rapid increase of the population at home.

In conclusion, I want to point out the errors of those who try to ascribe the anti-Japanese sentiment to the lack of ability to assimilate on the part of the Japanese emigrant. Quite the contrary, it is the Americans themselves that set ub obstructive barriers to prevent the Japanese from being assimilated in social manners and customs, refusing them a friendly reception in their social intercourse. It is quite natural for the Japanese to tend to form isolated groups when they find no warm friendship outside of their own narrow circle. How can they become American when the Americans coldly refuse them their society? The true cause of the so-much-talked-of nonassimilation of the Japanese is not to be found in their haughty and arrogant patriotism, but in the exclusive attitude of the Americans, the accusers.

Depend upon it, if the Americans once have the generosity to remove the barriers set against the Japanese they will soon find a great number of perfectly Americanized Japanese on their own soil. I wish the Americans would in future open the way for the Japanese to assimilate instead of charging them with "insolent isolation" which has been forced on our emigrants by no others than the Americans themselves.

MANUFACTURE OF ARMS AND MUNITIONS.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that, owing to unforeseen engagements, I shall not be able to address the Senate on Wednesday of this week. I give the same notice for Wednesday, January 19, that I have already given for Wednesday, January 12.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 408. An act to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there concurrent or other resolutions? If not, morning business is closed, and the calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

The bill (S. 2520) granting to the State of Nevada 7,000,000 acres of land in said State for the use and benefit of the public schools of Nevada and the State University of the State of Nevada was announced as first in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

CONTINUOUS RESIDENCE ON LANDS IN NEVADA.

The bill (S. 898) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to designate certain tracts of land in the State of Nevada upon which continuous residence shall not be required under the homestead laws was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill was read in full on Saturday last.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if we are going to act on the bill, I desire to offer certain amendments. On page 2, line 3, I move to strike out "one-eighth" and to insert "one-sixteenth"; in line 4 I move to strike out "one-fourth" and to insert "one-eighth"; and in line 5 I move to strike out "one-half" and insert "one-quarter."

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. PITTMAN] is not in the Senate Chamber at present, and I ask that the bill go over temporarily. I want my colleague to have an opportunity to be present when it is considered.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to say to the Senator that my amendments only seek to put Nevada upon the same basis as the other States which are interested in the enlarged homestead bill. I spoke to the Senator's colleague in relation to the matter, and the Senator's colleague was delighted with the prospect of the proposed changes to which I called his attention.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The proposition of the Senator from Utah is really more favorable to Nevada.

Mr. SMOOT. I was merely trying to help Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Upon that statement I am willing that the bill shall now be acted upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the amendments of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] will be agreed to. The Chair hears none, and they are agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. There is one further amendment, about which I spoke to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. On line 10, page 1, I move to strike out the word "two" and insert "one."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 10, before the word "million," it is proposed to strike out "two" and to insert "one," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever the Secretary of the Interior shall find that any tracts of land in the State of Nevada subject to entry under the act to provide for an enlarged homestead, approved February 19, 1909, do not have upon them a sufficient supply of water suitable for domestic purposes as would make continuous residence upon the lands possible, he may, in his discretion, designate such tracts of land, not to exceed in the aggregate 1,000,000 acres, and thereafter they shall be subject to entry under this act without the necessity of residence: Provided, That in such event the entryman on any such entry shall in good faith cultivate not less than one-sixteenth of the entire area of the entry during the second year, one-eighth during the third year, and one-quarter during the fourth and fifth years after the date of such entry, and that after entry and until final proof the entryman shall reside within such distance of said land as will enable him to successfully farm the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to inquire of the Senator from Utah if we are to understand that the last amendment suggested by him meets with the approval of the junior Senator from Nevada?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Montana that it does meet with his approval, and for this reason: No bill has been heretofore passed in behalf of any State exceeding 1,000,000 acres; in fact, the bill passed for Idaho provided only for 300,000 acres.

Mr. WALSH. But this is not a cession.

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware of that, I will say to the Senator from Montana. I will suggest, however, that with a provision for 2,000,000 acres it would be impossible to have the bill passed through the House; and I desire to see the bill passed.

Mr. WALSH. I desire the Senator from Utah to understand that if this is satisfactory to the Senator from Nevada I shall not question it.

Mr. SMOOT. The junior Senator from Nevada asked me to offer this amendment, or I should not have proposed it in his absence.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD CONVEYANCES WITHIN THE STATE OF NEVADA.

The bill (S. 2521) legalizing certain conveyances heretofore made by the Central Pacific Railroad Co. and others within the State of Nevada was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I did not understand what disposition was made of Senate bill 2521.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has gone over on objection under the rule.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to make a suggestion to the Senator who made the objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator from Montana that I want to look at the report on this bill, and which I have not had time to do. Not only that, but I have tried to get some information in relation to it by letter, and I have not yet received it; but I desire to do so before the bill is acted upon.

Mr. WALSH. I wished merely to say to the Senator from Utah that the Committee on the Judiciary gave very careful consideration to that measure——

Mr. SMOOT. But the bill is reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WALSH. I understand that; but it is a duplicate of a bill introduced at the last session, which had very careful consideration, I repeat, by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SMOOT. I assure the Senator from Montana that I will look up the report in reference to the bill, and that I presume by the time the calendar is next reached I shall have the information for which I have already written.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, is it Calendar No. 5 which is now being discussed?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator who introduced the bill made the statement before the Committee on Public Lands that the bill was a duplicate of one which was passed during the last Congress, but that in that bill some town along the line of the railroad had unintentionally been omitted, and that the purpose of this bill was to enable the application of the same principle to the omitted town to be made. So I suppose the passage of the bill would be largely a matter of course.

Mr. SMOOT. I will repeat to the Senator from Colorado that I have written a letter to ascertain exactly the situation and what situation the bill really intends to meet. As soon as I get the information, if it is satisfactory, I shall have no further objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no personal interest in the bill, and I am not pressing it, but I merely have made the statement for the information of the Senator from Utah.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS.

The next business on the calendar was the resolution (S. Res. 18) submitted by Mr. CHAMBERLAIN December 10, 1915, which was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate, and that expenses contracted hereunder shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

WATER ON ARID LANDS IN CALIFORNIA.

The bill (S. 1351) providing for the discovery, development, and protection of streams, springs, and water holes in the desert and arid public lands of the United States in the State of California, for rendering the same more readily accessible, and for the establishment of and maintenance of signboards and monuments locating the same, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Interior Department immediately to proceed by all necessary and proper means to discover, develop, protect, and render more accessible for the benefit of the general public springs, streams, and water holes on what are known as the western deserts and arid public lands of the United States in the State of California; and in connection therewith to erect and maintain suitable and durable monuments and signboards at proper places and intervals along and near the accustomed lines of travel and over the general area of such desert lands containing information and directions as to the location and nature of such springs, streams, and water holes, to the end that they may be more readily traced and found by persons in search or need thereof; also to provide convenient and ready means, apparatus, and appliances by which water may be brought to the earth's surface at such water holes for the use of such persons; also to prepare and distribute suitable maps, reports, and general information relating to such springs, streams, and water holes, and their specific location with reference to lines of travel.

It also proposes to appropriate $10,000 to carry out the purposes set forth, and provides that whoever shall willfully or maliciously injure, destroy, deface, or remove any of the monuments or signposts, or shall willfully or maliciously fill up, render foul, or in anywise destroy or impair the utility of such springs, streams, or water holes, or shall willfully or maliciously interfere with the monuments, signposts, streams, springs, or water holes, or the purposes for which they are maintained and used, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1053) to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FALL. I object to the present consideration of that bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. FALL. I object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I was going to do the same thing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

The bill (S. 1062) relating to the duties of registers of United States land offices and the publication in newspapers of official land-office notices was announced as next in order, and the Secretary read the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, my recollection is that the general law on the subject is that these notices must be published in the newspaper nearest to the land affected. This bill is so broad that it might result in the publication of notices in such a way that that portion of the public interested in the matter might never see them. I ask that the bill go over until the chairman of the committee is present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO HOMESTEAD SETTLERS.

The bill (S. 1066) authorizing leave of absence to homestead settlers upon unsurveyed lands was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that any qualified person who has heretofore or shall hereafter in good faith make settlement upon and improve unsurveyed unreserved unappropriated public lands of the United States with intention, upon survey, of entering them under the homestead laws shall be entitled to a continuous leave of absence from the land settled upon by him for a period not exceeding five months in each year after establishment of residence, if he shall have plainly marked on the ground the exterior boundaries of the lands claimed and have filed in the local land office notice of the approximate location of the lands settled upon and claimed, of the period of intended absence, and if he shall upon the termination of the absence and his return to the land file notice thereof in the local land office.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WIND RIVER RESERVATION, WYO.

The bill (S. 733) providing for patents to homesteads on the ceded portion of the Wind River Reservation, in Wyoming, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that all persons who, prior to the passage of this act, have made valid homestead entry on the ceded portion of the Wind River Reservation, in Wyoming, and established residence thereon in good faith, but who through no fault of their own were unable to secure water for the irrigation of their lands, shall be granted patent for their lands upon payment of the Indian price for the land and without the necessity of proving continuous residence thereon.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AFFAIRS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The resolution (S. Res. 33) submitted by Mr. SMITH of Maryland on December 16, 1915, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the authority heretofore vested in the Committee on the District of Columbia by Senate resolution of February 20, 1909, directing the said committee to examine into matters relating to the District of Columbia, is hereby continued, and the said committee is hereby directed to pursue its investigation during the Sixty-fourth Congress.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The resolution (S. Res. 34) submitted by Mr. SMITH of Maryland on December 16, 1915, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate, and that the expenses thereof be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

PRINTING FOR DISTRICT COMMITTEE.

The resolution (S. Res. 35) submitted by Mr. SMITH of Maryland on December 16, 1915, was announced as next in order and was read, as follows:

Resolved, That authority is granted to print and bind, for the use of the Committee on the District of Columbia, such papers and documents as may be deemed necessary in connection with subjects heretofore considered or to be considered by said committee during the Sixty-fourth Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the resolution go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

The resolution (S. Res. 36) submitted by Mr. STONE on December 16, 1915, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized during the Sixty-fourth Congress to send for persons, books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a price not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before the said committee; that the committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate; and the expense thereof shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

WAGON ROADS ON PUBLIC LANDS.

The bill (S. 22) to promote and encourage the construction of wagon roads over the public lands of the United States was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in section 5, page 3, line 4, after the word "act" to insert: "And thereafter the said road or roads shall be free and open to the general public the same as to the corporation or association in whose behalf said right of way is granted," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That upon the completion of such road or roads ready for operation of vehicles thereon the corporation or association of persons shall file with the Secretary of the Interior due proofs of the completion of said road or roads, in such form as shall be provided by the rules and regulations under this act, and thereafter the said road or roads shall be free and open to the general public the same as to the corporation or association in whose behalf said right of way is granted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Wyoming a question regarding the effect of the amendment which seems to have been reported to this bill on page 3:

And thereafter the said road or roads shall be free and open to the general public the same as to the corporation or association in whose behalf said right of way is granted.

Does that mean that the road is to be free and open to the general public; and if so, why the remainder of the sentence?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not think that accomplishes any useful purpose. I think, as the Senator intimates, that the words he uses carry out the full idea. This bill, if the Senator listened to the reading of it, provides that the right of way is granted upon the application of the business enterprise or the corporation which is to be primarily served. The purpose of the amendment is that after the grant is so made it shall not be exclusive in its operation, but shall be for the benefit of all.

Mr. THOMAS. If the corporation building the road should fix a certain rate of toll for its own vehicles, for itself, would not that apply to the general public the same as to the corporation or association to which the right of way is granted?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Well, possibly in that view——

Mr. THOMAS. There might be perfect equality with a very considerable toll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. My purpose was the same as the purpose the Senator has.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no doubt of that.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask leave to modify the amendment by striking out all after the word "public." Would that comply with the Senator's suggestion?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes. I think that should be done.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That, of course, was the original purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered.

The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming whether my understanding, as I read this bill hurriedly, is correct—that it grants rights of way 200 feet wide on any kind of public lands anywhere, without any restriction whatever, the only condition being that the applicant shall file a map?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Well, no; it is not quite as broad as that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It seems to me that is the effect of the bill as I read it, although I may be mistaken.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The intention of the bill is to grant the right of way over the public lands. I will say that the purpose of the bill is this: There are oftentimes, in the Senator's State, in my own State, and other Western States, mining operations which are carried on and developed at a distance from any known or open road, and it is sometimes necessary to have a passage over the public lands for the business connected with that corporation or its operations. This bill gives that right of way. I do not really get the gist of the Senator's question. It grants them a right of way simply from the scene of their operations.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course the language, "to and from any and all points and places where any public or private business shall be carried on," applies to any place where people may happen to be. Everybody is conducting business of some kind. It seems to me that the location ought to be approved by some administrative officer before it becomes a grant.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The location is approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Where is that provision?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. In section 3.

That upon the location of any such road or roads and the filing of the map or maps thereof as herein provided the public lands upon which the same shall be located shall thereafter be disposed of, subject to such rights of way as shown and delineated on the map or maps thereof filed with the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. POINDEXTER. "Filed with the Secretary of the Interior." I move to amend, Mr. President, by inserting in the second section, in the ninth line, after the word "maps," "and upon the approval thereof by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have no objection.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 9, after the word "maps," it is proposed to insert the words "and upon the approval thereof by the Secretary of the Interior."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am in accord with the purpose of this measure, but I desire to inquire of the Senator from Wyoming whether it might not be given a construction which would limit the right already accorded by the statute. Section 2477 of the Revised Statutes provides:

> The right of way for the construction of highways over public lands not reserved for public uses is hereby granted.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is true, but I presume that refers only to highways which are to be constructed or laid out by the local, county, or State authorities. This does not become a highway in the ordinary acceptance of the term. This might be granted without action by any board of county commissioners or other county authority which establishes the public highways.

Mr. WALSH. What I was afraid of was that some company engaged in mining operations away up in the mountains might go to considerable expense in the construction of a road without having pursued the formalities required by this act. Now, under the laws of all of the Western States, when a highway is thus laid out, even not by public authority, and is generally used by the public, it becomes a highway of a public character and comes under the operation of the section to which I have invited the attention of the Senator.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It perhaps becomes a highway of a public character; but it becomes a highway which, perhaps, while it can not be effectually and finally interfered with, yet becomes subject to the most effective obstruction.

Mr. WALSH. Let me put this case to the Senator from Wyoming: Here is an individual or a company that locates a mining property in a remote region, and at great expense it constructs a wagon road up to the mine, but it does not comply with the requirements of this bill, relying upon the custom and practice that is obtained and has been observed heretofore. Thereafter some one locates a homestead in such a situation as that this road crosses it and obtains a patent to that homestead. Now, could he fence up his homestead and exclude everybody else from passing over it?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think probably he could under the present law, but he could not under the law as it would stand if this bill were passed.

Mr. WALSH. That is, provided this act were complied with. My own impression about the matter is that if it had been open to public use he could not under the present law, even though he had not complied with this act.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course this is simply to make that question certain. The Senator is well aware that litigation on this very subject is not an uncommon thing in our Western States, where a road that has been traveled for years sometimes is closed in good faith and sometimes not in good faith.

Mr. WALSH. Would not the Senator think it wise, then, to put in an amendment to the effect that "nothing herein contained shall be construed as limiting the force and effect of section 2477 of the Revised Statutes of the United States"?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Oh, if the Senator thinks that is necessary, I have no objection whatever to it.

Mr. WALSH. Of course this is the first time my attention has been directed to the statute. It occurred to me that that might be advisable.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will say to the Senator that my own view about it is that it is not necessary; but if the Senator desires to guard it in that way, I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Then there is another question I wish to address to the Senator. Section 1 of the bill speaks of "roads, wagon roads, and roads upon which vehicles operated by power can be operated." What would the first word, "roads," cover?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think the two following statements are intended to define the word "roads"—that it is not to be confined to wagon roads, but the word may also, in this statute, include roads upon which power vehicles can be run.

Mr. WALSH. That is to say, it is to be read as if the words "that is" were there—"roads; that is, wagon roads or roads upon which vehicles operated by power can be operated"?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think so.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming why he thinks it necessary to provide for a road 200 feet in width. That is pretty wide for what appears to be a mere neighborhood road.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I will say to the Senator that this is not intended as a mere neighborhood road. It is intended as a road that will go, perhaps, to a mining camp carrying on extensive mining operations. The idea of a 200-foot road is that, as the Senator very well knows, in freighting operations it is often necessary to use more than 100 feet. If we could have a macadamized road or one that would not be cut up by the traffic, so as to obstruct the traffic entirely at some times, 100 feet probably would be sufficient.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am reasonably familiar with mountain roads and the roads out through the public lands, as is also the Senator from Wyoming; and I have never observed that the use of 200 feet in width for a road was necessary.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Why, if the Senator will take the very first roads that were made into his State, my State now is scarred with that old trail, and it was necessary to have it of considerable width. You can still find the tracks of it there, three and four and five hundred feet wide. But if the Senator believes that 100 feet or 50 feet is sufficient—my purpose is to get a road, and get it in and out, and get it so that no man by filing a "fake" homestead entry or any other entry can close up that road to active commercial operations. It is immaterial to me whether it is 50 feet wide or 100 feet wide.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Of course the reason that wagon tracks are seen going over that width is because one line of travel would be followed one year and an entirely different line of travel the next year, as a matter of fancy, or because the road had been washed out, and instead of making repairs they went to some other line of travel.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; they then go right next to the first track, as the Senator knows. He can follow those trails everywhere. He knows that for three weeks the track will run right straight to that door, for instance, and he knows that for the next three weeks because of a little imperfection in the road the track will go 5 or 10 feet to the side of it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not intend to interfere with the Senator's bill; but——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It is not my bill any more than it is the Senator's bill or the bill of anybody else who is interested in this particular matter. I introduced the bill, but I have no personal interest whatever in it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I only suggest to the Senator that it seems to me that 100 feet would be wide enough.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I move to strike out the words "one hundred" and insert "fifty."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a suggestion before he does that?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I want to accommodate the Senator from Utah, if the Senator from Nebraska will allow me.

Mr. NORRIS. It is on that particular question that I want to make a suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is amending the amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. Instead of limiting it to 50 feet, since an amendment has already been adopted providing that these roads shall be opened up only under rules prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, let me suggest that, on line 11, page 1 of the bill, to strike out the words "to the extent of," right at the bottom of the page, and insert in lieu thereof the words "not exceeding."

I can easily see that there may be places where 200 feet would not be any too wide, and other places where 50 feet would be wide enough. That would leave it, with the other amendment that has been adopted, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, so that it would read:

> Wherein such corporation or association of persons so organized shall be located, not exceeding 100 feet in width on each side of the center line of such roads.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That would hardly meet the objection of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think that probably would be sufficient.

Mr. NORRIS. On the other hand, you may find a condition existing where the amendment, if adopted, would preclude the building of the road entirely.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Exactly.

Mr. NORRIS. This will leave it so that I suppose the Secretary of the Interior would make the necessary regulations. If they were building the road across a level country, he perhaps would limit it to 50 feet on each side, or perhaps less; if there were some valuable country that it had to go through that could be used for other purposes, and in other places he could have it the full 200 feet wide, where it was necessary to make it so in order to make it a practical road.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If that is agreeable to the Senator from Utah, then I will withdraw my proposed amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is entirely agreeable to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Now, will the Senator from Nebraska suggest his amendment again?

Mr. NORRIS. I move to strike out, in line 11, page 1 of the bill, the words "to the extent of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "not exceeding."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There is no objection to that, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I ask the attention of the Senator from Wyoming. In order that no question may arise, I offer the following as an additional section to the bill:

Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to limit or impair the force or effect of section 2477 of the Revised Statutes of the United States or any right that may be claimed thereunder.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There is no objection to that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 706) to amend section 260 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

DUNCAN GRANT RICHART.

The bill (S. 2266) to authorize the appointment of Duncan Grant Richart to the grade of lieutenant in the Army was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Duncan Grant Richart, late a second lieutenant in the Tenth Regiment United States Cavalry, now an officer of the National Guard, to the grade of second lieutenant of Cavalry, to rank next below the officer having an equal amount of commissioned service, provided that prior to such appointment Duncan Grant Richart shall pass, in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary of War, the physical examination required of candidates for appointment as second lieutenants.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN IOWA.

The bill (S. 1294) amending section 81 of the Judicial Code was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 81 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be, and it hereby is, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 81. The State of Iowa is divided into two judicial districts, to be known as the northern and southern district of Iowa.

"The northern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Allamakee, Dubuque, Buchanan, Clayton, Delaware, Fayette, Winneshick, Howard, Chickasaw, Bremer, Blackhawk, Floyd, Mitchell, and Jackson, which shall constitute the eastern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Jones, Cedar, Linn, Iowa, Benton, Tama, Grundy, and Hardin, which shall constitute the Cedar Rapids division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Emmet, Palo Alto, Pocahontas, Calhoun, Carroll, Kossuth, Humboldt, Webster, Winnebago, Hancock, Wright, Hamilton, Worth, Cerro Gordo, Franklin, and Butler, which shall constitute the central division; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Dickinson, Clay, Buena Vista, Sac, Osceola, O'Brien, Cherokee, Ida, Lyon, Sioux, Plymouth, Woodbury, and Monona, which shall constitute the western division.

"Terms of the district court for the eastern division shall be held at Dubuque on the fourth Tuesday in April and the first Tuesday in December, and at Waterloo on the second Tuesdays in May and September; for the Cedar Rapids division, at Cedar Rapids on the first Tuesday in April and the fourth Tuesday in September; for the central division, at Fort Dodge on the second Tuesdays in June and November; and for the western division, at Sioux City on the fourth Tuesday in May and the third Tuesday in October.

"The southern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Louisa, Henry, Des Moines, Lee, and Van Buren, which shall constitute the eastern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Marshall, Story, Boone, Greene, Guthrie, Dallas, Polk, Jasper, Poweshiek, Marion, Warren, and Madison, which shall constitute the central division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Crawford, Harrison, Shelby, Audubon, Cass, Pottawattamie, Mills, and Montgomery, which shall constitute the western division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Adair, Adams, Clarke, Decatur, Fremont, Lucas, Page, Ringgold, Taylor, Union, and Wayne, which shall constitute the southern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Scott, Muscatine, Washington, Johnson, and Clinton, which shall constitute the Davenport division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Davis, Appanoose, Mahaska, Keokuk, Jefferson, Monroe, and Wapello, which shall constitute the Ottumwa division of said district.

"Terms of the district court for the eastern division shall be held at Keokuk on the sixth Tuesday after the fourth Tuesday in February and the eighth Tuesday after the third Tuesday in September; for the central division, at Des Moines on the tenth Tuesday after the fourth Tuesday in February and the tenth Tuesday after the third Tuesday in September; for the western division, at Council Bluffs on the fourth Tuesday in February and the sixth Tuesday after the third Tuesday in September; for the southern division, at Creston on the fourth Tuesday after the fourth Tuesday in February and the third Tuesday in September; for the Davenport division, at Davenport on the eighth Tuesday after the fourth Tuesday in February and the second Tuesday after the third Tuesday in September; and for the Ottumwa division, at Ottumwa on the second Tuesday after the fourth Tuesday in February and the fourth Tuesday after the third Tuesday in September.

"The clerk of the court for said district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Davenport and at Ottumwa for the transaction of the business of said divisions."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 81 of an act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary,' approved March 3, 1911."

MONUMENT TO POCAHONTAS.

The bill (S. 609) to aid in the erection of a monument to Pocahontas at Jamestown, Va., was announced as next in order on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 611) for the erection of a monument to the memory of Matthew Fontaine Maury, of Virginia, was announced as next in order on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. I make the same request with regard to that bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Did the Senator from Utah ask that Senate bill 609 go over?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I asked that Senate bill 609 go over.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator must have some very good reason for it. It is a very small matter, just $5,000 to aid an association which raises a like sum. It is carefully guarded.

Mr. SMOOT. I have read the bill, and I know just what it provides. It does seem to me that it is a bad policy to give aid to any association to erect a monument in any State. If we are going to pass a bill for the erection of a monument, let us appropriate money for the purpose of the Government erecting the monument; but I would not do it in aid of any association; I would do it outright; and I would appropriate such an amount that the monument would be at least a credit to the Nation and a credit to the party for whom the monument is erected. In this bill I can not see either, and I object to its consideration now.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is guarded very carefully. The money has to be paid over to a bonded officer and the Commission of Fine Arts will supervise the matter. Of course if the Senator wants to object it is his right.

Mr. SMOOT. I object.

MONUMENT TO MATTHEW FONTAINE MAURY.

The bill (S. 611) for the erection of a monument to the memory of Matthew Fontaine Maury, of Virginia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I have objected to that bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Will the Senator tell me why he objects to it?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have not had time yet to read all the report on the bill, but I will say to the Senator frankly that I doubt very much whether the Government of the United States ought to begin to erect monuments to different persons throughout the United States for any particular service or any particular work they may have done unless that work involved the very life of the Government. The work of Commodore Maury was fine, but I do not think the person mentioned in the bill ought to have a monument erected to him more than, perhaps, a thousand other men who have lived in the United States.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Surely the Senator has not read the history of Commodore Maury or he would not make such a remark. He is a man who has been commended by every civilized country in the world for his contribution to science and the betterment of the conditions of mankind. I am absolutely unable to understand how the Senator can get up on the floor of the Senate and cast a slur at a man who had the career of Commodore Maury.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not cast any slur upon his career at all or upon the man.

Mr. MARTIN of Viriginia. As to commencing the practice, this business commenced with the foundation of the Government. It is nothing new to erect a monument on a public square in the city of Washington to a distinguished man who has contributed so much to the world as Commodore Maury has done.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want a little longer time.

Mr. LODGE. This monument is to be erected in the city of Washington?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. In Washington, at a place to be selected by the Commission of Fine Arts.

Mr. SMOOT. I see the report consists of four lines and a half.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It simply changes the amount. The committee reduced the sum from $50,000 to $30,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I want more time than I have now to examine into it before the bill is considered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Virginia will pardon me, I hope the Senator from Utah can withdraw his objection to the bill and let it be considered.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that I desire more information on the bill than I have at the present time. I thought the bill provided that the monument should be erected in Virginia, but I see it provides that it shall be erected in Washington.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. On a public square to be selected by the Commission of Fine Arts.

Mr. SMOOT. I see it is provided that it shall be erected in Washington, but I ask now that the bill be not considered at this time as I want to look up some matters in connection with it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall be compelled to object also, in order that the matter may be further considered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is nothing to be found by further investigation, except about what Maury did that deserves a monument.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

NATHANIEL MONROE.

The bill (S. 1781) to correct the military record of Nathaniel Monroe was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert—

That in the administration of the laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Nathaniel Monroe, who was a private of Company B, First Regiment East Tennessee Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 1st day of May, 1863: Provided, That no back pay, bounty, or pension shall accrue to him prior to the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Nathaniel Monroe."

JOHN P. FITZGERALD.

The bill (S. 1378) to amend the military record of John P. Fitzgerald was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend the military record of John P. Fitzgerald, who enlisted and served under the assumed name of Joshua Porter in Company K, Seventh Regiment, and Company C, First Regiment, Michigan Volunteer Cavalry, from March 9, 1865, to March 10, 1866, and to issue to him an honorable discharge in his true name of John P. Fitzgerald.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States conferring upon women the right of suffrage was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that the bill may go over.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Let the joint resolution go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

Mr. GRONNA subsequently said: I was under a misapprehension about Senate joint resolution No. 1. I thought it was the next bill which appears on the calendar, the bill (H. R. 562) to amend the act approved June 25, 1910, authorizing a Postal Savings System.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That bill has been recommitted, but another Senator objected to the consideration of the joint resolution. This completes the calendar.

LANDS IN NEVADA.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I was in conference with the Department of Agriculture with regard to relief for a serious condition that exists in our State by reason of the rapid spread of rabies among the coyotes and other animals, and was therefore not aware of the action taken with regard to certain bills on the calendar. Upon yesterday I had an understanding with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and other Senators that Senate bill 898, known as the nonresidence homestead act as applicable to the State of Nevada, having passed the Senate at a prior session, would be permitted to pass without objection or debate if certain amendments to be proposed by the Senator from Utah were consented to. I consented to such amendments. At that time it was also understood that Senate bill 2520, granting to the State of Nevada 7,000,000 acres of land in said State for the use and benefit of the public schools of Nevada and the State University of the State of Nevada, and Senate bill 2521, legalizing certain conveyances made by the Central Pacific Railroad Co. in the State of Nevada, might also go over to a subsequent date, as certain Senators who could not be present this morning desired to be informed with regard to such bills. I assume that under such understandings the action agreed upon was taken. As the calling of the calendar has been completed, I now ask the Senator from Utah if it is agreeable to him and the other Senators to take up at the present time Senate bill 2520.

Mr. SMOOT. Not this morning. A number of Senators want to speak on the bill, and I wish to have it go over.

Mr. PITTMAN. Of course, if the Senator desires to have it go over for that reason, very well; but I call the attention of the Senator from Utah to another bill, the bill (S. 2521) legalizing certain conveyances heretofore made by the Central Pacific Railroad Co. and others within the State of Nevada. Practically the same bill passed the Senate and the House last year.

Mr. SMOOT. That bill went over not only on my objection, but several Senators want to look into the matter. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], I think, also gave notice that he desires to look into it.

Mr. THOMAS. No; I merely explained what I understood the purpose of the bill to be.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator it may be all right, but——

Mr. THOMAS. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill at all.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the information I have written for. As soon as I get an answer to my letter I will have no objection to the consideration of the bill. I want it to go over to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This completes the calendar.

REFUNDS OR DRAWBACKS.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 64) as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to submit to the Senate a statement showing the following:

1. The amount of money that has been refunded or paid as drawbacks during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1914, and June 30, 1915, under paragraph O, section 4, of the act approved October 3, 1913, entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," specifying the articles upon which said drawbacks or refunds have been made, and the persons, firms, or corporations to whom such money has been paid.

2. A statement of the aggregate amount for which applications have been received by the Treasury for such refunds or drawbacks during the current fiscal year to date; the names of the persons, firms, or corporations making such applications, and the articles upon which these applications are based.

3. An estimate of the refunds or drawbacks that will be made during the remainder of the current fiscal year under said provision, together with the names and amounts of articles upon which said estimates are based.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana asks for the immediate consideration of the resolution. Is there any objection?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the chairman of the Committee on Finance, is not in his seat. I do not know that he would, if present, make any objection to the consideration of this resolution, but unless there is some immediate necessity for it, I suggest to the Senator from Louisiana that under the circumstances it should go over until the Senator from North Carolina is present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. THOMAS. I merely make the suggestion. I do not object to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Do I understand the Senator from Colorado to object to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not object to the consideration of the resolution. I merely suggest to the Senator the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, and that it might be best that it should go over. I leave it to the Senator under the circumstances.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator from Colorado that this resolution seeks to get information about which I have been unable to get anything definite or positive. It occurs to me that if at a time when we are looking for a way to replenish the Treasury, when it is the desire to spend more money than the present receipts of the Government warrant our expending and are reaching to find some way by which added revenue can be put into the Treasury, we ought to look to the money as it goes out of the Treasury, and we should be informed as to the purpose for which such money is being disbursed.

Of course, when appropriations are made by Congress and the Treasury Department disburses the money as directed to be disbursed, it is easy to get a report of those things. But where a law like the paragraph to which reference is made in the resolution gives a discretion to the Secretary of the Treasury to disburse moneys that have already been collected as a drawback, we should know how and to whom the disbursement was made.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, I wish merely to make a suggestion in reference to the chairman of the Committee on Finance. He is now in the Chamber. I have no objection whatever to the immediate consideration of the resolution, and I do not know that the Senator from North Carolina has any objection to it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have just entered the Chamber. I have not had an opportunity to read the resolution. I will ask the Senator from Louisiana if he would not be willing to let the resolution go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Perfectly. There is no haste for it—only I should like to have the information directed by this resolution before we undertake to legislate in regard to increasing taxation in our country.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the Senator that there will be no objection to his resolution, but I would not like to consent to act upon it before I have had an opportunity to read it.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I am perfectly agreeable, Mr. President, that the resolution shall go over until to-morrow morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On objection, it goes over.

Mr. SIMMONS subsequently said:

Mr. President, since reading the resolution submitted by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD], I desire to say that I have no sort of objection to it, and wish to withdraw the objection heretofore made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

PUBLICATION OF LAND-OFFICE NOTICES.

Mr. MYERS. What is the order of business before the Senate, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Nothing.

Mr. MYERS. I understand that in my necessary absence two bills of mine on the calendar were passed over—Order of Business No. 9 and Order of Business No. 10. I ask unanimous consent for their consideration at this time. I understand the only objection to their consideration was my absence.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think that was not the only reason. I made some criticism of one of the bills.

Mr. MYERS. Then I shall be glad to get one passed, if I can not get both passed.

Mr. SMOOT. My impression is that Calendar Order No. 10 was passed.

Mr. MYERS. Does the Senator mean that it was passed by the Senate or passed over?

Mr. THOMAS. It was passed by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was passed by the Senate.

Mr. MYERS. Then I ask if there is any objection, by unanimous consent, to taking up Order of Business No. 9?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana will enlighten me with reference to the effect of the measure, I shall not object to its consideration.

Mr. MYERS. I shall be highly pleased to do so, if I may have a few moments.

Mr. THOMAS. The criticism which I made——

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Colorado will yield to me, I will say there was also a Senator on this side of the Chamber who desired to be heard upon the bill, and at present he is not in the Chamber. I should not like to have the bill considered in his absence.

Mr. MYERS. Very well, then, I shall not ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Montana will let the bill go over until the next time the calendar is called, I shall be glad.

Mr. MYERS. I will say in this connection, while I have the floor, merely in an explanatory way, that the bill has been unanimously twice favorably reported by the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate, once at the last session and once at this session. In the last Congress it was passed by the Senate with practical unanimity; I do not think there was a dissenting voice; and, if explained now, I do not think there would be any objection to the bill; but so long as a Senator on the other side objected to it, and he is not now here, I shall not press it at this time.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will bear with me, I will state that this was my criticism of the bill, which I stated in his absence: Under the present law, publications of land-office notices are required to be made, if my recollection serves me aright, in some newspaper nearest the land affected.

Mr. MYERS. This bill is not intended to change that at all.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, under the provisions of this bill, if it should pass as drawn, might not such publication be made in any newspaper in the county, regardless of the location of the land; and, if so, would not that defeat the very purpose of the publication?

Mr. MYERS. I do not think that would be the effect of the bill; but if there is any doubt about it, I shall be very glad to have the bill amended so as to make it plain. Inasmuch, however, as the Senator on the other side who objected to the bill is not present, I shall not ask for its consideration at this time. When the bill again comes up, I shall be glad to explain it. I think it is entirely harmless and beneficial; but if there is any latent defect or looseness in the language of the bill, I shall be very glad to have it amended.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the bill as it is drawn should become a law—and it becoming a law would repeal the present statute—in my judgment there is no question but that such publications could be had in any newspaper, not even limited to the county, but in the entire district, that might be designated by the register or selected by the owner of the land. As a result, it is quite evident that the purpose of the publication would be entirely defeated.

Mr. MYERS. I think it would not have that effect, and I certainly do not intend it to have that effect.

Mr. THOMAS. I am satisfied that the Senator has no such intention.

Mr. MYERS. Certainly not. I would be the first Senator on the floor to object to any such proposition. When the bill again comes up I shall explain the matter.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Philippine bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] secured unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a letter written by Mr. AUSTIN, of Tennessee, a Member of the House of Representatives, on the subject of matters in the Philippine Islands. When his attention was called to the fact that that letter contained offensive matter relating to the Philippine Commissioner, and contained also an attack upon the Philippine government and upon Gov. Gen. Harrison, the Senator from New Hampshire indicated a willingness to have it stricken from the RECORD, as it had gone into the RECORD only by the assurance that it contained no matter of that sort. I contented myself, however, by agreeing with the Senator from New Hampshire to have stricken from the RECORD the offensive part relating to Commissioner QUEZON, which was evidently a breach of propriety, but consented to have the attack upon the Philippine government remain in the RECORD, because I felt that it could properly and conclusively be answered; and I have no doubt that Commissioner QUEZON, in the House of Representatives, where he has a seat, will take occasion to refer to the part relating to him.

What does this letter of Mr. AUSTIN state? First, it shows that there is a business depression in the Philippine Islands, or that there had been. There is some truth in that. There has been in many countries a business depression following the war. While it has largely passed away in the United States, it still continues in South and Central America; it continues in Japan; and, to some extent, it still continues in the Philippine Islands, affecting the revenues of the islands and, to some extent, affecting business. I affirm, however, that the depression there is less than it is in other countries, and I declare that it is due wholly to causes growing out of the great European war.

In the next place, the author of this letter stated that there was dissatisfaction on the part of the business element in the Philippine Islands and doubt and uncertainty as to the future. Mr. President, so far as dissatisfaction on the part of the business element in the Philippine Islands is concerned, there is no proof of it; in fact, what proof there is is to the contrary. Witnesses came before the Philippine Committee, men of large business affairs, Americans, who testified that affairs in the Philippine Islands were being administered in a satisfactory way; that progress was being made; and that as soon as the temporary causes of the war had passed away it was expected that conditions would improve.

Not only that, Mr. President, but witnesses came before the Philippine Committee and testified, as shown in the hearings which have been sent to every Senator, that the American business interests in the Philippine Islands desired the passage of this bill, or something like it, for the purpose of putting an end to the doubts and uncertainties of the past and the agitation that has been going on among the Philippine people because they did not know authoritatively what the purpose of the United States was in regard to the islands. They have been assured by several Presidents of the United States, by two Secretaries of War, and by two Governors General of the Philippine Islands that the American Republic intended to give them a constantly increasing measure of self-government, and ultimately, when the proper time came, independence; but they did not know it from the Congress of the United States, and now that the matter had been brought into Congress the business interests in the Philippine Islands thought it important that Congress should settle it and put an end forever to any possible remaining doubt.

I shall not read to any considerable extent, Mr. President, but I want to read something from the testimony of G. H. Fairchild. He is president of one of the largest American companies in the Philippine Islands, a concern which is doing a very large and varied business. He is the president and general manager of the firm of Welch, Fairchild & Co., of New York, and he spends much time in the Philippine Islands. He says, in the opening of his testimony, in response to a question:

Mr. FAIRCHILD. I am the president and general manager of the firm of Welch, Fairchild & Co., and connected with the Mindoro Sugar Co., San Jose estate on the island of Mindoro, and the San Carlos Milling Co., on the island of Negros.

The CHAIRMAN. How long have you had your business interests there?

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Of the interests which I represent, the Mindoro Co. and the San Jose estate were established some two years before I went to the islands. The firm of Welch, Fairchild & Co. was established at the time I went out there—in September, 1912. And at that time the erection of a sugar central was commenced on the island of Negros, at San Carlos.

Then he goes on to state the details of the business, which is a very large one, including the cultivation of thousands of acres of sugar cane, and they manufacture a great deal of sugar. Now, what did Mr. Fairchild say? He stated in his testimony before the committee that, in his opinion, it was important that Congress should enact this or some similar legislation; and after he had testified he handed to the committee a copy of an address which he had delivered, which had been published in certain New York papers, and an extract from which reads as follows—and I think this extract may be taken as a concise statement of the position of the American business men and other business interests in the Philippine Islands:

Business in the Philippine Islands has suffered very severely from the uncertainty prevailing as to what their future political status is to be; there is nothing that strangles business so much as uncertainty. Last year when European bankers were approached for the purpose of obtaining capital for the development of the agricultural resources of the Philippine Islands we were given to understand that until the uncertainty as to the future of the political status of the Philippine Islands was definitely settled foreign bankers could not advise their clients to make any investments of a permanent nature there. Hence the business men of the Philippine Islands earnestly desire an early passage of legislation by Congress in regard to those islands which will make friends of foes, rectify the errors of a policy which, however well intentioned, will fail if not amended in the near future in a manner that will promote prosperity, remove uncertainty, and facilitate the establishment of an era of better feeling between the Americans of both political parties at home as well as those in the islands, and more important still, between the Filipinos and the Americans resident in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. President, that is a conclusive answer, it seems to me, to the statement that doubt and uncertainty exist in the Philippine Islands; it is a conclusive proof that the way to remove that doubt and uncertainty is to pass this bill.

Mr. President, I might quote also from Maj. W. H. Anderson, another American, who conducts one of the largest, if not the largest, wholesale business in the Philippine Islands, a man who was a Spanish War veteran. Maj. Anderson speaks, as many other American merchants upon the islands have spoken, in interviews in this country and in testimony in this country. In discussing Gov. Gen. Harrison's administration, he says:

It is no exaggeration to say that the Filipinos are peaceful and seeking prosperity. They are not adverse to American rule, if it can be terminated when our work has been completed, if in the interim it is directed for their general welfare. Mr. Harrison is, therefore, the best Governor General the President could have sent to the islands. His record shows that his selection was a particularly fortunate choice.

How conclusively that disproves the statement that American business men of the islands condemn the present administration of Gov. Gen. Harrison.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SIMMONS in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if any petition or protest has come to the committee or to Congress from the American residents in the Philippine Islands? I ask that question for the reason that I had a letter from a gentleman this morning, in which he said that somebody ought to say a word in behalf of the American residents in the Philippines before the debate closes. I know nothing about it, and for that reason I ask the question.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, I am not able to answer the Senator's question. It is rather vague. I presume there are Americans resident in the Philippine Islands who are dissatisfied with conditions now, just as there were Americans resident in the Philippine Islands who were very dissatisfied with Mr. Taft when he was Governor General because he did not turn the government over to them and give them all the offices of the Philippine people.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have no question as to the fact that there are individuals there who are dissatisfied; that would naturally follow; but my correspondent spoke for the 7,000 or 10,000 Americans registered in the islands, and I simply wanted to know whether they had had a meeting or had taken any action which would seem to represent their views as a whole or the views of a majority of them.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; I know nothing of the sort; and, of course, there are not as many American residents of the Philippine Islands as the Senator names. I think it is safe to say that there is no such number.

Now I want to come back again to this attack. In this letter, as published, the author states that the civil-service rules have been violated and that neither in spirit nor in letter are its terms being lived up to. The fact is that Gov. Gen. Harrison has gone further than any other Governor General in enforcing the civil-service law of the Philippine Islands in letter and in spirit. He has made only two changes in the regulations, but both of them were in that direction. Heretofore Governors General have interpreted the regulation which prohibited members of the civil service from being actively engaged in politics as referring only to Philippine politics. Gov. Gen. Harrison has taken the position that it included American politics as well, as it ought to.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. WORKS. A good deal of the time of the Senate seems to be taken up with a discussion of the administration of Gov. Gen. Harrison. I should like to ask the Senator what that has to do with the bill that is now before the Senate. I can understand very well why the Senator should be defending that administration when an attack has been made upon it; I am not criticizing the attitude of the Senator at all; but I should like to know why the Senate should consider, in passing upon this question of the rights of the Filipinos, either the politics of the United States, or the politics of the Philippines, or the administration of the government over there?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the criticism made by the Senator from California is very just. I deplore, as improper and debasing, the bringing of political attacks of this sort into this discussion. Not only that, but I urged at the outset in my speech that Senators should avoid such action. I avoided it myself. I sought to give to the Republican predecessors of Gov. Gen. Harrison the fullest credit, and to the Government of the United States the greatest credit for the administration of our great trust over there in a most commendable way. This attack, however, has been placed in the RECORD; and I shall only take the time of the Senate briefly in replying to it and conclusively refuting it, because every essential charge in that report is false, and it can be proved false by undeniable evidence.

The second way in which Gov. Gen. Harrison has improved the civil service over there is in a ruling that men engaged in the civil service shall not engage in business—a very proper precaution to take to prevent the servants of the Philippine government from becoming involved in business interests which might affect their public service.

One of the specific charges made in this letter is that good Americans have been summarily dismissed from the service. I say that Gov. Gen. Harrison has appointed fewer public servants brought from the United States than any Governor General during a similar time since the American possession. I shall not rest this case simply upon my statements, but I am going to quote an authority that is not Democratic. I am going to quote an official whose appointment was to some extent antagonized on this side of the Chamber when it was made. I am going to quote Mr. Winfred T. Denison, who was appointed as a Republican to the position of secretary of the interior in the Philippine Islands, a man who had held the office of Assistant Attorney General in the United States under Roosevelt and under Taft. This official was selected by the Civil Service Reform League of the United States, which made an inquiry of him asking him to state what the facts were as to the civil service in the Philippine Islands. I shall place this statement of his in the RECORD complete, with the consent of the Senate, and I shall read only a few extracts from it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

[The statement of Mr. Denison will be found in full at the end of Senator HITCHCOCK's speech.]

Mr. HITCHCOCK. He gives, first, a list of the resignations requested by the Governor General. He gives the reasons why the resignations were requested; and at the time this report was made, which, I think, was some time during the year 1914, only 11 resignations had been requested by the Governor General.

There was the first assistant executive secretary, whose resignation was requested because the Governor General wanted a man of his own selection to occupy that close personal relation to him and because he was considered out of sympathy with the administration. No one will question that as a reason.

There was the collector of customs, whose resignation was requested because he was the Republican national committeeman and very active politically. I think any man interested in the civil service will think that that was not an improper request.

There was the deputy collector of internal revenue, whose resignation was requested because he was superannuated.

There was the director of printing, whose resignation was requested because of insubordination in initiating a campaign in the United States against the reduction of salaries without consulting the Governor General; and the assistant director of printing was requested to resign for the same reason. Senators who are in favor of economy in the Philippine Islands—the economy brought about by the Governor General—will certainly not criticize him for dismissing from office or for demanding the resignation of subordinate officials who start a campaign against his policy.

There was the lieutenant governor of Lepanto, who was dismissed for disciplinary reasons. I could give the reasons in all of these cases, but I shall not, for the reason that the men did not stand trial. The men practically confessed the charges by handing in their resignations.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator from Nebraska state that because a man is a national committeeman that of itself unfits him for holding office?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think a man holding an important position in the Philippine Islands should not be in active politics, and I am glad to see that position taken by the Governor General, that men over there holding positions of trust shall be serving the Philippine government, which pays them their salaries, and not taking an active part in politics.

Mr. BORAH. I think that is an excellent rule; but why should it apply to the Philippines and not to the United States?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not know that I should resist its application to the United States; but I do not want to bring the United States into this discussion.

There was the prosecuting attorney, whose resignation was demanded for cause.

The chief of police, whose resignation was demanded for nonpolitical reasons.

The first assistant city engineer, at Manila, I suppose, whose resignation was requested by the municipal board.

The city attorney, whose resignation was also requested by the municipal board.

The director of lands, whose resignation was requested because of the disapproval by the Governor General of the policy regarding the friar-land leases.

Mr. President, those were the resignations from the public service brought about by the demand of the Governor General. Does that bear out the charge that there was a wholesale removal of men from high positions?

There were many resignations that were voluntary in their character. I shall not stop to read them. One of them was that of the director of agriculture, whose resignation was referred to on Saturday. The records show that he resigned to return to the United States to take a more lucrative position. In the RECORD I shall place the list of these resignations, some voluntary and some involuntary, but overwhelmingly the larger number voluntary.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Nebraska if he could put in the RECORD the names of the men, and the States from which they came, who took the places of those 11 important men who were removed?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not sure that it is contained in this report, but I will undertake to do so.

As to the new appointees, Mr. Denison gives this information to the Civil Service Reform League of the United States. He gives a list of those who were not in office under the old administration. He gives a list of the new men brought in, and it is the smallest list ever named by any Governor General in the same length of time. I shall not stop to read them, but there are only 12 of them. The rest of these appointees of the Governor General were promotions or transfers of men already in office in the Philippine Islands, thus showing conclusively that the Governor General, in his appointments, has sought to observe the civil-service law of the Philippine Islands not only in letter but in spirit, and that there has been less disposition to put men in office for political reasons in his administration than in any other administration that has taken place.

Mr. Denison, in a paragraph, uses this language:

> These facts speak for themselves, and I doubt if many precedents can be found for the installation of a new administration entering upon a radically different public policy with so few changes in the old personnel.

In another paragraph he says, after referring to the changes in office:

> So far as I know, it has never been suggested that any one of these separations was brought about on any political-spoils basis to make a place for an American of another party.

Mr. President, this is the testimony of a Republican official. It is a report sent by him to the Civil Service Reform League of the United States, and it is a conclusive answer to the charge brought against the Governor General.

Now let me refer to the next statement in this letter from Mr. AUSTIN, that the places have been largely filled by inexperienced Filipinos. Perhaps the best way to reply to that is to quote the civil-service law of the Philippine Islands, enacted under Republican control. Is the Senator aware that that law provides that preference shall be given to Filipinos? I read section 6:

> In the appointment of officers and employees under the provisions of this act the appointing officer, in his selection from the list of eligibles furnished to him by the director of civil service, shall, where other qualifications are equal, prefer, first, natives of the Philippine Islands, or persons who have, under and by virtue of the treaty of Paris, acquired the political rights of natives of the islands; second, persons who have served as members of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States and have been honorably discharged therefrom; third—

And this is the last—

> Third, citizens of the United States.

That is the law of the Philippine Islands. The law directs the Governor General to give preference to the Filipinos. That law was enacted at a time when Taft and others were demanding that the Philippine Islands should be for the Filipinos, and it is that law and that policy which the Governor General is carrying out. If the author of that letter has any criticism, it is on the law, and it is on Mr. Taft and other Governors General and Secretaries of War who declared for this policy.

It is also stated in this letter, introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire, that the Spanish War veterans are indignant. Not the Spanish War veterans of the Philippine Islands, however, because the Spanish War veterans of the Philippine Islands are given a preference, second place, in this law; and every Spanish War veteran who either voluntarily or involuntarily has been separated from the service since Mr. Harrison became Governor General has, if he requested it, been given a place in the civil service of the United States under this administration. There is not the record of a single Spanish War veteran who has made that request who has not received that consideration; and, so far as I can find out, the number who have been separated has been very small. The only list I was able to procure embraced 22.

There may be some political Spanish War veterans who are trying to make some political capital in this country, but there is nothing in the administration of the law in the Philippine Islands which justifies any such charge.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator spoke of 22 separations from the service. Does the Senator know for what reason? Was there no further need of them, or was it for incompetency, or what was the cause?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Some were temporary, others were cases of superannuation, and reasons of that sort.

Mr. VARDAMAN. There is not any law, I understand, which requires the Government to give a man employment because he served in the Spanish-American War; that is, to give him employment when his services are not needed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It has been the policy, I believe, of this administration, and I think it has been the policy of other administrations, that men have served in the Philippine Islands under the Government under a contract for two years. They do not go there as permanent employees; it is not intended that they should; and when their terms expire or when they finally retire, for one reason or another, the Government over here, not only under other administrations but under this administration, has undertaken to procure for them positions in this country.

In this connection, Mr. President, and in order that this matter may be pretty conclusively shown, I shall ask leave to insert in the RECORD a statement given by the Secretary of War, Mr. Garrison, something over a year ago, covering conclusively this same subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire that these matters may be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my speech and not in the midst of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Reporters will attend to that. [See appendix.]

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This author furthermore says that Gov. Gen. Harrison was brought up in the Tammany school of politics, and was taught that to the victor belongs the spoils. I had the pleasure of serving with Gov. Gen. Harrison in the House of Representatives, and what I say will be indorsed by everyone who served with him. There was not in that House during the period of his service a more intelligent, disinterested, and patriotic Member of that House than Gov. Gen. Harrison. His whole reputation made in the United States was the reputation of a public man rendering a public service, and I have no doubt that he has continued that course in the Philippine Islands. To charge him with perverting the public service and with bringing the spoils system into the Philippine government is an insistance so monstrous that I can not speak of it without some emphasis.

Mr. President, I think that I have concluded an analysis of that attack upon the Philippine government and upon Mr. Harrison. I hope it will be the last of an effort to drag into this important discussion something which has not any place here. The Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] says that the merits or demerits of this administration or of others have nothing to do with this case. This is a debate for the purpose of enabling the Senate to decide whether it proposes to bring to the Philippine Islands certainty as to the future, whether it proposes to enlarge the degree of self-government there in accordance with our pledges and in accordance with the interests of those islands, whether it proposes to insert in the preamble of the bill the statement that it is the purpose of the United States to give to the Philippine people their independence when the United States decides that it is for their permanent interest to do so. Those are the two questions before the Senate. The merits or demerits of an administration over there have nothing to do with the case, and I trust we may have no more of that discussion in this debate.

APPENDIX.

THE CIVIL SERVICE IN THE PHILIPPINES.

[Memorandum prepared at the request of the Civil Service Reform League by Winfred T. Denison, secretary of the interior of the Philippine government.]

I.

APPOINTMENTS AND REMOVALS BY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

The Governor General's appointments are subject to confirmation by the commission. They cover positions of responsible executive character and of such power as would permit incumbents who were out of sympathy with the Governor General to defeat his policies.

The only removals by the Governor General (resignations on his request) have been the following:

RESIGNATIONS ON REQUEST.

Position.	Reason.
First assistant executive secretary.	Requested (1) because Governor General desired a person of his own selection, and (2) because considered out of sympathy with new policy.
Collector of customs.	Republican national committee man and considered active politically.
Deputy collector of internal revenue.	Requested. Superannuated.
Director of printing.	Insubordination in initiating campaign in United States against reduction of salaries without consulting Governor General.
Assistant director of printing.	Insubordination in initiating campaign in United States against reduction of salaries without consulting Governor General.
Lieutenant governor of Lepanto.	Disciplinary reasons.
Prosecuting attorney.	Requested for cause.
Chief of police.	Requested for nonpolitical reasons.
First assistant city engineer.	Requested by municipal board.
City attorney.	Requested by municipal board.
Director of lands.	Requested because of disapproval by Governor General of policy regarding friar-land leases.

VOLUNTARY RESIGNATIONS.

The only voluntary resignations have been the following:

Position.	Reason.
Director of agriculture.	To return to United States.
Director of prisons.	To become editor of the Manila Daily Bulletin.
Assistant director of prisons.	To accept position in Federal service in United States.
Justice, supreme court.	To accept appointment as secretary of finance and justice and member Philippine Commission.
Judge, court of first instance.	To enter private practice.
Judge, court of first instance.	To become United States judge at Shanghai.
Judge, court of first instance.	To become president public utilities board.
Judge, court of first instance.	To become attorney general.
Member, municipal board.	To return to United States.
Secretary, municipal board.	To enter private business.
Assistant director of lands.	Dissatisfied with appointment of Filipino director.

NEW APPOINTEES.

The only persons appointed by the Governor General who were not in office here under the old administration are the following:

Name and position.	Remarks.
S. Bonsal, member municipal board.	Later appointed secretary to Governor General, combining the three offices of secretary to Governor General, private secretary to Governor General, and first assistant executive secretary. Later appointed member board of public utility commissioners, which he now holds. Democrat, but never active politically. Well-known former diplomat and newspaper correspondent.
B. Herstein, collector of customs.	An appraiser in the New York customhouse and former expert on President Taft's Tariff Board. Not a Democrat in politics.
James R. Burgett, assistant attorney, bureau of justice.	From Land Bureau in Washington; has since been appointed auxiliary judge of the court of first instance.
Venancio Concepcion, deputy collector of internal revenue.	Was a member of the First Philippine Assembly.
Dr. Albert P. Fitzsimmons, member municipal board.	Formerly in Philippines as an Army surgeon; experienced in municipal affairs as mayor of his home city in Nebraska. Democrat in politics.
Clyde De Witt, member public utilities board.	Many years in the Philippine Islands as teacher. At time of appointment was practicing law in Manila and teaching in the law school. Democrat in politics.

Name and position.	Remarks.
Leon M. Guerrero, member Philippine board Panama-Pacific International Exposition.	Filipino.
Isidro Vamenta, attorney, Department of Mindanao and Sulu.	Filipino.
Judge, court of first instance.	Filipino.
Judge, court of first instance.	Filipino.
Judge, court of first instance.	Filipino.
Assistant director of labor.	Filipino.

It will be observed from the above that only four men—Mr. Bonsal, Dr. Herstein, Mr. Burgett, and Dr. Fitzsimmons—have been brought from the United States by the Governor General, and two of these—Dr. Herstein and Mr. Burgett—were already in the Federal Government service there.

OFFICERS PROMOTED OR TRANSFERRED BY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL (CONFIRMED BY THE COMMISSION).

The following is the list of all officers promoted or transferred by the Governor General, with a statement of positions held by them under the old administration.

I have not burdened this memorandum by the names of the judges of the old court, who were all transferred to the newly organized substitute court of first instance.

Name.	Former position.	Appointed to—
F. W. Carpenter	Executive secretary	Governor Department of Mindanao and Sulu.
Ignacio Villamor	Attorney general	Executive secretary.
Samuel Ferguson	Special agent	Secretary to the Governor General.
Ramon Avancena	Judge, court of first instance.	Attorney general.
George R. Harvey	Solicitor general	Judge, court of first instance.
Rafael Corpus	Delegate from Zambales	Solicitor general; since appointed director of lands.
R. C. Round	Law clerk, bureau of internal revenue.	Assistant attorney, bureau of justice.
R. U. Strong	Law clerk, bureau lands	Do.
W. T. Nolting	Collector of internal revenue.	Director of posts.
J. J. Rafferty	Collector of customs of Zamboanga.	Collector of internal revenue.
W. W. Marquardt	City superintendent of schools.	Second assistant director of education.
H. T. Edwards	Assistant director of agriculture.	Director of agriculture.
W. H Dade	Superintendent San Ramon penal colony.	Director of prisons.
C. G. Thompson	Veterinarian, bureau of agriculture.	Assistant director of prisons.
Mario Guarina	Fiscal, Province of Batanes	Second assistant director of prisons.
Adriano Hernandez	Governor Province of Iloilo	Assistant director of agriculture.
Jose Escaler	Law clerk, assembly	City attorney.
J. W. Quillen	Second assistant director of prisons.	Superintendent Iwahig colony.
E. E. Gessler	Superintendent of work, bureau of printing.	Director of printing.
S. H. Musick	Craftsman instructor, bureau of printing.	Assistant director of printing.
Manuel Araullo	President code committee	Justice, supreme court.
Francisco Artigas	Member code committee	President code committee.
Macario Adriatico	Deputy from Mindoro Province.	Member code committee.
C. E. Unson	Chief provincial division, executive bureau.	Secretary municipal board.
Quintin Paredes	First assistant prosecuting attorney.	Prosecuting attorney.
George Seaver	Assistant chief of police	Chief of police.
Alexander Harmon	Police captain	Assistant chief of police.
L. B. Bewley	Division superintendent of schools.	Superintendent city schools.
Jose P. Katigbak	Chief division street construction and bridges.	First assistant city engineer.
Manuel Tinio	Director of labor	Director of lands.
B. Monreal	Assistant director of labor	Director of labor.
V. de Jesus	District health officer	Assistant director of health.
T. J. Nihill	Clerk, bureau of supply	Superintendent bureau of posts.
Anacleto Diaz	Assistant attorney, bureau of justice.	Assistant prosecuting attorney, Manila.
Carlos Sobral	Assistant prosecuting attorney.	Do.
Teodorico Angeles	Treasurer city of Baguio	Council, city of Baguio.
Alvin J. Cox	Assistant director of science.	Director bureau of science.
R. M. Shearer	Special agent	Third assistant executive secretary.
W. W. Barclay	do	Fourth assistant executive secretary.
W. A. Randall	Bureau of audits	Special agent.
Rafael Crame	Lieutenant colonel, constabulary.	Assistant chief, constabulary.
John R. White	do	Do.
Ralph W. Jones	Major, constabulary	Do.
Diego Gloria	Assistant attorney, bureau of justice.	Assistant attorney, bureau of justice.
F. Feria	do	Do.
Antonio Villareal	do	Do.
Luis P. Torres	do	Do.
J. P. de Tavera	do	Do.
C. J. Gerkin	do	Do.
Emilio Mapa	do	Do.
W. M. Connor	Attorney, department of Mindanao and Sulu.	Judge, court of first instance.
W. E. Jones	Provincial treasurer, Pangasinan.	Assistant director of lands.
W. W. Barclay	Fourth assistant executive secretary.	Director general, Philippine Board, Panama-Pacific International Exposition.
C. W. Olson	Treasurer Mountain Province.	Treasurer Mountain Province.

These facts speak for themselves, and I doubt if many precedents can be found for the installation of a new administration entering upon a radically different public policy, with so few changes in the old personnel.

Perhaps I should specifically mention the action of the Governor General in reference to the reorganization of the court of first instance. He was bitterly criticized in advance on the hypothesis that he was going to use the opportunity for political spoils; but, in fact, he reappointed every one of the old judges excepting the four who resigned voluntarily for their own reasons, as stated above.

This record seems to me peculiarly remarkable when we consider the bitterness with which the new administration's change of attitude toward the Filipinos was resented by many of the American officers of the old administration.

II.

SEPARATIONS FROM THE CLASSIFIED SERVICE.

The following is a tabulation showing the number of separations of Americans from the service for the fiscal years indicated. No data are available for the fiscal year 1906. The figures are taken from the Fourteenth Annual Report of the Bureau of Civil Service (p. 6), of which copies are inclosed:

Fiscal year ending June 30.	Voluntary separations of Americans.	Involuntary separations of Americans.	Total.
1903	617	269	886
1904	787	313	1,100
1905	614	195	809
1907	536	90	626
1908	407	77	484
1909	376	62	438
1910	508	92	600
1911	481	71	552
1912	412	50	462
1913	461	44	505

During the first year of Gov. Gen. Harrison's administration (Oct. 1, 1913, to Oct. 1, 1914) the figures for the same columns were as follows:

Voluntary	503
Involuntary	213
Total	716

This tabulation shows that the changes have not been so extensive as they were in the years 1903, 1904, and 1905 of the Republican administrations. I believe, also, though the figures are not available, that there was a still larger change in 1906.

This early period (from 1903 to 1906) was the first period of considerable enlargement of the Filipino influence in the Government, and undoubtedly the number of changes made was due to that policy.

The same cause, together with the absolute necessity for reduction of expenses, was the reason why similarly numerous changes have been made under Governor General Harrison's administration.

So far as I know it has never been suggested that any one of these separations was brought about on any political spoils basis to make a place for an American of another party.

The policy of "Filipinization," so-called, is a definite policy of our colonial government pursued here under instructions from the President. It necessarily involves the displacement of even efficient Americans (even though guilty of no fault) by Filipinos as soon as Filipinos have been trained for the service.

It seems clear to me that changes made under either of these policies (the policy of Filipinization or the policy of reduction of force for reasons of economy) must be free of criticism under the civil-service principle.

I have never heard any contention that any of these employees have been removed on any political spoils basis. If your association has received any suggestion of any such thing, I know the Governor General will be very glad to be given an opportunity to reply.

III.

ALLEGED HARDSHIPS OF AMERICANS LEAVING THE SERVICE.

I have seen some statements of more or less authority to the effect that extraordinary hardships were worked by these separations, and that Americans were left destitute on the streets of Manila.

Inclosed is a tabulation giving the name of every one of the employees separated and the amount of money paid him at the time of his separation, either in salary due, commutation of accrued leave, reimbursement or traveling expenses, or commutation of transportation [table omitted]. It shows payments aggregating in some instances over ₱4,000 ($2,000 gold), and averaging about ₱1,000 ($500 gold per person.

The status of American employees here has always been subject to this fundamental principle of our colonial policy—that we are here temporarily to train the Filipinos for self-government.

Thus the Americans in this service are not under appointments during good behavior, but under special contracts for two years' service, as appears from the form of these contracts inclosed and from section 29 of the Philippine civil-service act (act No. 1698), passed in 1907.

On the same principle this act provides (sec. 6) for a preference of Filipinos in original appointments.

Finally President Wilson by his order of June 15, 1914, amended section 10 of Rule X so as to read as follows, thereby explicitly incorporating in the civil-service rules the principle, already long understood, of displacement of Americans by Filipinos:

"An officer or employee occupying a competitive position in the Philippine classified service who has served three years or more therein may be transferred to the Federal classified service, subject to the provisions of these rules; but the commission may authorize the transfer of an officer or employee who has served two years in the Philippine classified service and who has been separated by necessary reduction of force or by displacement by a Filipino, if he is especially recommended by the War Department because of his efficiency and good character. In all cases of proposed transfer from the Philippine classified service the War Department shall furnish the commission for its consideration all relevant information contained in its files, together with the service record of the employee."

* * * * * * *

The other reason which has caused these separations is the reduction of expenses. Gov. Gen. Harrison was confronted at the very outset of his administration with an absolute necessity for a very large reduction in expenses. Over a million pesos of this saving was made by cutting down salaries and abolishing positions.

If the league desires further information, I shall be most glad to give it.

WINFRED T. DENISON,
Secretary of the Interior, Philippine Islands.

STATEMENT GIVEN THE PRESS BY THE SECRETARY OF WAR.

JULY 23, 1914.

I notice in the papers of yesterday a statement, purporting to proceed from the Spanish-American War veterans in the Philippines, alleging unfair treatment of veterans who have been in the Philippine service by the Philippine Government. I say "purporting" because the communication has not come to us officially, and it may be that it is an error to attribute the statement to the Spanish-American War veterans.

In some of the papers the headlines state that as many as 500 Spanish-American War veterans have been let out since the new administration took charge, and other similar statements appear in other papers. This whole statement is so wide of truth that I desire to state the facts. My reason is not merely to correct this particular misstatement, but to bring to the attention of the public a widespread, thoroughly organized, and vigorous propaganda of misstatement of facts concerning the Philippine Islands and the governmental administration thereof. I am not in the least resentful of any sort of criticism anybody feels called upon to make concerning our relations to the Philippines and what we are doing or hope to do therein, but I do feel that the public should be warned and cautioned against accepting as facts these conscious and purposeful misstatements.

Very recently there have been conspicuous examples showing that there is a design to mislead the public and make it very difficult to treat the subject from the proper point of view.

But recently it was reported that there had been a great increase in the death rate and much more sickness than ever before in the islands, owing to the fact that Dr. Heiser had been supplanted. The fact is that Dr. Heiser has not been supplanted. At the time that the publication appeared he had not even left the islands, although he had been granted leave of absence. Another report stated that the new government had let out 15 American heads of divisions in a particular bureau. The fact is that there were only three heads of divisions in the bureau and one of them had resigned.

In this particular instance, concerning the Spanish-American War veterans, the facts are as follows:

I have before me, loaned by a periodical, an unsigned, unauthenticated, printed folder, purporting to be a copy of resolutions adopted by the Department Veteran Army of the Philippines at its convention held at Baguio, P. I., April 8 to 12, 1914. It contains no allegation that 500 veterans of the Spanish War had been let out of service, though the statement is made therein that 500 Americans had been forced out of the service within four months; and this statement is made in such a way as to mislead, apparently, a good part of the press.

As a matter of fact, when Gov. Gen. Harrison, himself a veteran of the Spanish War, reached the Philippine Islands the number of Spanish War veterans in the Philippine civil service was very small. There had been a time when the majority of the American civil employees of the Philippine government were veterans of the Spanish-American War and the insurrection in the Philippines; but, in 1903, 617 Americans voluntarily left that service and 269 left involuntarily, a total of 886, or 32 per cent of the American personnel. In 1904, 787 Americans left voluntarily and 313 involuntarily, a total of 1,100, or 34 per cent of the American personnel. In the later comparisons I shall only refer to subsequent years, when the entire number of Americans in the Philippine service was kept at approximately 2,600.

On Gov. Gen. Harrison's arrival there was in the civil service of the Philippine Islands, and had been for a number of years, a continuously changing body of Americans maintained at approximately 2,600. Of these Americans for the eight preceding years approximately 500 each year had voluntarily withdrawn from the service. The number leaving in the past year has been slightly greater, due to necessary retrenchment. For the seven months ending April 30, which included the first seven months of Gov. Gen. Harrison's administration of the Philippine Islands, 497 Americans had left the service. Of this number 302 had resigned voluntarily, 144 had left the service due to reduction of force, 12 had resigned for various reasons at the request of the Governor General, 18 had been dropped for unexplained leave of absence, 4 had died, and 17 had been discharged for various reasons under the civil-service laws.

It should be noted that in 1905 and 1906, when an effort was made at retrenchment, 1,275 Americans left the civil service of the Philippine Islands in two years, so that there has been nothing remarkable in the number of Americans that have left the Philippine civil service for all causes since the arrival of Gov. Gen. Harrison in the Philippines.

Now, as to the number of these leaving the service who are Spanish War veterans and of the unfair treatment which they have subsequently received:

On January 10, 1914, the director of the civil service of the Philippine Islands prepared for the Governor General a list showing the ex-soldiers, ex-sailors, and ex-marines who had been dropped from the Philippine civil service since his arrival on account of reduction of force. This included a total of 22, not half of whom were Spanish War veterans. Of this number 4 have been transferred to the United States civil service in the islands and 6 were transferred to the United States civil service at home. This total of 10 who were transferred to the civil service included every man on the list who applied for a transfer. Other changes have taken place since January 10, but this quite fully illustrates the small number of veterans affected thereby and the subsequent treatment which they had received.

In fact, it is well known to all persons who have been for any length of time in the Philippine civil service that we have the most liberal provisions governing their transfer to the United States civil service. Heretofore this has required three years' service in the Philippine Islands, but in order that no man might be prejudiced, due to the reduction in the American force found necessary in the Philippine Islands, President Wilson has reduced this period to two years in cases of persons who have been deprived of positions in the Philippines by reduction of force.

The facts, further, are that no employees in the Philippines have been discharged by Gov. Harrison except in accordance with law and the civil-service regulations and in the manner customarily followed heretofore in the islands.

This department certainly has no grievance against ex-soldiers petitioning for consideration, but such petitions should be based on facts and not be susceptible of use in a campaign of misrepresentation and falsehood.

I give attention to this particular misrepresentation because I feel so strongly that we have a very difficult duty to perform in the Philippines and that it only can be properly performed in the event public opinion in this country proceeds upon the facts as they are and not upon willful misstatements thereof, which can only serve to misdirect and mislead opinion and judgment.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I want to try and discuss for a little while this bill and review some of the evidence and some of the arguments on both sides. The question of the maladministration, if it be such, in the Philippine Islands at this time does not really go to the discussion and merits of the matter here. I assume that the Governor General found a good many Republicans in office and did what he could to get rid of them in a legal way, just as probably we Republicans will be trying in a couple of years from now to get rid of the Democrats in office in a legal way. So we might as well be perfectly frank about that.

Mr. President, the question whether it was wise to take the Philippine Islands is a question no one can throw much light upon at this time. It is really water under the bridge. I believe nearly all our citizenship think now that it was a great mistake. The question in the present bill and the declaration of the preamble, which, I take it, is the main bone of contention, ought not to be a question between parties. It ought not to be a political question. The right to liberty and the hopes and aspirations of 8,000,000 people ought not to be a political football, to be kicked back and forth when different parties come into power. For my part, I am not going to discuss it in any political way, because I think it has no place in partisan politics.

What are we in the Philippine Islands for, and how did we happen to get there? I believe that on the morning after the battle of Manila, when it was heralded to the world that Dewey had sailed in and destroyed the Spanish fleet in a couple of hours, with plenty of time to spare for breakfast, there were very few of our citizens who really knew where the Philippine Islands are, and we had no policy at all framed in our minds about it. Our country had gone into that war on a holy mission to free human beings. Just a few miles from our border were scenes of brutality and barbarity that the enlightened conscience of the American people would not tolerate. We went into that war to free Cuba, and no nation ever undertook a more splendid mission for humanity than that. In carrying on that work we seemed to stumble into the Philippines, and stumbling into those islands, or brought there by Providence, whichever it might be, we tried to do a great work for those people. President McKinley, with reference to the reasons for going into the islands, said at one time:

> The Philippines are ours not to exploit but to develop, to civilize, to educate, to train in the science of self-government.

I happened to be at a banquet in Chicago when President McKinley had traveled through the West and had rather sensed the opinion of our American people on this subject, and I think at that banquet he gave the first public utterance to his idea that we should keep the Philippines, at least for a certain period, for their development and for their own good. That statement, I remember, was received with great enthusiasm.

Mr. President, we have done that, and what a wonderful work we have done in the Philippine Islands, in sanitation, agriculture, trade, commerce, and schools. We developed better ideals and helped in developing a better character of government. It has brought us a multitude of troublesome questions.

It is difficult to bring one's mind to an absolutely fixed conviction as to what ought to be done under the circumstances that confront us in the Philippine Islands, and it does seem to me that Congress can not have before it a more important question than this. It does not deal so much with property and commercialism as it deals with the rights and the lives and the liberties of struggling human beings, and we have not had any more important question before us since the days of the Civil War.

What is best for them? What is best for us? Is there a moral trusteeship upon us? Have we fulfilled it? Should we say to these people that at a certain time we will give you independence, or should we say anything about it at all?

President McKinley at the time he was called upon to deal with this subject in its inception called from the Federal bench a great jurist and a great citizen. I can well imagine that that jurist did not desire to undertake the work in the Philippine Islands. The climatic conditions were not conducive to happiness. It was an untried field, a difficult one, where failure was apt to result. Yet this great jurist, with a wonderful patriotism which he has always shown, both in public and private life, gave up his position on the bench, took his life in his hands, and went to the Philippine Islands to do that great work for humanity. When his life story is written his accomplishment there, his work, his devotion to these poor, struggling people, struggling toward the light of freedom, will be recorded as the greatest achievement in the life of Mr. Taft.

In his testimony before the committee he said, with reference to President McKinley inviting him to go out there, that the President said to him with the homely expression, when Mr. Taft was hesitating about whether to accept the responsibility, "We have got the bear by the tail, and we have got to stay and hold it; and I want you to go out and do what you can." Mr. Taft further said:

> The feeling that we ought not to go there, that we ought not to be there, and that we ought to get out as soon as we can, has suggested reasons for it. The first is, or was, that it was unconstitutional for us to be there and conduct a practical government, and that was in the issue in the insular cases known in the colloquial phrase of the day, "Does the Constitution follow the flag or not?" The second reason was that the Philippines were entirely ready for self-government.

I have suggested these different proposition that I want to go into detail a little more about; but before that, Mr. President, the bill seems to have been discussed by some upon the theory that we are granting independence now to the Philippine Islands.

Somewhere in the testimony—I can not turn readily to it—Mr. Taft, I think, said that outside of the preamble he had very little objection to the bill. This bill, outside of the preamble, is merely an attempt to enlarge the powers of self-government in the Philippine Islands.

Now, what does it do? I want to refer to that for just a moment or two. Section 3 of the bill is substantially the same as the organic law of the Philippine Islands. It is similar to our Bill of Rights, except there is no provision as to jury trial, and it has been rather startling to me in my study of the bill and this question that the Filipinos have no jury trial; judges try men and sentence them to be executed. It is true the supreme court may review the entire case, but a man does not have a right to a jury trial.

Then, in the same section, on page 5, there is the position which I assume will attract some attention in the further progress of this discussion. Originally in the bill this provision was inserted:

> Polygamous or plural marriages are forever prohibited.

The committee changed that to this phraseology:

> The contracting of polygamous or plural marriages hereafter is prohibited.

The fact is, Mr. President, that many good people came before our committee and insisted that there should be no change in the polygamous marriages or no prohibition of polygamous marriages in the islands, and their argument seemed to have weight, however unpopular it might be in our own country. The very fact that Congress now in this bill is going to recognize polygamy shows the utter folly and incongruity of our Nation trying to govern a race of people where we are compelled to sanction present polygamy. That is a question which will be up, I assume, for discussion and debate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will pardon me, before he leaves that subject I wish to ask him a question. Do I understand that under the bill as originally drawn the practice of polygamy would be prohibited?

Mr. KENYON. It would.

Mr. NORRIS. After it is passed?

Mr. KENYON. It would.

Mr. NORRIS. As amended now it would not have that effect?

Mr. KENYON. It would not.

Mr. NORRIS. It would only prohibit the contracting of plural marriages in the future?

Mr. KENYON. Let the Senator get this distinction. Under the old bill—I refer to that bill which passed the House and was reported to the Senate by the committee at the last session—the provision was inserted "polygamous or plural marriages are forever prohibited." It was contended by people, and most excellent people, who knew these Filipinos, that that provision should be changed; that it could only be enforced by bloodshed and practical war. So that has been changed now to prohibit polygamous marriages in the future. I want to say to the Senator that families have grown up there with children, and property rights are involved. I do not believe at all in polygamy of any kind, but it seems to me it would be almost impossible to change that situation, and as we expect to give up these islands it may be best to do nothing about it. It is rather abhorrent to think of polygamy existing under our flag.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. KENYON. Gladly.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator says property rights are involved. I should like to ask him to state to the Senate if he has any information on that subject whatever? It was my pleasure to visit the Philippine Islands a few years ago, and my recollection is that in all the islands where polygamy was practiced there was no ownership of lands. In this connection I want to say that at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to prohibit polygamy in the islands.

Mr. KENYON. Let me answer the Senator's question as well as I can. Property rights among the Moros of course are an illusive proposition. It seems that the leading men claim they own large areas of territory, and while there is no sort of title or anything of that character, they simply say everything which the Government does not own is ours.

Mr. NORRIS rose.

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know that I have a further question. I think probably the Senator has made it plain. It seems to me that if the committee thought it would be difficult to legislate about the situation they could have found a precedent in our own country when we legislated in regard to polygamy in the Territories, particularly in Utah. It is almost shocking to an American that we should pass a law which would permit polygamy, at least during the present generation.

Mr. KENYON. This proposed law does not permit polygamy. It simply says nothing about present polygamy, but proposes to prohibit polygamy in the future.

Mr. NORRIS. Is not that the effect of it?

Mr. KENYON. The effect of it is simply not to disturb existing conditions.

Mr. NORRIS. If a man had four or five wives in the Philippine Islands, the polygamous nature would be continuous.

Mr. KENYON. If he was courageous enough to undertake the enterprise.

Mr. NORRIS. There are a good many of them, and it requires courage. They have undertaken it, and the committee did not have courage enough to go up against it.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa to what extent polygamy exists in the islands at the present time.

Mr. KENYON. Only, as I understand it, among the Moros. The Moros comprise about 300,000 people of a total population of some 8,000,000.

Mr. WORKS. Of course, if we expect to maintain our government over the islands permanently, I would have no hesitation about insisting upon the abolition of polygamous marriages or the practice of polygamy; but if we are to turn the islands over to the Filipinos themselves in a short time, as I hope we may, it may be wiser to let that institution alone.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. BORAH. It is pretty certain, if we are to judge the Filipinos by the rest of the human race, if we do turn the islands over to the Filipinos within any reasonable length of time, until the habits, customs, and traditions shall have been uprooted and educated out of them, they will go back to these practices, and it is useless to deal with them. Indeed, if we propose to turn the islands over in any reasonable length of time, we had just as well ignore those traditions and habits as to try to correct them in the course of 5 or 10 or 15 years. Those habits and those traditions and those characteristics are not eliminated and taken out of the character of a people in a decade.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Idaho, I assume, understands that polygamy does not exist throughout all the islands. It is only among the Moros.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator has evidently given very careful consideration to the subject, and he may give me information upon the point I have in my mind. The English Government, I understand, deals with some people who practice polygamy. Can the Senator tell us in what manner the English Government has dealt with that question? Has it attempted in any way to get rid of it?

Mr. BORAH. It has dealt with it by simply ignoring its existence.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They have recognized that it was useless for them to interfere with a custom of that character that had existed for many centuries.

Mr. BORAH. In dealing with the people of India many of the customs and habits and characteristics of the Indian people are in contravention of and contradistinguished from the English civilization, and in so far as they are so they have practically left them where they found them. They have not undertaken to reform those conditions at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If they had, it would have meant serious trouble, perhaps worse than the evil itself.

Mr. KENYON. Exactly, and that is the principle the committee adopted.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator will allow me another question, the people who practice polygamy are Mohammedans, I understand.

Mr. KENYON. They are Mohammedans.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And a warlike people?

Mr. KENYON. I think so.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They are inclined to be rather tenacious of their customs and practices, are they not?

Mr. KENYON. That is true.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What does the Senator think would be the result if we should attempt to get rid of that situation down there?

Mr. KENYON. By abolishing polygamy?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. There could be only one result. There is no question about it. It would be bloodshed and strife and revolt.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That means the loss of a great many American lives before we get through?

Mr. KENYON. Of course it does.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask a question right along that line.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Senator from Utah asked the very question I was going to put to the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield, and to whom?

Mr. KENYON. I yield first to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN].

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to ask the Senator if he can state the percentage of population of the Philippine Islands that engage in this polygamous custom?

Mr. KENYON. In giving the figures which I do I do not mean to say that all these people are engaged in polygamous practices. I said there were about 300,000 population of Moros. It is the leaders among the Moros who have the most wives. That is considered a great distinction, and possibly there are not enough to go around to the same extent that the leading citizens have them. So others have fewer wives.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The people who indulge in these practices now number 300,000?

Mr. KENYON. All I can say is that the Moro population is something like 300,000 and polygamy is practiced among them. They are Mohammedans, and under the Mohammedan religion they are entitled to a certain number of wives.

Mr. SHAFROTH. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that the total number of what are classed as the uncivilized population of the Philippines is 647,740.

Mr. KENYON. My figures were about that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The Moros constitute about two-thirds of those, and they have the Mohammedan religion and consequently adhere to their institutions.

Mr. KENYON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. Before the Senator passes I should like a little more definite information. Can the Senator tell us whether any of the members of either branch of the legislature at this time are polygamous?

Mr. KENYON. My understanding is that they are not.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator feel that there is any great degree of risk in reposing in the Philippine Legislature the matter of polygamy in the islands?

Mr. KENYON. I do not.

Mr. WALSH. Then, in view of this information, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Idaho if we are to understand that he will resist the granting of independence to the Filipinos until this practice is exterminated.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know whether or not I shall be on earth at that time. [Laughter.]

Mr. KENYON. We hope the Senator will be.

Mr. BORAH. If I should remain here, or if I should live the length of time allotted to Moses, I might have an opportunity to pass upon that question, but I do not anticipate that I should have such opportunity prior to that. I do say, however, it is perfectly futile to interfere with the customs, habits, and religion of these people—ingrained into their very fiber—in the hopes of effecting any permanent results for years and years—even decades. If we are going to stay there five or ten years only, we are flying in the face of all history to suppose that we can permanently eradicate these customs which are a part of their life and their faith. They would return to them before our ships of final departure were behind the waves.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has stated that an attempt on our part absolutely to prohibit polygamy would result in much bloodshed. I want to ask the Senator, if he thinks that is true, why, although perhaps to a smaller extent, the passage of the bill as the committee has reported it would not result in bloodshed? In other words, would not the people who have not contracted polygamous marriages and desire the right to do so be just as much inclined to go to war if they were prohibited from what they conceive to be their right as the polygamous portion of the country would be to continue that practice?

Mr. KENYON. Unquestionably. It is going to make trouble; it is going to be a hard provision to enforce. There was much argument and evidence in favor of ignoring the question absolutely.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I understood the Senator from Iowa to say, in answer to the question of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], that he felt no hesitancy in leaving this question of polygamy to the legislature.

Mr. KENYON. Possibly that inference might be drawn. The Governor General appoints the members of the senate from the non-Christian tribes; so I feel there would not be any particular danger of representatives sitting in the Philippine Legislature who were polygamists.

Mr. BORAH. What I mean is this: As I inferred, the Senator's statement was to the effect that undoubtedly it would be perfectly safe to trust the Philippine Legislature with the responsibility of eliminating polygamy in the Philippines.

Mr. KENYON. I would not want to take that position. I am not worried over it, however, either one way or the other. The Philippine Assembly did pass an act prohibiting polygamy.

Mr. BORAH. After reading of the sensitive regard of the Filipino people for slavery I have not any very great assurance that it would deal drastically with polygamy.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator mean by that that slavery exists in the Philippines?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I have no doubt about it.

Mr. KENYON. Is there not a law prohibiting slavery?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. But slavery still exists?

Mr. BORAH. It still exists.

Mr. KENYON. Well, we have laws prohibiting murder, of course, but murders still go on.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; but slavery exists in the Philippines through the connivance of those whose duty it is to enforce the law.

Mr. KENYON. It exists, if at all, through a system of peonage, which grew to very large proportions in this country, to such an extent that the question has gone through the courts to the Supreme Court of the United States. I understand the only slavery in the Philippines is along the same lines. Of course it is bad enough, but we have the same thing in our country.

Mr. BORAH. Peonage is bad enough, but there is other slavery in the Philippines aside from peonage.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. COLT. Will the Senator from Iowa enlighten me with respect to polygamy? What has been the policy of the Government during the past 15 years?

Mr. KENYON. To let it alone; to pay no attention to it.

Mr. COLT. Then, this is a change?

Mr. KENYON. It is a change. I am certain the organic act says nothing about polygamy. The Senator has the bill before him, I think, and he can refresh his memory as to that.

Another change that has been made is to strike out—

That the rule of taxation in said islands shall be uniform.

Another change is as to the indebtedness of the Philippine government. Under this bill that government is permitted to incur an indebtedness of $17,000,000. Under the organic act, I think, the indebtedness was $5,000,000; then it was increased by subsequent acts of Congress. In any event, the indebtedness for the friar lands is something like $7,000,000, and the other indebtedness is about $5,000,000, so that the indebtedness now is something like $12,000,000. This proposes to increase the power to go in debt to the amount of $17,000,000.

Some of the qualifications for elector are changed. One of the qualifications now is the ownership of property; that still remains. Personally, I do not like a property qualification for voting. Then, those who have heretofore exercised the right of suffrage are given the right to vote. We have changed the bill in that respect. Instead of enumerating all the officials and provincial governors under the very difficult names that were inserted in the other bill, this bill simply covers the matter by the statement "those who under existing law are legal voters and have exercised the right of suffrage." Then, the privilege of suffrage has also been given to such as the Philippine Legislature may prescribe. That is a new provision.

There is no veto by the Governor General under the present plan. The commission is practically the senate. They, of course, can veto legislation by the house. This bill provides for a veto by the Governor, and if the bill is then passed over the Governor's veto it shall go to the President of the United States, unless the Governor may in meantime have changed his mind, and he is given the opportunity to then sign the bill, so that it need not be sent to the President. There are certain laws, however, that must receive the approval of the President of the United States—immigration laws, tariff laws, and others that I do not call to mind at this time.

Another very important change proposed in this bill in the interest of an enlarged self-government is the election of Resident Commissioners to the United States by the people. The commissioners are now elected by the legislature. It was thought that their election by the people would help to develop a national spirit and help in the experiment of self-government. That is a very important change.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Iowa has been interrupted so much——

Mr. KENYON. I am very glad to be interrupted——

Mr. GRONNA. That I hesitate to again interrupt him. I desire to say, however, that I have had pending before the Committee on the Philippines an amendment providing for prohibition in the islands. I will admit that I did not appear before the committee and press the amendment. The reason I did not do so was that I did not think the bill would be reported to the Senate so soon. I want to ask the Senator from Iowa whether or not my amendment was considered by the committee?

Mr. KENYON. I do not remember. I shall have to carom that inquiry over to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think, Mr. President, that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] introduced his amendment at the last session and that it was at that time considered by the committee; but at the brief meeting of the committee, which was held after the assembling of Congress at this session, the Senate bill as it had been perfected at that time and only such amendments as were suggested by the War Department were considered; so I think the Senator's amendment has not been considered since the last session.

Mr. KENYON. The amendment was given no consideration whatever?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; but it had been considered at the other session.

Mr. KENYON. I wish the Senator from North Dakota would offer his amendment to the bill.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I intend to offer the amendment on the floor of the Senate; but, of course, it will not be in order to do so until the committee amendments shall have been disposed of. My amendment, immediately following the provision for the elimination of polygamy provides:

That no intoxicating drink or drug shall be manufactured for sale or gift, imported for sale or gift, or sold or offered for sale or gift for use as a beverage.

If the Senator from Iowa will pardon me for just a moment further, I desire to say that we could pass no law that would be more beneficial to the Filipino people than the very provision which I have suggested.

Mr. KENYON. I thoroughly agree with the Senator, and I shall be very glad to vote for his amendment.

It is a curious thing, Mr. President, that in the islands they now have a prohibitory law for the non-Christian tribes; and the only way a man can get a drink over there is by becoming a Christian.

Mr. CLAPP. Or professing to be one.

Mr. KENYON. It is also true, as I understand, that with our great civilization, which we have taken to the Philippine Islands, we also took the whisky business with us. They had not had it until they received the blessings of our civilization. They made a beverage which they called vino, which they themselves did not drink. It was made of pretty nearly everything, including tobacco juice or tobacco stubs, put into some kind of sirup. As I have said, they did not drink it themselves, but they sold it to foreigners at 5 cents a glass.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. GRONNA. The statement of the Senator from Iowa has suggested to me that it would be very wise for this Congress to provide for prohibition in the islands before the matter goes to the Philippine people, because, as I have understood the Senators who have argued in favor of the bill, it is Christians who are supposed to run the affairs of government in the islands and not the uncivilized tribes.

Mr. KENYON. The Christians have adopted a prohibitory law for the non-Christians and left themselves perfectly free.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to inquire if I correctly understood the Senator from Iowa that prohibition applies only to the non-Christian side?

Mr. KENYON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SHERMAN. I want, further, to inquire if the non-Christian tribes are not in the main Mohammedans?

Mr. KENYON. In the main they are.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is the Senator from Iowa familiar with the Koran?

Mr. KENYON. Not particularly. I do not read it diligently every day. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask if the Mohammedan bible does not require all of those who follow its teachings to become total abstainers? Does not the Koran prohibit the use of alcoholic stimulants of any kind?

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Illinois has a great advantage over the rest of us if he is familiar with the teachings of the Koran.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have read it through, I will state, though I do not claim to be an expert on the Mohammedan faith; but that is found in it. It is a prohibition document.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand, then, the regulation, it seems to me, must be taken as an intention on the part of those who want to spread the Christian religion to offer some inducements to the Mohammedans to give up their religion and become civilized. [Laughter.]

Mr. KENYON. I refer that to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, it is evident from this discussion that as to the Mohammedans of the Philippine Islands—and they are confined principally to the island of Mindanao, to the Jolo group, and to an island to the northwest of there, Palawan—they are quite content to be prohibitionists provided that they can be polygamists. The two go hand in hand. The question arises, if we extend prohibition to the remainder of the islands, whether the rest of the creed and doctrine of the Mohammedans will not also go with it.

Mr. KENYON. I submit to the very wise experience of the Senator from Minnesota.

The bill provides that the supreme court of the islands shall be appointed by the President, while the judges of the courts of first instance are to be appointed by the Governor General. Section 30 contains a provision which I think should receive some attention by the lawyers of the Senate. It provides:

That the Supreme Court of the United States shall have jurisdiction to review, revise, reverse, modify, or affirm the final judgments and decrees of the supreme court of the Philippine Islands in all actions, cases, causes, and proceedings now pending therein or hereafter determined thereby in which the Constitution or any statute, treaty, title, right, or privilege of the United States is involved.

I want to submit for further consideration whether or not that does not mean "when title, right, or privilege under the Constitution of the United States is involved"—I do not understand just what privilege of the United States could be involved—and whether or not by this section the Constitution of the United States is an any way made applicable to the Philippine Islands. The Supreme Court of the United States has said that the Constitution does not follow the flag into the Philippine Islands. I merely suggest that for further consideration.

The greatest change, of course, is the elective senate. Twelve senatorial districts are established, in 11 of which senators will be elected by the people, 2 senators in each district, for periods of four years each. In the other district the senators will be appointed by the Governor General.

I may have omitted some of the changes in this bill, but, in the main, that is about all that this bill does. It is that much of an enlargement of the powers of self-government. This bill does not grant any independence to the Filipino. Few people, I think, can have any fault with the enumerated changes or with this enlargement of the powers of the Philippine people; so that the question about which there will be controversy, about which there is controversy, about which there should be thought and study and meditation, is the preamble, and I wish to discuss that a little in the light of the record.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to his colleague?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. Before my colleague passes to the preamble I want his view with regard to the meaning of section 10. That section provides:

SEC. 10. That, while this act provides that the Philippine government shall have the authority to enact a tariff law, the trade relations between the islands and the United States shall continue to be governed exclusively by laws of the Congress of the United States.

Just what is the scope of the phrase "trade relations," and why is the Philippine Legislature denied the right to legislate in any way upon that subject?

Mr. KENYON. The legislature is not denied the right, as I understand, to legislate on that subject. Tariff acts may be passed by the legislature, but they must be approved by the President; and in that way trade relations will be governed exclusively by the laws of the United States. That is the only way I can justify what appears to be an inconsistency.

Mr. CUMMINS. If that is the purpose of the committee, it seems to me it has not accomplished it in the language used.

Mr. KENYON. We took that provision, I will say to the Senator, just as it came from the House. There has been no change made by the committee of the Senate, and I think it is the same as the provision in the organic act.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am in very grave doubt with regard to the meaning of the phrase "trade relations." I think that is a much broader term than the word "tariff." It may involve a great many things that would not be within a tariff law, as we generally understand such a statute.

Mr. KENYON. Certainly; it might involve questions before the Trade Commission.

Mr. CUMMINS. But this section absolutely withdraws the trade relations of the United States and the Philippine Islands from the jurisdiction of the Philippine Legislature?

Mr. KENYON. Except——

Mr. CUMMINS. No—just a moment—and it further provides that the action of the Philippine Legislature concerning a tariff law affecting other nations than the United States shall be submitted to the President for his approval. That is the way I would interpret this section. I have been curious to know why the Philippine Legislature in this educational process of learning to govern the islands in the interest of their own people is denied the right even to initiate legislation concerning trade relations with the United States.

Mr. KENYON. I can not answer the Senator, unless it be that it is one of those instances of the legislation preserving unquestioned the sovereignty of the United States and taking all questions of trade relations between the islands and the United States away from the Filipinos, except as to the enactment of a tariff law. The reasons for it I do not know. I have never heard any discussion on that point.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. Does not the provision in the section referred to by the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] amount to this, that the Philippine Legislature can enact tariff laws affecting all countries except ours; but in respect to products coming to our country from the Philippine Islands and products going to the Philippine Islands from our country the Government of the United States is paramount; in other words, the Philippine Legislature can legislate on the tariff in respect to other countries, but in respect to our country they are disqualified, that being left to Congress? I think that is the purpose of the provision.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, that is the way I understand it, provided the term "trade relations" is the equivalent of the phrase "a tariff law." I think it somewhat broader, really; I think it would include other things than the mere imposition of duties on imports into the Philippine Islands from the United States.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator has no question that it is a broader term, has he?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I have not. I think it is a broader term. I assume that we intended to preclude the Philippine Legislature from doing anything that would destroy or impair the business that the United States wanted to carry on with the islands. I think we are a little selfish about that.

If we are going to educate them and teach them to maintain themselves, at some time or other they will have to know how to frame a tariff law that will be applicable to the United States as well as to other countries; but, in any event, the exclusion of power ought to be limited to a tariff act, and ought not to embrace everything that would fall within the term "trade relations"; for, mark you, we still retain the right on the part of the President to veto any such legislation, and that ought to be, as it seems to me, a sufficient safeguard for the United States in ordinary times.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I think the suggestion of the Senator is a valuable one. It illustrates the advantage that comes from taking up a bill and discussing it on the floor of the Senate. Committees can not be expected to think of everything in connection with a bill, and I hope the Senator will formulate some language to cover his suggestions. I do not believe that the control of the entire trade relations of the Philippine Islands with other nations ought to be taken away from them. They need to have exercise along that line of governmental activity just as much as any other, and there is an absolute safeguard as to any of their legislation by the veto of the President.

Mr. President, I want to discuss from the record the question of what is best for them, and then I want to discuss also the question of what is best for us. In discussing what is best for them the proposition resolves itself into two parts: First, are they ready for self-government from our viewpoint, and, second, are they ready for self-government from their viewpoint? If they are now ready for self-government from their viewpoint or from our viewpoint, what is our duty; and, if they are not ready, what is our duty as to saying what we will do when they are ready for self-government? We ought to be perfectly frank with these people. If we do not intend that they shall ever have independence, which they do cherish, we ought to say so and strike from the preamble any reference to that subject. Now, after a bill has passed the House with a preamble guaranteeing them independence when they shall have stable government, and after that bill was reported favorably from the committee at the last session of the Senate, it seems to me to strike out that now would be virtually to say to those people, "You shall never have independence." Of course, from our viewpoint as to what is necessary in a race or a people or a country to govern themselves, viewing it from our high standards of government, I do not think there is anybody who will contend that the Filipinos are ready now for self-government.

President Wilson has been quoted here a good deal, and I hesitate to quote him further, but I think I will do so, not as against his policy, which seems to be the usual course of procedure, and in that respect the quotation I am about to make will have the charm of novelty. We can not confer self-government upon a people. It is not a matter of handing it to somebody; it is a matter of growth and development and national character. The President expressed that thought in his Constitutional Government when he said:

> Self-government is not a mere form of institutions, to be had when desired * * *; it is a form of character. It follows upon the long discipline which gives the people self-possession, self-mastery; the habit of order and business, and common counsel, and reverence for law, which alone follow when they themselves become the makers of law.

Then he goes ahead and discusses the Philippine question. He says:

> We can not give them self-government. Self-government is not a thing that can be given to any people, because it is a form of character, and not a form of constitution. We, of all people in the world—

I ask permission, Mr. President, to insert as a part of my remarks this quotation. I am not going to read the whole of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

The matter referred to is as follows:

> Self-government is not a mere form of institutions, to be had when desired, if only proper pains be taken; it is a form of character. It follows upon the long discipline which gives the people self-possession, self-mastery; the habit of order and business and common counsel, and reverence for law which alone follow when they themselves become the makers of law; the steadiness, the self-control of political maturity—and these things can not be had without long discipline.
> The distinction is of vital concern to us in respect to practical choices of policy which we must make, and make very soon. We have dependencies to deal with, and must deal with them in the true spirit of our own institutions. We can give the Filipinos constitutional government, a government which they may count upon to be just—a government based upon some clear and equitable understanding, intended for their good and not for our aggrandizement—but we must ourselves for the present supply that government. It would, it is true, be an unprecedented operation, reversing the process of Runnymede, but America has before this shown the world enlightened policies of politics that were without precedence. It would have been within the choice of King John to summon his barons to Runnymede of his own initiative and enter into a constitutional understanding with them, and it is within our choice to do a similar thing, at once and wise and generous in the government of the Philippine Islands.
> But we can not give them self-government. Self-government is not a thing that can be given to any people, because it is a form of character and not a form of constitution. No people can be given the self-control of maturity. Only the long apprenticeship of competence can secure them the precious possession—a thing no more to be bought than given. They can not be presented with the character of a community; but it can be confidently hoped that they will become a community under the wholesome operation of just laws and a sympathetic administration; that they will, after a while, understand and master themselves, if in the meantime they are understood and served in good conscience by those set over them in authority.
> We, of all people in the world, should know these fundamental things and should act upon them, if only to illustrate the mastery in politics which belongs to us of hereditary right. To ignore them would be not only to fail and fail miserably but to fail ridiculously, and to belie ourselves. Having ourselves gained self-government by a definite process which can have no substitute, let us put the peoples dependent upon us in the right way to gain it also.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand, the Senator is reading from the President?

Mr. KENYON. Yes; "Constitutional Government," by President Wilson.

Mr. BORAH. I presume that no one would take issue upon the very plain statement of political philosophy which is there contained.

Mr. KENYON. That would be surprising.

Mr. BORAH. We can not hand self-government to these people; but the question here is, Can you hand it to them in 10 years? Can you hand it to them in 20 years?

Mr. KENYON. You never can hand it to them.

Mr. BORAH. I agree with you. Now, are we going to stay there until they can acquire the capacity for self-government—until those people may know what their rights are and understand them; not a few of them, say 2 per cent of the upper class, but the masses of the people—until they know their rights and can protect them? Are we going to stay there that length of time, or when do we expect them to acquire that capacity?

Why not get out of the Philippines now, leave the Philippines and give them their independence, and let them shape their own destiny, or else say to them, "There is no need of talking independence to you, because no people in the history of the world have ever acquired the capacity of self-government inside of centuries"?

Mr. KENYON. Everybody in voting on this bill will have to make up his individual mind on the question which the Senator from Idaho advances.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. KENYON. In just a minute. He can solve it on the question of what is best for them from their viewpoint or best for them from our viewpoint.

I now yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] suggested to the Senator from Iowa, in his question, whether we should hold those islands until the people, the majority, the masses, become fitted for self-government—not simply the "upper crust," as the saying goes. I want to suggest, just in this connection, Mr. President, that you will never know, it is impossible to know, how many of the people in the Philippine Islands are capable of self-government until they are given an opportunity to test that capacity. There is no human intellect outside of the islands or in the islands that can measure a man's capacity until that man has had an opportunity to demonstrate it by putting it into operation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa further yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question. Does the Senator from Mississippi believe that we are under any obligation to enter upon the experiment of trying to teach these people self-government or endow them with the capacity for self-government?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I will say that I do not believe the American flag was planted in the Philippine Islands for the purpose of helping the Filipinos. I do not think we have remained there a single day for the purpose of helping the Filipinos. I have never believed there was the slightest element of altruism in our policy toward them. I think we made a mistake when we went there; and, having made a mistake, I think we have committed an error every day we have failed to correct that mistake. I do not believe you can teach a people self-government. I think they are capable of governing themselves as their interests demand.

I do not believe that there ever was a man good enough to govern another man without that man's consent, and I believe that these people ought to be given the right to work out their own salvation, with all the moral influence that the civilized world can bring to bear upon them to help them in the evolution of their own government.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I do not want to bring any politics into this discussion, and I do not suggest this from a party standpoint. I suggest it for the purpose of getting at, if I may say so, some definite conclusion as to what we ought to do. The objection which I have——

Mr. VARDAMAN. I will answer the Senator, if I did not answer his question as he desires.

Mr. BORAH. No; I am not complaining that the Senator did not answer my question.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I agree to the suggestion which the Senator made a moment ago, that we ought to get out of there just as soon as we can, just as soon as we can get the carpetbags packed, and our patriotic carpetbaggers at home, and let the Filipinos have their own government. I am willing to help them establish their government, but I think they should be permitted to have the chief voice in prescribing the form and determining the policy. They alone can definitely know just the character of government they are capable of permanently maintaining.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, why does not the party that is in power, having the capacity to put through here any measure that it desires to put through, give us, then, a program here which is in accord with the pledges and the platform which that party has made and let us vote on the proposition whether we will go out as soon as we can arrange to get out and actually transfer the powers of government? Let us have that proposition before us. The objection to the preamble upon my part is that while we profess to be able to teach these people self-government, while we make efforts in this bill to extend the powers of government and to widen the range of activity for them for the purpose of giving them and endowing them with the capacity for self-government, we are constantly saying here that we know that in the end that is to prove a failure. It would appear that we really believe we ought to get out, but we have not the courage to say so. Now, let us have this Democratic platform which we had in 1900 as a preamble.

Mr. KENYON. I rather dislike to have my remarks injured by the Democratic platform, but go ahead.

Mr. BORAH. Here it is:

The Filipinos can not be citizens without endangering our civilization; they can not be subjects without imperiling our form of government—

If that is true, there is only one course open for us here.

Mr. KENYON. That is the platform of what year?

Mr. BORAH. 1900. That was 15 years ago.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is outlawed.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator claim that the planks of the Democratic platform are binding?

Mr. BORAH. This is not the Baltimore platform.

And as we are not willing to surrender our civilization nor to convert the Republic into an empire we favor an immediate declaration of the Nation's purpose to give the Filipinos, first, a stable form of government; second, independence; and, third, protection from outside interference, such as has been given for nearly a century to the Republics of Central and South America.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That means, I suppose——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator desire to discuss the Democratic platform?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I want to discuss the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. KENYON. Well, we are violating the Monroe doctrine every day we stay in the Philippines.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I just wanted to ask the Senator from Idaho if that meant the extension of the Monroe doctrine to Asia?

Mr. BORAH. In view of the fact that we are substituting for the Monroe doctrine in Central and South America the Pan American proposition, which I conceive to be something quite different, I see no reason why we might not remove it to some other point, if it seems wise to do so. Upon that I do not now pass.

Mr. KENYON. The discussion of the Democratic planks on this subject does not add very much enlightenment, because it is generally understood that the planks of the platform are not to be kept, but are merely to "get in" on. But I can not see how anybody, in view of this record, can say that the Filipinos at this time, right now, are ready for self-government, from any viewpoint of ours; and I want to quote some of the record.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question on this subject?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not want to engage in a debate with the Senator from Idaho or with the Senator from Mississippi, but only to ask the Senator from Iowa a question.

The language of this preamble is, after the introductory part of it—

And enjoy all the privileges of complete independence, which it is the purpose of the United States to grant when, in the judgment of the United States, it will be to the permanent interest of the people of the Philippine Islands.

Under that provision, assuming that it is binding upon anybody—which I think is a pretty violent assumption—what official body of the United States is to determine when it is to the permanent interest of the people of the Philippine Islands to have independence? Congress, I suppose.

Mr. KENYON. No other body could.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Nobody else. Therefore at some time in the future we can imagine that the question will be presented to Congress whether or not, under the language of this preamble, it is to the permanent interest of the people of the Philippine Islands that they should have complete independence. Now, suppose at that time the people of the Philippine Islands are very positive that the time has come when it is to their permanent interest to have independence, but that Congress disagrees with them—does not the Senator believe that that will bring about an exceedingly mischievous situation, where the people of those islands are claiming that the conditions of this preamble have been met and Congress is denying it?

Mr. KENYON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We will be charged by those people, undoubtedly, with a breach of faith.

Mr. KENYON. We have been already.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; but we will be charged with having specifically broken our word to them. Now, of course, it always rests with Congress to grant independence to these islands, whether it makes any conditional promise to them in advance or not. In other words, this preamble does not in any manner extend the powers of Congress.

Mr. KENYON. Not at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And it does not practically bind Congress to do anything.

Mr. KENYON. Only as the moral obligation would exist by virtue of this preamble; that is all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, I know; but, after all, the expression "to the permanent interest of the people of the Philippine Islands" is so flexible that when any Member of Congress concludes for any reason that he does not want the Philippine Islands to have independence it is a very simple thing to take refuge behind the flexibility of that language.

Mr. KENYON. I have not any doubt that the agitation for independence will commence within a year; and I want to suggest this to the Senator, too, as another objection to that preamble: We are discussing it merely to get the best thought we can on it.

There might come a time when the people of the Philippine Islands will be fitted for the experiment of self-government. Let us say that that comes along in two or three years, and while we do not believe they have reached such a degree of proficiency that they can carry on such a government as we think they ought to, yet they are reasonably fitted to try the experiment. Then the query arises: "Is it for the permanent interest of the people of the Philippine Islands to permit them to do that?"

My colleague [Mr. CUMMINS] raised the point the other day that if that question should arise, while believing that it might be right and fit and proper to let them try the experiment, yet, as an honest man, he would not believe that it was for their permanent interest, and therefore could not vote for it. So that the language of the preamble is subject to a great many complications that are troublesome.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understood the Senator to say a moment ago that he was in favor of letting the preamble remain in the bill.

Mr. KENYON. I am on this committee, and am in favor of a preamble that shall say to the Filipinos exactly what we intend to do. As this was originally drawn, it stated that it was our purpose to grant independence—

When, in the judgment of the United States, the people of the Philippine Islands shall have shown themselves to be fitted therefor.

That is just what we intended to do; but that question came up in the Philippine Islands this summer, and was the occasion of a great deal of discussion and irritation, and Gen. McIntyre and others who have been there thought it was wise to make this change. I think this is the language that was employed by the President, if not in his first message, in some message to the Filipinos.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the Senator from Iowa will permit me to say so, I am one of those who have always regretted the necessity for our taking over the Philippines. I do not agree with what the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] said a moment ago—although I agree with him about a great many things—that there was no altruism in what we did.

Mr. KENYON. I do not, either.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think what the Senator from Mississippi said implied that we were there simply to exploit these islands, and that we were not there for the benefit of the people. I think there never has been in the history of the world an example of such pure and magnificent altruism as was shown by the Government of the United States, in the first place, in engaging in the war with Spain at all. It was not to bring about any benefit to us that we did it. We saw Cuba struggling, as we all know she was struggling, for liberty, and we engaged in the war with Spain for the purpose of liberating that people. It was the purest altruism.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Just a moment, if the Senator will permit me. As a part of that war it was an absolute military necessity that we should go to the Philippine Islands. There was a Spanish fleet in Manila Bay that it was necessary we should capture or destroy, because as long as it remained there it was a menace to us. So we went there, and we captured and destroyed the Spanish fleet. The moment we did that those people were without any government at all, and we were obliged to take the place of the government that we had destroyed.

We have been there now for many years. We have built up a magnificent school system. We have built roads through the islands. We have generously spent our money, and we have received nothing in return for it. We have not exploited the islands. We have been there for the benefit of those people; and I venture to say that there never has been in the history of the world an attempt at colonial government which has resulted in so much benefit for the native people as that experiment of ours with the Philippine Islands.

Mr. KENYON. I thoroughly agree with the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I believe that it was the duty of the United States to stop the wholesale butchery in the island of Cuba; I was in favor of that war, and, if I may be pardoned a personal reference, I supported my faith with my works. It was all right to destroy the Spanish fleet in Manila Bay. It was all right to establish a government for the Filipinos and not leave them at the mercy of the mob after we had driven Spain from the Philippine Islands. To that point I have no word of criticism. There was altruism in dealing with Cuba. We did not keep Cuba. Why, then, should not the people of the Philippines be given their independence? Why not permit them to have their own government, just as we declined to take from the people of Cuba their right to govern themselves?

All this talk about qualifying the Filipino or any other mongrel race for the duties of citizenship, for self-government, as the American white man understands that term, is a thing that could not be done in a hundred thousand years, because it is not in the strain of blood to do it. That race of people have never shown any capacity for self-government—that is, self-government as it is practiced in the United States. I repeat—I may be wrong—that I do not think we have remained in the Philippines a day for the especial benefit of the Filipino, and the Filipino does not think we are there for his good, either. We are giving them a system which they probably do not want. I apprehend they will have trouble understanding the genius of any government we may make for them. It is their country, and they have the God-given right to control that country for their own good and for their own betterment; or probably to their own detriment, from our standpoint.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I believe our work in the Philippines has justified what President McKinley said—that we were there to educate and to train them in the science of self-government, and, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] has said, it is the most magnificent work of altruism that the world has ever known.

I want to refer now to some of the evidence on this question of our viewpoint. We had before us testimony as to head-hunters, the kind of marriages and divorces they have, and so on; and some of that was rather interesting. Col. Young, of the Army, was before us, and he was asked if they had head-hunters down there among the Moros. He said, "Yes." He said:

If you had a bad man and you were looking for him, you would get a head-hunter and let him go out and get him for you.

He said:

I had a bad man to get. I had to have him. I had been chasing him a long time. They sent me a couple of men whom they said could get him, but it would take a little time. After a time they came back and said that they had him. The leader came in and said he would bring him in. When he brought him in I told him to put the body in a shed that I had off my office so as not to attract any more attention than necessary. When I came to look at it I could not find the body. The hunter said he had him in a sack. I went and got the sack and turned it upside down, and two heads rolled out. I asked him why he did that. He said it was too heavy to carry, and that was the easiest way to get him.

That was two years and a half ago. He brought in the additional head, he said, for good measure.

He speaks of this "leading citizen," who came into the little town where he was and killed a Chinaman; walked into the house and cut him all to pieces. There are instances of that kind which do not tend to show a very exalted degree of civilization among the Moros.

Other parts of this evidence are interesting, too, Mr. President. I am arguing this question now from our viewpoint, as to whether they are fitted for self-government. That is not controlling with me, however. Col. Young related instances of Filipino men and women carried off by Moros, and then Moros carrying off other Moro women, and said that when the parents objected they brought the parties in before him and he divorced them. They had no divorce laws in the Philippines, but the business that Col. Young did out there in the divorce line would put to shame Reno, Nev.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is likely to be misunderstood if he includes all of the Philippine Islands in this description.

Mr. KENYON. No; I stated that this was among the Moros.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is confined to the non-Christian tribes, occupying a small area.

Mr. KENYON. Entirely.

Other parts of Col. Young's testimony are interesting. When asked what a civilized Moro was, he said that a civilized Moro was one who would not shoot at you when you passed him. He also testified about the drinking habits of the people there, which is a matter of interest to my friend from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. He said:

They have a drink there called vino, which is a native drink. If a white man drinks it, it sets him crazy. The Moro will not drink it at all, but he will sell it to other people. You can buy enough to make everybody drunk for 5 cents. * * * It is made of the milk of the coconut. They put it out in the sun and let it stand there. Then the Moro will put anything he happens to have into it—a little alcohol, for instance, * * * or tobacco or anything else.

But the Moros do not drink it themselves. They merely sell it.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, does the Senator think the fact that they will not drink it themselves is an argument against their capacity for self-government, or in favor of it?

Mr. KENYON. The fact that they do not drink it themselves, I think, is a very strong argument in favor of their good sense; and their commercial ingenuity may be shown by the fact that they sell it to others.

With conditions as they are in the Moro country, of course somebody is going to contend that people of that kind are fitted for the self-government that we believe is real self-government. They are happy people. This record shows that they are happy people. They do not have to spend very much for clothes. They eat the coconuts and roam the mountains and are as healthy and finely developed people as there are in the world. If from our viewpoint they are not ready for independence now, when will they be?

What is the evidence on that proposition? Dean Worcester, who has given great study to the subject, who has an intimate knowledge of their condition and their habits, and apparently a real affection for them, was asked that question by the chairman, and his answer was:

It will be at the end of a generation from the time we began our educational work, or at least when it became reasonably general in the islands. If I may say a word more in that connection: The people whom I see over here, who assume to be Filipinos, are, for the most part, not Filipinos in the proper sense of the word. They are Filipinos by birth, of course, but, so far as their blood is concerned, they are not Malays.

In other parts of the examination the question was raised that the Moros would destroy the Filipinos; and that is a question that has always given concern in this matter. The old forts that were erected to protect the Filipinos against the Moros, possibly centuries ago, still exist there in a crumbled condition. That question was asked by Senator LIPPITT, who took a very great interest in the discussion; and Dean Worcester thought that any conquest of the Filipinos by the Moros would not come about in a short time, if at all. He said, however:

I think it would come about in the end, if the wholly improbable thing were to occur that the islands were shut off from the rest of the world, so far as outside interference in matters of public order was concerned.

That is a legitimate question, of course, for the Congress of the United States to take into consideration in dealing with this question—whether the Moros are warlike enough and powerful enough to destroy the Filipino civilization. It is one of those other troublesome questions that we can not get rid of.

Referring to ex-President Taft's testimony on that subject, we asked Mr. Taft this question:

What, in your judgment, would be the practical effect of giving these people self-government? What would happen?

His answer was:

Well, two Filipinos in whose judgment I have the utmost confidence, whom I came to know very well indeed, answered that question to me when I asked them. One of them said to me: "Your steamers would not go beyond Corregidor Island before the throat cutting would begin."

And he said:

I verily believe that to be true. Now, we have found out in Mexico that the man who loses a political fight gives his head for a forfeit. It was so in the Philippines. Emilio Aguinaldo conspired to kill his opponent, his military rival, Tuna, and did so. * * * I do not care a cent about the Government of the United States having power out in the Philippines.

Whatever anyone else may think about it, I believe that ex-President Taft has no interest in this matter except the interest that he feels for the Filipino people, whom he has known and for whom he has a great affection.

I would be glad—

He says—

to get out of the Philippines myself. But what I am concerned about is those poor people out there. They do not like me out there because I have told them the truth. But that is the difficulty with a great many people—they do not like to hear the truth. And that is the truth as to what will happen out there. Mark my prediction: If they give them independence by the year 1920, for instance, you will find just such a condition as you have to-day in Mexico. That is my answer to that question.

That is testimony which no candid thinking man can brush aside, because Mr. Taft knows the Philippine question. Now let me add the testimony of Vice Gov. Martin, the present vice governor:

I think there are two branches to the question. One is our duty to the Filipino people and the other is our own interests. The experiment we are making in the Philippine Islands is very interesting, and as an American it would be very interesting to me to see it continued at considerable length. I doubt, however, whether the interests of our country would be served by a considerable stay in the islands, and I think that ought to be considered in answering the question you ask. I would not say that I would think we ought to have as stable government in the Philippines before we withdraw as we have at home.

That is not the exact quotation I wanted to read from him. He does say, not as clearly as others, at least I gather from what he said, that he thought they were much better off under our rule than they would be under their own. It is on page 126 of the hearings before the committee:

Mr. MARTIN. I am inclined to think that they would believe that—because, I think, that has been their experience. I think they are better off under us.

Referring to the question of Senator WEEKS—

That is the testimony of a very level-headed official of this administration.

At the time of the revolution in the Philippines a constitution was formed by the Filipinos that ought to be considered in the proposition as to the ability of the Filipinos to govern themselves from our standpoint. That constitution provided for popular education; for a government university; it prohibited gambling; it prohibited cockfighting, which has now come back to them with our civilization. That constitution is worthy of study as showing that the Filipinos from their own viewpoint have notions of the fundamentals of government and the importance of education, and that constitution is a most readable document. I will ask that I may insert it in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be pursued.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE PHILIPPINE REPUBLIC.

We, the representatives of the Philippine people, lawfully invoked, in order to establish justice, provide for common defense, promote general welfare, and insure the benefits of freedom, imploring the aid of the Sovereign Legislator of the Universe in order to attain these purposes, have voted, decreed, and sanctioned the following—

POLITICAL CONSTITUTION.

FIRST TITLE.

The Republic.

ARTICLE 1. The political association of all the Filipinos constitutes a nation, the estate of which is denominated Philippine republic.

ART. 2. The Philippine republic is free and independent.

ART. 3. Sovereignty resides exclusively in the people.

SECOND TITLE.

The government.

ART. 4. The government of the republic is popular, representative, alternative, and responsible and is exercised by three distinct powers, which are denominated legislative, executive, and judicial. Two or more of these powers shall never be vested in one person or corporation; neither shall the legislature be vested in one individual alone.

THIRD TITLE.

Religion.

ART. 5. The state recognizes the equality of all religious worships and the separation of the church and the state.

FOURTH TITLE.

The Filipinos and their national and individual rights.

ART. 6. The following are Filipinos:

1. All persons born in Philippine territory. A vessel flying the Philippine flag shall, for this purpose, be considered a portion of the Philippine territory.

2. The offspring of a Filipino father and mother although born outside the Philippine territory.

3. Foreigners who have obtained certificates of naturalization.

4. Those who, without it, may have gained "vecindad" (residence) in any town of the Philippine territory.

It is understood that residence is gained by staying two years without interruption in one locality of the Philippine territory, having an open abode and known mode of living and contributing to all the charges of the nation.

The nationality of the Filipino is lost in accordance with the laws. (S. C. C., 1st Title, 1st art.; S. C., 1st Title, 1st art.)

ART. 7. No Filipino nor foreigner shall be arrested nor imprisoned unless on account of crime and in accordance with the laws. (S. C., 4th art.)

ART. 8. Any person arrested shall be discharged or delivered over to the judicial authority within 24 hours following the arrest. (S. C., 4th art.)

Any arrest shall be held without effect or shall be carried to commitment within 72 hours after the detained has been delivered over to a competent judge.

The party interested shall receive notice of the order which may be issued within the same time. (S. C., 4th art.)

ART. 9. No Filipino can become a prisoner unless by virtue of the mandate of a competent judge.

The decree by which may be issued the mandate shall be ratified or confirmed, having heard the presumed criminal within 72 hours following the act of commitment. (S. C., 5th art.)

ART. 10. No one can enter the domicile of a Filipino or foreign resident in the Philippines without his consent, except in urgent cases of fire, flood, earthquake, or other similar danger, or of unlawful aggression proceeding from within or in order to assist a person within calling for help.

Outside of these cases, the entrance in the domicile of a Filipino or foreign resident of the Philippines and the searching of his papers or effects can only be decreed by a competent judge and executed during the day.

The searching of the papers and effects shall take place always in the presence of the party interested or of an individual of his family, and, in their absence, of two resident witnesses of the same place.

Notwithstanding, when a delinquent may be found in "flagranti" and pursued by the authority with its agents, may take refuge in his domicile, he may be followed into the same only for the purpose of apprehension.

If he should take refuge in the domicile of another, notification to the owner of the latter shall precede. (S. C., 6th art.)

ART. 11. No Filipino can be compelled to make change of his domicile or residence unless by virtue of an executive sentence. (S. C., 9th art.)

ART. 12. In no case can there be detained nor opened by the governing authority the correspondence confided to the post office, nor can that of the telegraph or telephone be detained.

But, by virtue of a decree of a competent judge, can be detained any correspondence, and also opened in the presence of the accused, that which may be conveyed by the post office. (S. C., 7th art.)

ART. 13. Any decree of imprisonment, of search of abode, or of detention of the correspondence written, telegraphed, or telephoned shall be justified.

When the decree may fall short of this requisite, or when the motives in which it may be founded may be judicially declared unlawful or notoriously insufficient, the person who may have been imprisoned, or whose imprisonment may not have been ratified within the term prescribed in article 9, or whose domicile may be forcibly entered, or whose correspondence may be detained, shall have the right to demand the responsibilities which ensue. (S. C., 8th art.)

ART. 14. No Filipino shall be prosecuted nor sentenced, unless by a judge or tribunal to whom, by virtue of the laws which precede the crime, is delegated its cognizance, and in the form which the latter prescribe. (S. C., 16th art.)

ART. 15. Any person detained or imprisoned without the legal formalities, unless in the cases provided in this constitution, shall be discharged upon their own petition or that of any Filipino.

The laws shall determine the form of proceeding summarily in this case, as well as the personal and pecuniary penalties incurred by him who may order, execute, or cause to be executed the illegal detention or imprisonment.

ART. 16. No person shall be deprived, temporarily or permanently, of his property or rights, nor disturbed in the possession of them, unless by virtue of a judicial sentence. (S. C., 10th art.)

Those functionaries who under any pretext infringe this provision shall be personally responsible for the damage caused.

ART. 17. No person shall be deprived of his property unless through necessity and common welfare, previously justified and declared by the proper authority, providing indemnity to the owner previous to the deprivation. (S. C., 10th art.)

ART. 18. No person shall be obliged to pay contribution which may not have been voted by the assembly or by the popular corporations legally authorized to impose it, and which exaction shall not be made in the form prescribed by law. (S. C., 3d art.)

ART. 19. No Filipino who may be in the full enjoyment of his civil and political rights shall be hindered in the free exercise of the same.

ART. 20. Neither shall any Filipino be deprived of—

1. The right of expressing liberally his ideas and opinions, either by word or by writing, availing himself of the press or of any other similar means.

2. The right of associating himself with all the objects of human life which may not be contrary to public morality; and, finally,

3. Of the right to direct petitions, individually or collectively, to the public powers and to the authorities.

The right of petition shall not be exercised by any class of armed force. (S. C., 15th art.)

ART. 21. The exercise of the rights expressed in the preceding article shall be subject to the general provisions which regulate them.

ART. 22. Those crimes which are committed upon the occasion of the exercise of the rights granted in this title shall be punished by the tribunals in accordance with the common laws.

ART. 23. Any Filipino can found and maintain establishments of instruction or of education, in accordance with the provisions which are established.

Popular education shall be obligatory and gratuitous in the schools of the nation. (S. C., 12th art.)

ART. 24. Any foreigner may establish himself liberally in the Philippine territory, subject to the provisions which regulate the matter, exercising therein his industry or devoting himself to any profession in the exercise of which the laws may not require diplomas of fitness issued by the national authorities. (S. C., 12th art.)

ART. 25. No Filipino who is in the full enjoyment of his political and civil rights shall be hindered from going freely from the territory, nor from removing his residence or property to a foreign country, except the obligations of contributing to the military service and the maintenance of the public taxes.

ART. 26. The foreigner who may not have become naturalized shall not exercise in the Philippines any office which may have attached to it authority or jurisdiction.

ART. 27. Every Filipino is obliged to defend the country with arms when he may be called upon by the laws, and to contribute to the expenses of the estate (government) in proportion to his property. (S. C., 13th art.)

ART. 28. The enumeration of the rights granted in this title does not imply the prohibition of any other not expressly delegated.

ART. 29. Previous authorization shall not be necessary in order to prosecute before the ordinary tribunals the public functionaries, whatever may be the crime which they commit.

A superior mandate shall not exempt from responsibility in cases of manifest infraction, clear and determinate, of a constitutional provision. In the other cases it shall exempt only the agents who may not exercise the authority.

ART. 30. The guaranties provided in articles 7, 8, 9, and 10 and 11, and paragraphs 1 and 2 of the twentieth articles shall not be suspended in the republic nor any part of it, unless temporarily and by means of a law, when the security of the estate shall demand it in extraordinary circumstances.

It being promulgated in the territory to which it may apply, the special law shall govern during the suspension according to the circumstances which demand it.

The latter as well as the former shall be voted in the national assembly, and in case the assembly may be closed the government is authorized to issue it in conjunction with the permanent commission without prejudice to convoking the former within the shortest time and giving them information of what may have been done.

But neither by the one nor the other law can there be suspended any other guaranties than those delegated in the first paragraph of this article nor authorizing the government to banish from the country or transport any Filipino.

In no case can the military or civil chiefs establish any other penalty than that previously prescribed by the law. (S. C., 17th art.)

ART. 31. In the Philippine republic no one can be tried by private laws nor special tribunals. No person can have privileges nor enjoy emoluments which may not be compensation for public service and which are fixed by law. "El fuero de guerra y mariana" (the jurisdiction, privileges, and powers of army and navy) shall extend solely to the crimes and faults which may have intimate connection with the military and maritime discipline.

ART. 32. No Filipino can establish "mayorazgos" now institutions "vinculadoras" (title of perpetual succession by eldest son nor institutions entailed) of property, nor accept honors, "condecoraciones" (insignia or decoration of orders) or titles of honor and nobility from foreign nations without the authorization of the government.

Neither can the government establish the institutions mentioned in the preceding paragraph, nor grant honors "condecoraciones" or titles of honor and nobility to any Filipino.

Notwithstanding the nation may reward by a special law, voted by the assembly, eminent services which may be rendered by the citizens to their country.

FIFTH TITLE.

Legislative power.

ART. 33. The legislative power shall be exercised by an assembly of the representatives of the nation.

This assembly shall be organized in the form and under the conditions determined by the law which may be issued to that effect.

ART. 34. The members of the assembly shall represent the entire nation, and not exclusively those who elect them.

ART. 35. No representative shall be subjected to any imperative mandate of his electors.

ART. 36. The assembly shall meet every year. It is the prerogative of the president of the republic to convoke it, suspend and close its sessions, and dissolve it, in concurrence with the same or with the permanent commission in its default, and within legal terms.

ART. 37. The assembly shall be open at least three months each year, not including in this time that which is consumed in its organization.

The president of the republic shall convoke it, at the latest, by the 15th of April.

ART. 38. In an extraordinary case he can convoke it outside of the legal period, with the concurrence of the permanent commission, and prolong the legislature, when the term does not exceed one month nor takes place more than twice in the same legislature.

ART. 39. The national assembly, together with the extraordinary representatives, shall form the constituents in order to proceed to the modification of the constitution and to the election of the new president of the republic, convoked at least one month previous to the termination of the powers of the former.

In the case of the death or of the resignation of the president of the republic, the assembly shall meet immediately by its own right and at the request of its president or of that of the permanent commission.

ART. 40. In the meantime, while the appointment of the new president of the republic proceeds, the president of the supreme court of justice shall exercise his functions, his place being filled by one of the members of this tribunal, in accordance with the laws.

ART. 41. Any meeting of the assembly which may be held outside of the ordinary period of the legislature shall be null and void. That which is provided by article 39 is excepted, and in that the assembly is constituted a tribunal of justice, not being allowed to exercise in such case other than judicial functions.

ART. 42. The sessions of the assembly shall be public. Notwithstanding, they can be secret at the petition of a certain number of its individuals, fixed by the regulations, it being decided afterwards by an absolute majority of the votes of the members present whether the discussion of the same matter be continued in public.

ART. 43. The president of the republic shall communicate with the assembly by means of messages, which shall be read from the rostrum by a secretary of the government.

The secretaries of the government shall have entrance into the assembly, with the right to the floor whenever they ask it, and shall cause themselves to be represented in the discussion of any particular project by commissioners designated by decree of the president of the republic.

ART. 44. The assembly shall constitute itself a tribunal of justice in order to try the crimes committed against the security of the estate by the president of the republic and individuals of the counsel of government, by the president of the supreme court of justice, by the procurer general of the nation by means of a decree of the same, or of the permanent commission in its absence, or of the president of the republic at the proposal of the procurer general, or of the counsel of the government.

The laws shall determine the mode of procedure for the accusation, preparation for trial, and pardon.

ART. 45. No member of the assembly can be prosecuted nor molested for the opinions which he may express nor for the votes which he may cast in the exercise of his office.

ART. 46. No member of an assembly can be prosecuted in a criminal matter without authorization of the same, or of the permanent commission, to whom shall immediately be given information of the act for proper disposition.

The arrest, detention, or apprehension of a member of the assembly can not take place without previous authorization of the same or of the permanent commission; but having once notified the assembly of the decree of arrest, shall incur responsibility if, within two days following the notification, it may not authorize the arrest or give reasons upon which its refusal is founded.

ART. 47. The national assembly shall have besides the following powers:

1. To frame regulations for its interior government.

2. To examine the legality of the elections and the legal qualifications of the members elected.

3. Upon its organization to appoint its president, vice president, and secretaries.

Until the assembly may be dissolved, its president, vice presidents, and secretaries shall continue exercising their offices during the four legislatures; and

4. To accept the resignations presented by its members, and grant leaves of absence subject to the regulations. (S. C., 34th and 35th art.)

ART. 48. No project can become a law before being voted upon by the assembly.

In order to pass the laws there shall be required in the assembly at least a fourth part of the total number of members, whose elections may have been approved and who may have taken the oath of office.

ART. 49. No proposed law can be approved by the assembly without having been voted upon as a whole, and article by article.

ART. 50. The assemblies shall have the right of censure and each one of its members the right to be heard.

ART. 51. The proposal of the laws belongs to the president of the republic and to the assembly.

ART. 52. The representative of the assembly who accepts of the government pension, employment, or commission with a salary, shall be understood to have renounced his office.

The employment of the secretary of the government of the republic and other offices prescribed in special laws are excepted from this provision. (S. C., 31st art.)

ART. 53. The office of representative shall be for a term of four years, and those who may exercise it have the right, by way of indemnity, according to the circumstances, to a sum determined by the law.

Those who may absent themselves during the whole of the legislature shall not be entitled to this indemnity, but will recover this right if they assist in those which follow.

SIXTH TITLE.

The permanent commission.

ART. 54. The assembly, before the closing of its sessions, shall elect seven of its members in order to constitute a permanent commission during the period of its being closed, the latter being obliged in its first session to designate a president and secretary.

ART. 55. The following are the functions of the permanent commission in the absence of the assembly:

1. To declare whether or not there is sufficient reason to proceed against the president of the republic, the representatives, secretaries of the government, president of the supreme court of justice, and the procurer general in the cases provided by this constitution.

2. To convoke the assembly to an extraordinary meeting in those cases in which it should constitute a tribunal of justice.

3. To transact the business which may remain pending for consideration.

4. To convoke the assembly to extraordinary sessions when the exigency of the case may demand; and

5. To substitute the assembly in its functions in accordance with the constitution, exception being made of the right to make and pass the laws.

The permanent commission shall meet whenever it may be convoked by him who presides in accordance with this constitution.

SEVENTH TITLE.

The executive power.

ART. 56. The executive power shall reside in the president of the republic, who exercises it through his secretaries.

ART. 57. The conduct of the interests peculiar to the towns, the provinces, and of the estate belonging respectively to the popular assemblies, to the provincial assemblies, and to the active administration, with reference to laws, and upon the basis of the most ample "desceb-trakizacion" (distribution) and administrative autonomy.

EIGHTH TITLE.

The president of the republic.

ART. 58. The president of the republic shall be elected by an absolute majority of votes by the assembly and the representatives specially met in constitutive chamber.

His term of office shall be for four years, and he will be reeligible.

ART. 59. The president of the republic shall have the proposal of the laws as well as the members of the assembly, and shall promulgate the laws when they have been passed and approved by the latter and shall watch over and insure their execution.

ART. 60. The power of causing the laws to be executed extends itself to all that which conduces to the conservation of public order in the interior and the international security.

ART. 61. The president of the republic shall promulgate the laws within 20 days following the time when they have been transmitted by the assembly definitely approved.

ART. 62. If within this time they may not be promulgated it shall devolve upon the president to return them to the assembly with justification of the causes of their detention, proceeding in such case to their revision, and it shall not be considered that it insists upon them if it does not reproduce them by a vote of at least two-thirds of the members of the assembly present. Reproducing the law in the form indicated, the government shall promulgate it within 10 days, announcing his nonconformity.

In the same manner the government shall become obligated if he allow to pass the term of 20 days without returning the law to the assembly.

ART. 63. When the promulgation of a law may have been declared urgent by a vote expressed by an absolute majority of the votes of the assembly, the president can call upon them by a message, stating his reasons for a new deliberation, which can not be denied, and the same law being approved anew, shall be promulgated within the legal term without prejudice to the president's announcing his nonconformity.

ART. 64. The promulgation of the laws shall take place by means of their publication in the official periodical of the republic and shall take effect after 30 days from the date of publication.

ART. 65. The president of the republic shall have command of the army and navy, making and ratifying treaties of peace, with the previous concurrence of the assembly.

ART. 66. Treaties of peace shall not be binding until passed by the assembly.

ART. 67. In addition to the necessary powers for the execution of the laws, the president of the republic shall have the following:

1. To confer civil and military employment with reference to the laws.
2. To appoint the secretaries of the government.
3. To direct diplomatic and commercial relations with foreign powers.
4. To see to it that in the entire territory may be administered speedy and complete justice.

To pardon delinquents in accordance with the laws, excepting the provision relative to the secretaries of the government.

6. To preside over national assemblies and to receive the envoys and representatives of the foreign powers authorized to meet him.

ART. 68. The president of the republic shall need to be authorized by a special law:

1. In order to alienate, cede, or exchange any part of the Filipino territory.
2. In order to annex any other territory to that of the Philippines.
3. In order to admit foreign troops into the Philippine territory.
4. In order to ratify treaties of alliance, offensive and defensive; special treaties of commerce—those which stipulate to give subsidy to a foreign power—and all those which may bind individually the Filipinos.

In no case can the secret articles of a treaty derogate those which are public.

5. In order to grant amnesties and general pardons.
6. In order to coin money. (S. C., 55th art.)

ART. 69. To the president of the republic belongs the power of dictating regulations for compliance and application of the laws in accordance with the requisites which the same prescribe. (S. C., 54th art.)

ART. 70. The president of the republic can, with the previous concurrence adopted by a majority of the votes of the representatives, dissolve the assembly before the expiration of the legal term of its office.

In this case they shall be convoked for new elections within a term of three months.

ART. 71. The president of the republic shall only be responsible in cases of high treason.

ART. 72. The compensation of the president of the republic shall be fixed by a special law, which can not be changed until the end of the presidential term of office.

NINTH TITLE.

The secretaries of the government.

ART. 73. The council of the government shall be composed of a president and seven secretaries, who shall have charge of the offices of foreign affairs, interior, treasury, army and navy, public instruction, public communications and works, agriculture, industry, and commerce.

ART. 74. All that which the president may order or provide in the exercise of his authority shall be signed by the secretary to whom it belongs. No public functionary shall give compliance to any which lack this requisite.

ART. 75. The secretaries of the government are responsible jointly to the assembly for the general policy of the government and individually for their personal acts.

To the procurer general of the nation belongs the accusing of them, and to the assembly their trial.

The laws shall determine the cases of responsibility of the secretaries of the government, the penalties to which they are subject, and the mode of procedure against them.

ART. 76. If they should be condemned by the assembly, in order to pardon them there shall precede the petition of an absolute majority of the representatives.

TENTH TITLE.

The judicial power.

ART. 77. To the tribunals belong exclusively the power of applying the laws in the name of the nation in civil and criminal trials.

The same codes shall govern in the entire republic without prejudice to modifications which for particular circumstances the laws may prescribe.

In them shall not be established more than one jurisdiction for all the citizens in common trials, civil and criminal.

ART. 78. The tribunals shall not apply the general and municipal regulations only in so far as they conform with the laws.

ART. 79. The exercise of the judicial power resides in the supreme court of justice and in the tribunals which are prescribed by the laws.

The composition, organization, and other attributes shall be governed by the organic laws which may be determined.

ART. 80. The president of the supreme court of justice and the "procurer general" shall be appointed by the national assembly in concurrence with the president of the republic and secretaries of the government, and shall have absolute independence of the executive and legislative powers.

ART. 81. Any citizen can institute a public prosecution against any of the members of the judicial power for the crimes they may commit in the exercise of their office.

ELEVENTH TITLE.

Provincial and popular assemblies.

ART. 82. The organization and powers of the provincial and popular assemblies will be regulated by their respective laws.

The latter shall be regulated according to the following principles:

1. Government and management of the interests peculiar to the provinces or towns, by their respective corporations, the principle of popular and direct election being the basis for the organization of said corporations.
2. Publicity of the sessions within the limits prescribed by the laws.
3. Publicity of the budgets, accounts, and important decisions.
4. Intervention of the government, and in the proper case of the national assembly in order to prevent the provincial and municipal corporations from exceeding their powers, to the prejudice of general and individual interests.
5. Determination of their powers in the matter of taxes, in order that the provincial and municipal taxation may never be antagonistic to the system of taxation of state.

TWELFTH TITLE.

The administration of state.

ART. 83. The government shall present yearly to the assembly budgets of income and expenses, setting forth the alterations made in those of the preceding year and inclosing the balance of the last fiscal year in accordance to law.

When the assembly may meet the budgets will be presented to it within 10 days following its convening.

ART. 84. No payment shall be made except in accordance with the law of budgets or other special laws, in the form and under the responsibilities fixed thereby.

ART. 85. It is necessary that the government be authorized by law in order to dispose of the goods and properties of state or to secure a loan upon the credit of the nation.

ART. 86. The public debt which is contracted by the government of the republic in accordance with this constitution shall be under the special guaranty of the nation.

No indebtedness shall be created unless at the same time the resources with which to pay it are voted.

ART. 87. All the laws relating to incomes, public expenditures, or public credit shall be considered as a part of those of the budgets, and shall be published as such.

ART. 88. The assembly shall fix each year, at the request of the president of the republic, the military forces of land and sea.

THIRTEENTH TITLE.

Reforms in the constitution.

ART. 89. The assembly, upon its own motion, or at the proposal of the president of the republic, can resolve the reform of the constitution, prescribing for that purpose the article or articles which should be modified.

ART. 90. The declaration made, the president of the republic shall dissolve the assembly and convoke the "constituyente" (constituting power), which shall meet within three months following. In the convocation shall be inserted the resolution referred to in the preceding article.

FOURTEENTH TITLE.

The observance and oath of the constitution—Languages.

ART. 91. The president of the republic, the government, the assembly, and all the Filipino citizens shall faithfully guard the constitution; and the legislative power, immediately after the approval of the law of budgets, shall examine as to whether the constitution has been exactly observed and as to whether its infractions have been corrected, providing that which is most practicable in order that the responsibility of the transgressors may be made effective.

ART. 92. Neither the president of the republic nor any other public functionary can enter upon the performance of his duty without previously taking the oath.

Such oath shall be taken by the president of the republic before the national assembly.

The other functionaries of the nation shall take it before the authorities determined by law.

ART. 93. The use of the languages spoken in the Philippines is optional. It can only be regulated by the law and solely as to the acts of public authority and judicial affairs. For the purpose of these acts shall be used at present the Castilian language.

Temporary provisions.

ART. 94. In the meantime and without prejudice to the forty-eighth article and the commissions which may be appointed by the assembly for the preparation of the organic laws for the development and application of the rights granted the Filipino citizens, and for the régime of the public powers determined by the constitution, the laws in force in these islands before their emancipation shall be considered as the laws of the republic.

In like manner shall be considered in force the provisions of the civil code in respect to marriage and civil registry, suspended by the general government of the islands; the instructions of the 26th of April, 1888, in order to carry into effect articles 77, 78, 79, and 82 of said code; the law of civil registry of the 17th of June, 1870, referred to by article 332 of the same; and the regulations of the 13th of December, 1870, for the execution of this law, without prejudice to the local chiefs continuing in charge of the entries in the civil registry and intervening in the celebration of the marriage of Catholics.

ART. 95. Pending the approval and enforcement of the laws referred to in the preceding article the provisions of the Spanish laws temporarily enforced by said article may be modified by special laws.

ART. 96. After promulgating the laws which the assembly may approve in accordance with the ninety-fourth article, the government of the republic is authorized to issue the decrees and regulations necessary for the immediate formation of all the organizations of state.

ART. 97. The president of the revolutionary government shall at once assume the title of president of the republic, and shall exercise said office until the constituting assembly meets and elects the person who is to fill said office definitely.

ART. 98. This congress, with the members who compose it, and those who may be returned by election or decree, shall continue four years; that is to say, the whole of the present legislature, beginning the 15th of April of next year.

ART. 99. Notwithstanding the general rule established in the second paragraph of the fourth article, during the time the country may have to struggle for its independence the government is hereby authorized to determine, at the close of congress, whatever questions and difficulties, not provided for by law, may arise from unforeseen events, by means of decrees, which may be communicated to the permanent commission and to the assembly on its first meeting.

ART. 100. The execution of the fifth article of title 3 is hereby suspended until the meeting of the constituting assembly.

In the meantime, the municipalities of those places which may require the spiritual offices of a Filipino priest shall provide for his maintenance.

ART. 101. Notwithstanding the provisions of articles 62 and 63, the laws returned by the president of the republic to congress can not be reproduced until the legislature of the following year, the president and his council of government being responsible for the suspension. If the reproduction be made, the promulgation will be compulsory within 10 days, the president stating his nonconformity if he so desires.

If the reproduction be made in subsequent legislatures, it will be considered as being voted for the first time.

ADDITIONAL ARTICLE. From the 24th of May last, on which date the dictatorial government was organized in Cavite, all the buildings, properties, and other belongings possessed by the religious corporations in these islands will be understood as restored to the Filipino government.

Barasoain, January 20, 1899.

THE PRESIDENT OF THE CONGRESS.
PEDRO A. PATERNO.

The secretaries:
PABLO TECSON.
PABLO OCAMPO.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I have briefly discussed the question from our viewpoint. I want to discuss it for a few minutes from their viewpoint. It has been said these people are like Mexico, that there will be revolutions, as there are in the South American countries. If I had the time, I would read from some pages of the record, but I refer to them merely for those who desire to read them, pages 67 and 70, where the question is discussed as to the difference between the Filipinos and the Latin-American races.

They have a real national spirit. They hold up to us the fact of their notions about the purity of the ballot and cite the instance of expelling a man from the assembly because he had been a doctor who had played poker with his patient and had won all the patient's money. They have a high sense of morality, they say, which made it necessary to expel that man from the Philippine Assembly. That is fully as high a sense of morality, probably, as we had in days gone by, when poker playing was not sufficient grounds to expel a Member of Congress.

Mr. GALLINGER. Perhaps the doctor thought that was the only way he could get his pay. [Laughter.] I wish to ask the Senator this question: Is it not a matter of history that prior to our acquiring the Philippine Islands there were numerous revolutions in the islands?

Mr. KENYON. Not for 300 years, I will say to the Senator, as I understand the history of the islands.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Until 1896.

Mr. KENYON. Until 1896, the Senator from New York says.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think there were uprisings there against the friars in the Philippines time and time again.

Mr. KENYON. I expect that is true. That a class of people object to what is going on, object to oppression and rise against it, really is not an argument against their capacity for self-government. And are we to be criticized in our country for uprisings? The Senate has had to appoint committees to investigate certain riots and uprisings in this country. We have had Colorado with its riots; West Virginia; we have had Lawrence, Mass., with its riots. We have, if the papers are to be credited this morning, a story of the troops in Ohio being sent out to quell a great riot at Youngstown. Those disturbances will arise in any government; you can not help it, and especially if a people think they are being oppressed they are going to rebel against it, and naturally so if they have any red blood in their veins.

They also cite us to their assembly and as showing their capacity for self-government that they always have a quorum in the assembly. I have seen times in the Senate when we could not have a quorum; of course it is not frequent; but they always keep a quorum interested in their discussions and debates. I do not know that that is evidence of self-capacity for self-government.

Mr. LANE. I do not think, Mr. President, the lack of a quorum is any great outrage.

Mr. KENYON. I am sure the Senator from Oregon in addressing the Senate never has any trouble about a quorum.

I have tried on the committee to take a judicial view, and I have asked a great many witnesses from the Philippine Islands if they really wanted independence. I have had my doubts in some cases. There are certainly many people in the Philippine Islands who do not want independence. While, of course, the rights of the Americans who have gone over there and invested their money must be considered, those are not the paramount rights in the Philippine Islands. They took the chances of that kind of a government. They knew from the statement of President McKinley and others that the present government would be more or less temporary. They took those chances when they went there and they can get out if they are not satisfied with the conditions.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Can the Senator give us any idea as to the amount of American investments in the Philippine Islands, as to the extent of the investments there?

Mr. KENYON. I have not the figures right at hand. I will try to look them up as I pass along.

Mr. VARDAMAN. American investments in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will state to the Senator that in the last public statement the amount was something like $70,000,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It was in 1911 when there was $70,000,000 invested. I have a statement here from Gen. McIntyre, Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, in which he says:

> While I have no accurate figures later than those of 1911, it is known that a considerable amount of American capital has been invested in the Philippine Islands since that date.

That is, in addition to the $70,000,000.

Mr. KENYON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, a satisfactory conclusion could not be reached from much of the testimony before us as to whether the Filipinos actually wanted this freedom now. I do not believe they do. They merely want some statement as to what we will eventually do. They think they have been promised independence. Whether they have any basis for that or not is something every man must judge from reading the record.

I want to place in the RECORD, without taking the time to read it, the statements of President McKinley, President Roosevelt, ex-Gov. Ide, Secretary of War Taft, ex-Gov. Smith, ex-Gov. Forbes, and Gov. Harrison, though, of course, as to what Gov. Harrison has promised now there can not be any question. So considering the rights of these people in this matter we must consider their viewpoint, that they think they have been promised independence.

President McKinley: "The Philippines are ours not to exploit, but to develop, to civilize, to educate, to train in the science of self-government."

President Roosevelt: "I trust that within a generation the time will arrive when the Philippines can decide for themselves whether it is well for them to become independent or to continue under the protection of a strong and disinterested power, able to guarantee to the islands order at home and protection from foreign invasion. But no one can prophesy the exact date when it will be wise to consider independence as a fixed and definite policy. It would be worse than folly to try to set down such a date in advance, for it must depend upon the way in which the Philippine people themselves develop the power of self-mastery." (Message at the beginning of the second session of the Sixtieth Congress.)

Ex-Gov. Henry C. Ide: "On the whole, it would seem that no other course is yet feasible for dealing with the Philippine Islands than that of tutelage, training, high and sympathetic guidance. That is the course upon which we have entered, and we ought to continue in it until the time shall arrive, which no one can now definitely fix, when the people of the islands shall have become so trained and educated and accustomed to self-restraint and to the exercise of government, and so financially equipped, as to be able to maintain a respectable government, when the question of independence may become a real, practically impending one." (Article in the North American Review, December, 1907.)

Secretary of War Taft: "* * * It necessarily involves in its ultimate conclusion as the steps toward self-government become greater and greater the ultimate independence of the islands. * * * Any attempt to fix the time in which complete self-government may be conferred upon the Filipinos in their own interest is, I think, most unwise." (Special report to the President on the Philippines, Jan. 23, 1908.)

Ex-Gov. James F. Smith: "* * * The evolution of a government by Americans assisted by Filipinos into a government of Filipinos assisted by Americans, and the education and preparation of the people for popular self-government, was the broad policy of President McKinley, of President Roosevelt, of Gov. Taft, of Gov. Gen. Wright, of Gov. Gen. Ide, and of all their successors. It is the policy to-day * * *." (Article in Sunset Magazine, December, 1911.)

Ex-Gov. W. Cameron Forbes: "The political development should follow the economic one, further increase in participation being taken tentatively and gradually so that there should be no sudden jerks or jolts, and the movement should go along with an even, true sweep and sway, until ultimately, many generations hence, I fear, the matter of the future political relations between the Philippine Islands and the United States will be determined by the representatives of both people satisfactorily to both. * * * I, personally, am not a believer in the United States permanently holding an alien people in subjection against their will." (Speech at Hotel Plaza, New York, Dec. 19, 1913.)

Ex-Gov. W. Cameron Forbes: "* * * I find that they (the Republican and Democratic Parties) seem to be agreed upon the following general fundamental principles:

"First. That our occupation and control of the islands is conducted for the benefit of the Philippine people as a whole rather than in the interest of any class of Filipinos, and not primarily for the benefit of our own or any other people but theirs.

"Second. That it is not the intention of the United States nor consistent with our policies to retain an alien people permanently under our domination against their own desires.

"Third. That it has by force of circumstances become the duty of the United States to exercise control over the islands until such time as it is proven that a stable government can be established.

"Beyond this there seems to be a slight diversion, for the Republicans have said that this control should terminate if at that time the Filipinos should desire it—and the Democrats have not qualified it to that extent." (Speech at Lake Mohonk Conference, Oct. 14, 1914.)

Gov. Gen. Francis Burton Harrison: "We regard ourselves as trustees, acting, not for the advantage of the United States, but for the benefit of the people of the Philippine Islands. Every step we take will be taken with a view to the ultimate independence of the islands and as a preparation for their independence; and we hope to move toward that end as rapidly as the safety and the permanent interests of the islands will permit." (Statement by the President, quoted in the inaugural address of Gov. Gen. Harrison.)

They point to the interest in the schools as showing their capacity and their desire. Mr. Martin, of Kansas, said as to that, on page 123 of the record.

> I have never seen any such interest at home in the schools as I have seen in the Philippine Islands.

It has been shown here that 500,000 Philippine children are in the schools of those islands.

So, Mr. President, these are the arguments which occur to my mind, very poorly stated, as to whether they are ready for independence from our viewpoint and from theirs. I have left out one thing, however, from their viewpoint, Mr. Martin stated so well that I am going to read it. It is this desire of freedom; this desire to control and run their own business. Mr. Martin, the vice governor, says:

Once I read this statement: "It is not good government that people want. It is self-government. They hope it will be good government. But whether it is good government or not, they want self-government."

That is the germ that is in the Filipino people. If that is only in 2 or 3 per cent of the people, as we have heard stated here, and 90 or 98 per cent are against that freedom, there was not anything before our committee to show it. Mr. Martin said that if the question was ever submitted to a vote of the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands there would be almost a unanimous vote on that question.

Now, Mr. President, there are things which trouble my mind in voting on this question.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator a question on the point he has just been discussing. Was this sentiment in the Filipino mind prior to the American occupation of the islands?

Mr. KENYON. The Senator is familiar with the revolution that occurred just before the Spanish War. That sentiment was there then. Let me say to the Senator the great hero of the Philippine Islands is Rizal. He published a book and laid down some propositions of liberty and self-government in that book that would remind one of the meditations of Thomas Paine or Rousseau. One of them was that "civilization existed in the highest form where there was the most liberty." That, it seems to me, started the whole agitation in the Philippine Islands for liberty. He went abroad. That book was circulated through the islands. People were reading it. They were becoming dangerous because they were doing a little thinking of their own, and oppression commenced. His relatives were oppressed while he was abroad. He came back, faced a court-martial, and was executed.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. He was the John Brown of the Philippines.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator give me the name of that author?

Mr. KENYON. Rizal. It is spelled in different ways.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Has the work been translated into English?

Mr. KENYON. The work is entitled "Noli me Tangere," and has been translated into English, I will say to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask the Senator a further question. The question I asked him before was really preliminary to the one I want to ask him now relative to the sentiment that existed at the time of the Spanish War, which the Senator mentions. Was there any belief on the part of the Filipino people or reason for such belief at the time of that war, that if they would assist the Americans there the defeat of Spain meant their independence?

Mr. KENYON. I thought I could turn in answer to the Senator's question to the record. I can not refer to it at this moment, but that spirit was in the people of the Philippine Islands before we ever came in there. They fought us, as the Senator knows, for a year. One of the present Commissioners from the islands was in that war against us.

Mr. NORRIS. They fought with us first.

Mr. KENYON. They fought with us first, and then, when they found they were not to have their freedom, they fought against us. So, Mr. President, that desire for liberty, in their souls, we must consider in our action.

We know it is almost treason in this discussion to consider the question as to what is best for our Nation. It is always asked what is best for them. Everyone knows that the best thing for our Nation would be to get out and get out as quickly as we can, not in a spirit of cowardice, not running from anybody, but simply as a caution in taking care of our own interests.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator says we should get out in our own interest. The Senator would not advocate our entire abandonment of the islands? The Senator would at least retain a naval base or a coaling base on the islands?

Mr. KENYON. Oh, yes; I think we should.

On this subject, Mr. Schuster, who was one of the Commissioners, had an article in one of the magazines a short time ago, in which he tells of a dinner in 1912 at Madrid, as follows:

In the summer of 1912 a number of Spanish and American financiers and engineers were gathered at a dinner in Madrid. Toasts were drunk to the President of the United States and the King of Spain, and the utmost good feeling prevailed. Comment turned on the rapidity with which the scars of the late Spanish-American War had disappeared and on the prospects of an enduring peace and friendship between these two nations. It was with something of a shock, therefore, that a Spanish nobleman was heard to express the belief that another war between the United States and Spain was inevitable. A strained silence, then a chorus of "Whys?" followed his remark. The dignified Spaniard smiled through his cigar smoke.

"In the last war," he said, "America found herself fighting to take the Philippines from Spain. America will go to war with us again to make us take them back."

I do not know why it is that we have not the right here, representing the American people, to insist that this question shall be considered and discussed from the standpoint of our country just as well as from the standpoint of the Philippine Islands, not to get away, of course, from the moral responsibility that we may have; but the question of expense, the question of what it is going to cost, the question of how it weakens us in a military way, are questions that interest the people of our country. The Philippine Islands have cost this country around $800,000,000 in everything we have done there, directly and indirectly, and the argument of protecting the Philippine Islands, directly and indirectly, will be heard on this floor time and time again in the debate over the great scheme of preparedness. The distinguished chairman of the Military Committee [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is not in his seat, but he referred to this in a very strong argument made in New York a few days ago. We have a right to consider that. The people of the United States sent us here to look after their interests. They do not want to dodge any moral responsibility. The people of the United States will pay any amount of taxes and go to any sacrifice before they will dishonor themselves, but they do not believe it is dishonor to consider a question of expense in trying to force something upon a people when that people do not want it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to his colleague?

Mr. KENYON. Gladly.

Mr. CUMMINS. That suggestion reminds me of an argument made a few moments ago by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], who, unfortunately, is not in his seat at this moment. I want to ask my colleague, who has given great study of the subject, this question, premising it by a statement:

The Senator from Utah said that in 1898 we overthrew the Spanish Government in the Philippine Islands. That is true. The inference from that is that we have no right to withdraw ourselves from the Philippine Islands until we can supply the people of that country with as good a government as we overturned. From the testimony put before the committee and all the information that is extant, will the Senator inform the Senate whether in his judgment at this moment there could be as good a government established in the Philippines by the Filipinos themselves as was the Spanish Government which we overthrew in 1898?

Mr. KENYON. Vastly better, and as good a government established, it seems to me, as could be established in Cuba. But this question of millions of dollars for the future of the Philippine Islands does not seem to concern us. Of course, I realize that the question of voting money in Congress seems to be something of small concern; but the people of this country, not surrendering their conviction upon the moral trusteeship issue, have a right to say that we shall consider what the islands are going to cost this country in the years that are to come.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. McLEAN. The Senator stated that the expenses of this Government in the Philippines up to date are more than $600,000,000, I understand?

Mr. KENYON. Directly and indirectly, I think $800,000,000.

Mr. McLEAN. Will the Senator explain what he means by "directly and indirectly"?

Mr. KENYON. I should like to start with a statement of the figures from the distinguished Senator's neighborhood.

Senator Hoar said, in 1902, that the conflict in the Philippines had cost us $600,000,000. I think perhaps that was exaggerated.

Mr. McLEAN. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. But I take into consideration what we paid for the Philippines, what the additional Army cost, what the additional Navy cost, the cost of our war for the year in the Philippines, and everything of that kind, direct and indirect. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] stated before the committee that it had been costing about $50,000,000 and Gen. McIntyre stated that it had been costing about $15,000,000 a year.

Mr. McLEAN. I understood the Senator from Colorado to state that it had been costing $29,000,000.

Mr. KENYON. Before the committee he stated that it had been costing about $50,000,000.

Mr. McLEAN. It seems to me that the amount he stated on the floor of the Senate was somewhat less. Senator Hoar did make the statement that the cost was $600,000,000, but the Senator knows that at that time Senator Hoar was very intensely in opposition to the annexation of the islands. I think the Senator will find that that includes more than the entire cost of the Spanish War, which embraces, of course, the expenses in Cuba and Porto Rico and the building of naval stations in Cuba. The figures are very misleading, because the civil expense has been less than $5,000,000.

Mr. KENYON. That may be true.

Mr. McLEAN. The islands have been and are self-sustaining. I think that is the fact.

Mr. KENYON. They are self-sustaining on the civil side.

Mr. McLEAN. Senator Hoar made the further statement that thousands of soldiers lost their lives. I think the number was less than a thousand—something like 800.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator take into consideration the soldiers who served in the Philippine Islands and became sick and diseased, and died after their return?

Mr. McLEAN. In the Spanish War those who died on the field of battle or of wounds in the Philippines, I think, numbered 883.

Mr. KENYON. I would not give one of them for the whole Philippine Archipelago.

Mr. McLEAN. That is quite true, but the number is not a thousand.

Mr. KENYON. I am always very much persuaded by the Senator from Connecticut, but I still believe that taking into consideration those killed and those who died from sickness after they came away it will run into the thousands.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not want to interrupt the Senator too often.

Mr. KENYON. I am very glad to have the Senator interrupt me.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I should like to know if the Senator has any information as to the number of Filipinos who have been killed in the islands since their occupation by this country?

Mr. McLEAN. I can state to the Senator from Mississippi that in the war the number was 16,000. I know at the time it was stated that the ratio was 16 to 1——

Mr. VARDAMAN. Sixteen thousand Filipinos and how many Americans?

Mr. McLEAN. Eight hundred and eighty-three.

Mr. VARDAMAN. To what date does that come? Up to the present?

Mr. McLEAN. That was during the period of insurrection until civil government was established.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Many have been killed since then, have they not?

Mr. McLEAN. Very few.

Mr. KENYON. Let me say to the Senator from Mississippi that Gen. Young, who was before our committee, said that not very long ago he was called upon to go into the mountains to get a number of them, and that they went up there and shot to death all the people who were in this particular corral. I asked him how many there were, but he did not seem inclined to state.

Mr. HUGHES. There were about 300, including men, women, and children. I remember the incident very well, as it was reported in the newspapers at the time.

Mr. KENYON. That particular incident?

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; they were destroyed in the crater of an extinct volcano—men, women, and children, babes in arms. They were destroyed to the last infant, as I recall the published accounts in the newspapers.

Mr. THOMAS. Do I understand they were shot down by the military forces of the United States which represented the Government?

Mr. KENYON. That was to get a bandit.

Mr. THOMAS. And to get a bandit up in the mountains they killed those men, women, and children?

Mr. KENYON. I will not take the responsibility of that statement of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think the Senator from New Jersey should explain that a little. What he has stated is a matter of information to me.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not want to explain it in the time of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. Wait a moment. I want the RECORD to be correct. I do not want the Senator from Colorado to understand that the incident I referred to was the one referred to by the Senator from New Jersey; I know nothing about that. This was an incident cited before the committee, where the American troops went up into the mountains to get a bandit, and in the performance of their duty had shot men.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator and I were referring to the same incident that occurred probably something like eight years ago. I am not referring to a recent incident. It was one of the most horrible things that ever was enacted in the history of the civilized world. I was amazed at the time that the moral sensibilities of the Nation were not aroused to a greater extent than they were by that incident. The published reports of the officers of the United States with reference to that incident showed that it became necessary to bring in the inhabitants of a particular village. They were acting badly, as I understand; they were stealing and preying upon the country and conducting raids; and the United States forces were sent out to bring them in or to exterminate them. They chose the alternative of exterminating them. The last act of the drama was the gathering of the men, women, and children in the crater of an extinct volcano, where they were slain to the last infant. That was what the public press printed at the time.

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. POINDEXTER addressed the Chair.

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, Mr. President, I merely rose to make an inquiry, which I think has been fully answered. While I am on my feet, however, I want to express the hope that the Senator will not overlook the fact—I am satisfied from my knowledge of the Senator that he will not—that this question is much more than one of money to the American people, as this incident so terribly illustrates. In the face of instances like that our criticisms of the horrors that some of the countries over in Europe are perpetrating upon defenseless peoples will be largely blunted.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I want to say that I do not know whether the Army officers should be blamed for that. I have my doubts about that. The Senator will remember that when Burke arraigned Warren Hastings for crimes he had committed and when Hastings was tried Erskine was such a skillful lawyer that he put the defense on the proposition that Warren Hastings was not to be blamed; that the Government of England was to blame because they had carried out a system and scheme of colonization that made such things necessary to be done. If we are to carry out colonial government we can not blame the Army for doing the things they had to do to subject another people to our form of government.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield further to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not attach any blame whatever to any individual or to any branch of the Government, or at least I did not intend to do so. I think such horrible events as that just mentioned are the inevitable and the necessary consequences of the imposition of foreign government and control over subject peoples against their consent. They are inseparable from the situation, and a government like ours, where every man is a citizen, or ought to be, can not, without serious injury to its own institutions and without moral degradation, occupy the position of ruler by conquest of other peoples and other nations. Such instances as the one mentioned must necessarily occur, because those who are governed, if they have any spirit at all left in them, from time to time will assert by force their protest against conditions which are not the result of anything that they desire and which exist notwithstanding their own views and their own welfare.

Mr. KENYON. I did not want it to appear in the RECORD that what I had said might be a reflection upon the Army, because I think it is a growth of the system, just as the acts in British India were the growth of English colonial schemes.

Mr. THOMAS. I share that sentiment. I am very glad that the Senator referred to it, because I certainly had no intention of censuring or criticizing any particular individual or official or any particular branch of the government. The surprise to me is that these instances have not been more frequent, as they will inevitably be more frequent unless we do something, and do something soon, in my judgment, to relieve the situation and give those people the right to govern themselves.

Mr. KENYON. Along this military line, Mr. President, the question has now been suggested which comes to my mind, and it is this: Hawaii and Alaska are two of our possessions that we are never going to give up. The keeping of the Philippine Islands, if we became engaged in a controversy with any foreign nation particularly, weakens our ability to take care of Alaska and the Hawaiian Islands. Everybody with any military knowledge at all, or with any horse sense, knows that the Philippine Islands are a danger to us from a military standpoint. We could not protect them a day; and while we are willing to let them go if we can do so in an honorable way, there is not an American citizen who would be willing that any nation in the world should come and take them away from us. We would fight just as long as we had any men or any money to get them back, even if we did not want them.

Then, there is another argument as to what is best for our Nation. We have a Monroe doctrine. Is it merely a selfish doctrine? Do we use the Monroe doctrine when it is for our benefit and violate it when it is for our benefit to do so? We go across the sea and colonize islands in the Orient, while at the same time we say to other nations, "You shall not come on this Western Hemisphere and colonize here." There is a great moral question involved in that. The development of a colonial form of government is a dangerous doctrine for our Republic. Other nations in the world have had some experiences in that line. I want to read into the RECORD what Gibbon says in his Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire as to that kind of government. He says:

> There is nothing more adverse to nature and reason than to hold in obedience remote countries and foreign nations in opposition to their inclination and interest. A torrent of barbarians may pass over the earth, but an extensive empire must be supported by a refined system of policy and oppression; in the center, an absolute power, prompt in action and rich in resources; a swift and easy communication with the extreme parts; fortifications to check the first effort of rebellion; a regular administration to protect and punish; and a well-disciplined army to inspire fear, without provoking discontent and despair.

A colonial form of government is contrary to the genius and the spirit and the history and the ideals of our Nation; and it is a constant menace, a constant danger from outside and a constant menace from the inside to the integrity of our people, because they may come to like the spirit of conquest and acquisition. So, Mr. President, it seems to me in discussing this question we can not be criticized because we take into consideration our own country.

It is said here that we are our brother's keeper. Yes; "but," as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] so well said, "not with a club." Not only are we our brother's keeper, but there is another Biblical quotation which might be apropos, and that is that he who provides not for his own "is worse than an infidel." So I am only contending that we do have this right, whatever force there may be to it, to consider the interests of our own country on this proposition just as well as the interests of the Filipinos.

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. KENYON. I yield to the Senator; certainly.

Mr. COLT. The Senator several times has spoken of the moral responsibility of the United States. The Senator has given great study and thought to this subject, and I should like to ask him whether, in his opinion, we would be fulfilling what he terms "the moral responsibility of the United States" if on the 1st of January, 1917, we should leave the Philippines? In other words, I should like to get the Senator's views as to what he means by "the moral responsibility of the United States" toward the Philippines, and what that moral responsibility calls upon us to do.

Mr. KENYON. That is a question, I will say to the Senator, that has been very troublesome to me. There is a conflict in my mind between the moral responsibility and the doctrine of governments deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed. If we take the position that we are toward the islands in the relation of guardian to ward, then we must assume that they are incompetent in any way to make any agreement or contract as to their own welfare. I do not know whether we can do that. I do think—I can not get away from the proposition, because it is my faith and belief—that there is a moral trusteeship. I have never been able to get away from the proposition, and I never wish to get away from the proposition, that there is a great Divinity that shapes the affairs of men and the affairs of nations. It is hard to see it sometimes; I have not been able to see it in the European conflict; but I can well believe that there was a great divine purpose to free the Philippine people from oppression, ignorance, and bondage, and that the moral trusteeship to carry out that purpose came to us. We may have had the same trusteeship as to Cuba. We solved that by declaring that of right they were entitled to their freedom; that Cuba had the right to be free and independent.

President Taft before our committee spoke of that moral trusteeship, as did Dean Worcester. It is there. Have we fulfilled it? When will we fulfill it? I do not know. If you are guardian and your ward is poor and helpless, you may want to give up your guardianship; it may be costing you money and sacrifice and restless nights, but in honor bound you may feel that whatever it costs you as such guardian you must stand by that ward. When the ward has grown up, has become 21 years of age, your guardianship, your moral trusteeship, is relieved. Just when our moral trusteeship in the Philippines will be relieved I do not know. You have got to balance that against the act of forcing something on a people that they do not want, and of course you can answer that by saying that if they are wards they do not know what they want. It is a troublesome proposition.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I understood the Senator to say a moment ago that he was not satisfied that the Philippine people desired independence.

Mr. KENYON. No; I said I was not satisfied that some of the witnesses who came before the committee and spoke for independence really wanted independence.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is the Senator satisfied that the Philippine people as a whole, as near as the desires of the great mass of the people can be ascertained, want independence?

Mr. KENYON. I think there are great numbers of people in the Philippine Islands who do not know what independence is, who think it is some general who is going to give them something; but I do think that, outside of the Americans who have gone in there, the educated people to a large extent desire independence, not now, but desire it ultimately, and desire a declaration of it now.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does not the Senator think that it would be doing a great injustice to ourselves if we should accede to the desires of the Philippine people to the extent of continuing to be responsible for them because they do not desire independence at this time, but at some future time they may desire independence, and so we will continue to act as their guardians and be responsible for them in a national sense? Does the Senator from Iowa think that, in the fulfillment of his duties as a representative of the American people in the Senate of the United States, he would be justified in voting for such a program as that?

Mr. KENYON. To keep them until they are fitted for independence?

Mr. POINDEXTER. To undertake the responsibility of looking after those people for an indefinite time in the future because they want us to do so, with a pledge that at some future time we will give them their independence?

Mr. KENYON. Oh, not at all. Was there anything in what I said that gave the Senator that impression?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. I did not intend to give such an impression.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understood the Senator was an advocate of the passage of this bill.

Mr. KENYON. I am.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And the bill in its title and in its preamble provides for that. That is the chief objection to the bill in my opinion.

Mr. KENYON. When in our judgment it is for the permanent interest of the people in the Philippines that they should have independence, not when in their judgment it is to their interest. My notion is that we ought to say, "When in our judgment they are fit for independence" or adopt some such preamble as that suggested by my colleague [Mr. CUMMINS].

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. KENYON. Well, being as this is the first one, I will.

Mr. CLAPP. I have been somewhat interested by the reference to moral obligation. I want to ask the Senator if he would not acquiesce in this suggestion, that a part of the duty of the guardian to the ward is the moral education of the ward? The Filipinos are studying the books; they are learning what is in the books; but if they are ever to be fitted for government, from our viewpoint and according to our standards of government, they ought to understand the morals of government, involving honesty, justice, and integrity. And is it not a part of the duty of the guardian to develop the moral education of the ward, and can that be done by our reiterated breach of promise to these people? Can it be done, even without reference to the promise, by a nation which is in the attitude while proclaiming the principles of liberty of holding an alien race in subjection against their will? I would submit that as a part of the morals involved in this question.

Mr. KENYON. I thank the Senator for that suggestion. Of course the ward will never grow up strong and healthy physically or morally if the guardian always holds the ward's hands. The ward needs discipline probably, but it needs to have the right to struggle to develop itself. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], in his wonderful way of illuminating propositions, made that very plain on Saturday last. The experiment of self-government is what they need. The child never will walk unless it puts its feet on the floor; you can not learn to paddle your own canoe if you never have a chance; you can not learn to swim if somebody always holds you up in the water. The little couplet does not work very well in practical life:

Mother, may I go out to swim? Yes; my darling daughter.
Hang your clothes on a hickory limb, but don't go near the water.

If the wards—if the people in the Philippines are wards—never get the opportunity of learning and struggling and working out their own salvation and their own nationality and, as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] suggests, their own morality and moral development, they will never be fitted for self-government.

Mr. CLAPP. If the Senator will pardon me, he does not quite emphasize the point that I sought to place emphasis upon, and that is this: Assuming the relation of guardian and ward between us and the Filipinos, I do not see how they will ever learn the moral phase of the lesson, unless they cut away from us to learn it, so long as we hold before them the spectacle, the incongruous spectacle, of a nation professing to be based upon the principle of self-government, the principle of liberty, and yet keep an alien race in subjection against their will. They have got to go somewhere else to get their lesson in the morals of government.

Mr. KENYON. They have learned that lesson from us, have they not?

Mr. CLAPP. I am afraid they have, and it is an unfortunate lesson.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to his colleague?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. CUMMINS. I only desire to remind my colleague that in discussing the relation between a guardian and a ward he ought to remember that in the State from which he comes, and which, in part, he so well represents here, a half-grown child, namely, one of 14 years of age, has a right to choose its own guardian.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; I thank the Senator for that suggestion.

Now, Mr. President, I wish I might finish to-night. I had no notion of taking this much time, but I have not been entirely responsible for it. The moral trusteeship question, which the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] has suggested, I do not wish to leave just yet. Have we fulfilled that obligation? Have we fulfilled it to such an extent now that we can let these people go? We have built up for the Philippine people a wonderful commerce. The figures show that their trade has increased from $28,000,000 in 1899 to over $110,000,000. The increase of trade with the United States has been from $4,000,000 to $50,000,000. We have given them sanitary training. Leprosy, which was common in the islands when we went there, has been practically eradicated. We have taught them how to build good roads; we have taught them sanitation; we have taught them agriculture, trade, and commerce; we have taught them high ideals. They have learned these things from us. We see the splendid picture of great school buildings throughout the islands, with hundreds of thousands of children in attendance. We have done a great work as guardian. Now, I do not know whether or not we have completely fulfilled our duty. If at this time we should let them go and trouble should arise such as has occurred in Mexico, we might have some feeling that we had not carried out our trusteeship to the point where we should have gone. I do not know. I am troubled about that.

Mr. President, if we can have a preamble that expresses more clearly exactly what we are going to do with the Philippines, I should be very glad to support it. Of course, we can not bind the future, except as it is in the last resort a question of honor and good faith of the American people; and the honor and good faith of the American people can always be counted upon, and so the solemn declaration of Congress in favor of independence for the Philippine people at some time would be carried out by those who follow us.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. KENYON. I do.

Mr. CHILTON. I do not want to interrupt the Senator in his splendid address, but I take it from something he said a while ago that probably he will not be able to finish this evening. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] desires to move an executive session, and I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that this would be a convenient time, if he so desires, to suspend for the day.

Mr. KENYON. I shall be very glad to suspend now.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, January 11, 1916, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord our God and our Father, whose blessings are beyond compare, "Thou openest Thine hand and satisfiest the desire of every living thing." The world is large enough and fruitful enough for all. Thou hast taught us how to live together in peace and harmony, but "man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn." Hasten the day when man's humanity to man shall make countless millions glad. Heaven is ours now, but we make it hell by selfish ambitions, greed, and unholy desires. Forgive us our sins, we beseech Thee, and inspire us to the higher and nobler life in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, January 8, 1916, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 52. An act to provide for a commission to codify and suggest amendments to the general mining laws; and

S. 2519. An act to encourage the reclamation of certain arid lands in the State of Nevada, and for other purposes.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 51. Joint resolution appropriating money for the payment of certain claims on account of labor, supplies, materials, and cash furnished in the construction of the Corbett Tunnel; to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 136. An act granting an extension of time to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Colona Ferry, in the State of Illinois; and

H. R. 4717. An act to authorize Butler County, Mo., to construct a bridge across Black River.

BRIDGE ACROSS OCONA LUFTY RIVER, N. C.

Mr. BRITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have changed the reference of the bill (H. R. 3675) to provide for the construction of a bridge across the Ocona Lufty River at Cherokee, N. C., from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. What is the bill about?

Mr. BRITT. It relates to the construction of a bridge on the lands of the Cherokee Indians in North Carolina, and is a bill in which the Indian Bureau is interested. I think it should be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Did the chairman of either committee recommend this?

Mr. BRITT. It has not been formally recommended.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know what the request is.

The SPEAKER. The request is to take the reference of a bridge bill away from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and refer it to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not know anything about the bill.

The SPEAKER. It is a bill to build a bridge on Indian lands.

Mr. MANN. Is the consent of Congress required because this is a navigable stream, or because it is on Indian lands?

Mr. BRITT. It is because it is Indian lands.

Mr. MANN. It is not a navigable stream?

Mr. BRITT. It is a nonnavigable stream, an intrastate stream, and separates the land of the Cherokee Indians and the Government land on which the Indian school is located. It is desired to construct a bridge for the benefit of the Indians who cross this small stream.

Mr. ADAMSON. If it is not a navigable stream, of course a change of reference is proper, but if it is a navigable stream it would not be proper.

Mr. BRITT. It is a nonnavigable stream. It is the Ocona Lufty River, in North Carolina.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I will not object, but I think the gentleman is making a mistake if he wants to get his bill passed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is this river recognized as a navigable river by the War Department?

Mr. BRITT. No; it is a small stream running between the land of the Cherokee Indians and the Government land on which the Indian school is located, and the bridge is for the convenience of the Indians going back and forth from their reservation to the school and the Indian village.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has it ever been under Federal improvement?

Mr. BRITT. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is the gentleman now asking for anything to improve that river?

Mr. BRITT. We are asking for an appropriation of $15,000 to build this bridge only.

Mr. MANN. That is an Indian Affairs matter.

The SPEAKER. Is this stream on the boundary of two States?

Mr. BRITT. It is not. It is within the State of North Carolina.

Mr. MANN. This is to get an appropriation, which would come from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Texas asked the gentleman from North Carolina if the Government had made an expenditure to improve that stream. Has the Government attempted to improve the navigability of the stream?

Mr. BRITT. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. ADAMSON. On the gentleman's statement that it is not a navigable stream, of course I can not object.

The SPEAKER. This is entirely within the State of North Carolina.

Mr. ADAMSON. That would not make any difference; if it was a navigable stream it would still be a navigable stream. I suggest that the gentleman let it lie over until we can look into the matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from North Carolina accede to the request of the gentleman from Georgia that the bill lie over for the time being?

Mr. BRITT. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina withdraws his request.

RURAL POST ROADS.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, on Friday last, as the chairman of the Committee on Roads, I filed a report, as directed by that committee, on the bill (H. R. 7617) to provide that the Secretary of Agriculture, on behalf of the United States, shall, in certain cases, aid the States in the construction and maintenance of rural post roads. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], of that committee, desires to file minority views, and I ask unanimous consent that he may do it at any time within five legislative days, but that that, of course, shall not interfere with the consideration of the bill if it should come up sooner.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WASLH] have five legislative days in which to file minority views on the bill referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an editorial from the Toledo Times entitled "A worthy bill," on the subject of old-age pensions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by printing an editorial on the subject of old-age pensions. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I ask immediate consideration of the bill H. R. 320, a bridge bill, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, pending that I would like to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a set of resolutions adopted by the Local Union of Mine Workers of America, together with the letter transmitting the same to me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing certain resolutions and the letter transmitting the same to him. Is there objection?

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky what the nature of those resolutions is?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The resolutions relate to the printing of a report heretofore made by the Industrial Commission.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, for the information of the gentleman I might say that the Committee on Printing has just had a meeting this morning and we are prepared to bring that report out. We have many resolutions of a similar kind lying on our table, and I trust the gentleman from Kentucky will withhold that request, and I am sure the committee will make a report on the bill that will be entirely satisfactory to all concerned. We have reached an understanding with respect to these unions, and if the gentleman will withhold his request I think by to-morrow we will be ready.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I am only complying with the request of this organization, and therefore submit the request for unanimous consent to print.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. WATSON of Virigina. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the Committee on Labor I desire to submit a request for unanimous consent that that committee may be allowed to sit during the sessions of the House until the further order of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON] asks unanimous consent that the Committee on Labor be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that he prepare the ordinary resolution so the clerks will have it in proper form.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the committee was in session engaged upon a very important hearing and we did not have time to prepare a resolution.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can reduce it to proper form.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia. I will do that.

The resolution submitted is as follows:

House resolution 82.

Resolved, That the Committee on Labor be allowed to sit during the sessions of the House until the further order of the House.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Florida rise?

Mr. CLARK of Florida. To ask unanimous consent to address the House next Monday after the ordinary business is finished, not to interfere with any public matter, on the subject of public buildings.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] asks unanimous consent to next Monday——

Mr. MANN. Next Monday is unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. After the transaction of the regular business of the House, that he may be allowed to address the House for one hour on the subject of public buildings. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. ADAMSON. If everybody else is through——

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair is going to recognize the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. ADAMSON. I wanted to yield to him, if I got recognition.

LEAVE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Alabama rise?

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization to ask unanimous consent that it may sit during sessions of the House, and I will reduce that to writing and hand it to the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, it is for two days, namely, the 20th and 21st of this month.

Mr. BURNETT. I will modify the request to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put it that way, then. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that on the 20th and 21st of this month the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House.

Mr. MANN. Did not this committee have this permission generally?

Mr. BURNETT. No; we did not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization be allowed to sit during the sessions of the House on January 20 and 21. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution agreed to is as follows:

House resolution 83.

Resolved, That the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization be granted permission to sit during the sessions of the House.

BRIDGE ACROSS PEND OREILLE RIVER, IDAHO.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 320, a bridge bill, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill named. Is there objection?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LEWIS. To inquire as to priority in this matter.

The SPEAKER. There are two or three little things which will take 5 or 10 minutes, and in the meantime the gentleman's audience will be increased. [Laughter.] The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 320, a bridge bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 320) to authorize the county commissioners of Bonner County, Idaho, to construct a bridge across Priest River.

Be it enacted, etc., That the county commissioners of Bonner County, State of Idaho, are hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge, and approaches thereto, across Priest River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in township 56 north, ranges 4 and 5 west, Boise meridian, in the county of Bonner, in the State of Idaho, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the words "Priest River" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Pend Oreille River."

Page 1, line 6, after the word "at," insert the words "Priest River at."

The question was taken, and the committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment: Line 3, strike out the word "commissioners," and after the word "Bonner," strike out the word "County."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 3, by striking out the word "commissioners," and after the word "Bonner," strike out the word "County."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DILLON. I move to amend the title by striking out the word "commissioners" and striking out the word "County" after the word "Bonner" and striking out the word "Priest" and inserting the words "Pend Oreille."

The amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. DILLON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS CHATTAHOOCHEE RIVER, GA.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 775.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a House bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 775) granting the consent of Congress to J. P. Jones and others to construct one or more bridges across the Chattahoochee River between the counties of Coweta and Carroll, in the State of Georgia.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to J. P. Jones, of the county of Coweta, or to the county of Coweta, or to the county of Carroll, all of the State of Georgia, acting jointly or separately, and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge or bridges and approaches thereto across the Chattahoochee River at a point or points suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Jones's ferry, also known as the old Moore ferry, or at Strickland's ferry, or at both, between the counties of Coweta and Carroll, in the State of Georgia, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire why the bill is framed giving the option to so many individuals to construct between these counties?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will say to the gentleman, Mr. Speaker, that the question is very natural. The bill deals with a very peculiar situation. The county of Coweta, on the east side of the river, has a good road down to Jones's ferry. West of that ferry, the Carroll people do not think the road is good, and so they have built a good road down to Strickland's ferry, a mile and a half below. The counties can not agree on one bridge, because they can not agree at which ferry to build the bridge. Each county wants to build the bridge, and probably both will. It is certain that Jones will build one at his ferry. I do not think the counties are going to agree where to build it. We want the bridge, and we do not care if we have two.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand that you are granting the right to one Jones to build either or both bridges, and also the right to the counties to build either or both bridges?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will say that Mr. Jones is a wealthy man, who owns the land on both sides at his ferry. He wants the bridge. He lives in Coweta County and wants the county to build the bridge if it will do so. Coweta County and Carroll County can not agree at which ferry to build the bridge. Jones says he is going to build a bridge, if we consent, unless the county does so. Carroll County is going to build one at Strickland's ferry. Three parties have asked me to secure the consent of Congress to build, and I have dispensed with the necessity for three bills by including them all in one.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is merely a highway bridge?

Mr. ADAMSON. That is all. There is a good railroad bridge below there, some 90 feet high.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS OHIO RIVER, STEUBENVILLE, OHIO.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, there are one or two other bills. I do not see the authors or those who reported them. If I can get consent, I will call them up myself.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] is here. He has a bill.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House bill 3593.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3593) to authorize the Ohio-West Virginia Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Ohio River at the city of Steubenville, Jefferson County, Ohio.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Ohio-West Virginia Bridge Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River, to and into Cross Creek district, in the county of Brooke, in the State of West Virginia, from the southern end of the city of Steubenville, in the county of Jefferson, State of Ohio, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "Virginia," insert the words "its successors and assigns."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I consider it bad practice to take these bills up under unanimous consent a week prior to the date when they are in order; but I do not intend to interpose objection at this time in the session on that account. I would like to inquire whether this bridge company has already obtained the consent of the State authorities to go ahead with the construction of this bridge, or is the initiative being taken here in Congress? And then do they intend to get the consent from the respective State authorities?

Mr. NEELY. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin I am not informed in the matter.

Mr. MANN. It is under the State law. Each of these States have laws covering that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not know what the respective laws are.

Mr. NEELY. I know of no State law in West Virginia that would require such authority to be obtained.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says there is a State law that grants that consent.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the suggestion that there is nothing in the Ohio law that has to be consulted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STAFFORD. One further question. Is there objection to the construction of this bridge by any local association?

Mr. NEELY. None whatever. Mr. Speaker, a bill which is precisely the same as the bill under consideration here was passed by the Senate on January 7. It is Senate bill 2409. I ask unanimous consent that it be substituted and taken up in lieu of the bill under consideration.

Mr. MANN. Where is the Senate bill?

Mr. NEELY. It is on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. When was it brought over?

Mr. ADAMSON. It was brought over Saturday, January 8.

The SPEAKER. Does the chairman of the committee know whether it was referred to his committee or not?

Mr. ADAMSON. I understood it was to be laid on the Speaker's desk. I have not inquired in the committee room.

Mr. MANN. If it is a Senate bill you had best let it go for the minute until you find out. It is privileged matter if there is a Senate bill on the Speaker's table.

Mr. ADAMSON. All right. Let it go temporarily until it is found.

Mr. NEELY. I ask, then, that it go over temporarily until the Senate bill is found.

The SPEAKER. When a bill comes over from the Senate and a gentleman wants it held on the Speaker's table he ought to notify the parliamentary clerk or the Speaker, one or the other. Let this go over temporarily until we find out about it.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, there are two other bridge bills here, one introduced by Mr. LANGLEY and one by Mr. RUSSELL, if the House wants to take them up before the oratory sets in.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks you had better proceed with the oratory when you get through with the small matters.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, IOWA.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 73) to amend chapter 231, known as the Judicial Code, act of March 3, 1911, volume 36, United States Statutes at Large, section 81, page 1111, introduced by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER]. It provides for a change of time for holding court in Judge Wade's district. I will say that there is no opposition to the bill on the part of the bar and the judge and the court officials.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 73, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill in full.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that on page 2, line 18, something is left out. It does not make good sense. On line 18 it says, "For the central division at Fort days in May and September."

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, that is a mistake in copying. This is a copy of the Judicial Code so far as read.

Mr. MANN. I suggest that you had better let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. TOWNER. Yes. We will let the matter go over until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the matter will be deferred until to-morrow.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. BLACK, for one week, on account of illness.

To Mr. KONOP, for one week, on account of illness in his family.

POST-OFFICE AFFAIRS.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order heretofore made, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LEWIS] is recognized for one hour. [Applause.]

WHAT IS A DEMOCRAT?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Speaker, the question is sometimes humorously asked, "What is a Democrat?" and this seems an opportune time to attempt to answer. Byron, the poet, said, "Democracy—the devil was the first democrat" [laughter], while enthusiastic devotees have declared that the first democrat was the Carpenter of Nazareth. Now, we Democrats belong somewhere between these extremes. Where is it?

Herbert Spencer declared democracy to be the ultimate social truth. The truth is, my friends, democracy is difficult to define, because it is not a dogma or a doctrine susceptible of formal statement. It may be better described as that great movement in history which has had for its object the elevation of the common man. It is a world aspiration; not a ritualistic profession, but a cardinal sympathy whose formulas change from age to age. Its ruling thought, its unvarying purpose, is, I say, the elevation of the common man. It seeks the temporal salvation of the plain people as religion seeks the spiritual salvation of us all. And let me say that a democrat, indeed, may belong to any party, may belong to any age; his cardinal characteristic is a sympathy with the common man, and if he strives to advance the movement, active throughout the ages, for the elevation of the plain man, then he is a democrat, however he may disguise himself by party phrases.

"THE LEAST GOVERNMENT IS THE BEST GOVERNMENT."

I say the formulas of democracy change from age to age and are adapted to human circumstances like the maxims of a court of equity. A formula of the greatest democratic value in one set of human conditions may be totally out of place in another. And this is well illustrated in the experience of modern democracy. The crying evils and wrongs of the eighteenth century sprang from private and artificial monopolies. By royal grants and prerogative certain persons favored by the king were given a monopoly in the manufacture or sale of the necessaries of life, like salt, saltpeter, currants, iron, powder, furs, firearms, calfskins, lists of cloth, potash, vinegar, steel, brushes, pots, bottles, lead, oil, glasses, paper, starch, tin, new drapery, Spanish wool, Irish yarn, and even gold and slaves. The holders of these monopolies used them to raise the prices on the people, and so incurred the ill will and the challenge of democracy. It fought these great monopolies, and its war cry was the formula, "The least government is the best government." With it democracy overthrew the private monopolies of that age and stripped the kings of Europe of their power to establish private monopolies. For the eighteenth century democrat the "least government" meant no monopolies, no lettres de cachet, and in that sense meant also the best government. It was an age of the misuse of the functions of government for private ends.

When the king got hungry for quick money he created and granted some favorite monopoly. And to get rid of these oppressions democracy invented its formula and with it destroyed monopolies and unlocked the gates to equal rights in trade. Is it not odd to hear men misusing this fine old maxim now to keep monopolies in private hands, especially the postal monopolies, from operation by the postal authorities under the Constitution?

This eighteenth century aphorism was one of the most serviceable formulas democracy has ever had. It has served its purpose, and served it gloriously, and to misapply it now in defense of its historical enemy, the private monopoly of our day, is profanation indeed.

NINETEENTH CENTURY FORMULAS.

The democratic philosophy is affirmative as well as negative, constructive as well as eliminative, and requires something more than "don'ts" for its realization. It has its "do's," its constructive as well as its negative commands to utter. To realize its aims there are things—constructive things—it must do as well as things prohibited, just as with the average human being. The eighteenth century work of democracy was eliminative in character; it had to destroy certain abuses. The nineteenth century democracy had positive duties to discharge, and it framed its formulas accordingly.

EQUAL RIGHTS TO ALL; SPECIAL PRIVILEGES TO NONE.

Unquestionably this great maxim is the best statement of democratic duty. Special privileges, offensive monopolies, it still condemns, and for a century American democracy has battled with the beast of special privilege falsely called the "protective tariff." Sometimes democracy, sometimes the beast, is triumphant, but the fight of democracy will go on until its purpose is achieved. But the program "equal rights to all." How is that to be realized? My answer is that its realization calls for the constructive element in democracy. This movement in history which has its mind on the elevation of the common man, not merely by preventing unjust attacks upon what he has but through constructive measures, enables him to enjoy along with superman the developmental advantages and agencies of advancing civilization.

CONSTRUCTIVE DEMOCRACY.

Your superman will take care of himself, but where human selfishness is involved unfortunately he can not be trusted to take care of others outside the circles of his blood or friendship. It is democracy's mission to protect the rights of the common man. How? Well, on the negative side by abolishing any special privileges in others, on the constructive side by providing the common man with the opportunities necessary to realize his rights. Let us see what this means in practice. The common man can not build roads for himself like the lord of the manor. Well, sir, democracy takes possession of all the roads and builds a road to every man's house, over which traverse your superman and your common man upon conditions of equal opportunity and so of equal rights. Again, the priceless gems of education giving access to the accumulated knowledge of the world. For this the equal right was granted and then denied by the want of educational opportunity to the masses. They had not the money to pay for private tutors. Democracy provided the opportunity. In the name of society it established the common school, where all the children of men may have their vision opened to the science of our time. And, again, man has need to communicate with his fellows beyond the reach of look or voice. The fortunate, or the superman, could afford his own courier, which the common man could not, or pay the price exacted by private persons for such service. Democracy again supplied the opportunity. It establishes a postal service actually reaching to the ends of the earth, over which the message of the common man moves with the same celerity as his more fortunate brother's and at rates which all can pay.

In the courts of democracy "equal rights" mean something more than paper rights, or rights which exist only on paper—rights which the masses have not the facilities to enjoy. They mean realized rights, and democracy knows they must be realized before they can be justly called "equal."

Equal rights, then, do not mean merely the like legal privilege to enjoy a wholesome common advantage, but the placing of that advantage on a plane where the plain people can actually reach and enjoy it. This I affirm is the mission of democracy. It is its mission as sustained by history; it is its mission as defined by hope. Democracy esteems and applauds the superman, but it loves the plain people, yet while it is striving to elevate him to the great dignity of his species, it does nothing to pull down the genius or the man of achievement. The common road has not hindered his travel; it has smoothed and extended it. The common school has not lessened his horizon; it has brightened it. And the postal courier has not obstructed his messenger, but has relieved him of his burden and multiplied his feet a million times. And your supermen themselves—what institution can claim more of them than are found in the annals of democracy? The men like John Stuart Mill, like Thomas Jefferson, who knew that service of their fellow man gave the surest title to true greatness.

AGENCIES OF CIVILIZATION.

What is the lesson we learn from history of the mission of democracy. It is that the grant of equal rights to the citizen imposes the duty of providing, when practicable, for the actual enjoyment of such rights, otherwise the rights are not equal rights or rights at all. They are mere mockeries, mere lawyers' quibbles. This is true of all those advantages of existence and great agencies of civilization which are susceptible of common enjoyment, and of which the developing resources of society permit of an equal use. Democracy is wedded to no ism, to individualism, to communism, or to socialism when the question of method is to be solved. It is not a one-fingered philosophy, not a one-geared machine. What it demands is that the common blessings of life shall be made susceptible of enjoyment by the common man in fulfillment of its motto, "Equal rights to all." It adopts such social methods to achieve its great purpose as reason and experience approve. And, gentlemen, this means the condemnation of agencies which may be found deficient or insufficient for its purpose. Democracy pronounced this sentence on the private road, it pronounced it on the private school, and on the private carrier of the written communication. They were weighed by democracy and found wanting in capacity to sufficiently serve the human family. And democracy has recently pronounced the same sentence on the private express carrier. Let us see what it said about the express companies and then judge it by the facts of recent history.

THE PARCEL POST.

The express companies had been in operation for generations, with the most desirable shipping rights over the railways. They therefore had a fair chance to make good. Now, democracy charged that they were insufficient; that is, inefficient. They failed to reach the farm, most in need of the package service; and as to the urban population, they denied transportation to half the traffic by charging prohibitive rates; in short, they were doing only a half man's work and giving a grossly inadequate discharge of the package service. It then established the people's express service—the parcel post—to remedy this condition.

This parcel post has been in operation three years. What does experience of the results say? Here are the facts:

In 1912, the year before the parcel post, the express companies carried 317,000,000 packages. That represented their total service in that year in moving the potential package traffic of the country. It was about three parcels per capita, for which they secured an average rate of 50 cents per package. In 1915 these companies carried 280,000,000 pieces—at 48 cents each—and the parcel post carried 400,000,000 pieces—at 14 cents each, counting only packages of a pound and more. In three years the traffic leaped from 317,000,000 to nearly 700,000,000 packages—from three packages to seven per capita, in 1915, of which four were moved by the parcel post. Four per capita by the three-year-old rival, as against less than three per capita by the time-trained, if not the time-honored, private express agency. "Efficiency! What crimes are committed in thy name!" For 40 years the people were denied this service, because it was asserted falsely that the post office was not efficient enough to do this work of the express companies. Now we find that the express companies were killing more traffic than they carried, were performing only about half the function, and, call the statement demagogic if you will, it is a true statement; the traffic they refused to carry was the common-man's traffic. It was traffic that could pay 14 cents per package to the Postal System but could not pay 50 cents to the companies, not to speak of the postal Rural Route Service necessary to carry the package to the farmer on more than a million miles of daily route. So much for the efficiency of these de facto parcel posts, the express company adjuncts to the postal function.

Now, how about the economy of these transportation rivals in the package field? This is a point of the greatest importance. The express companies lost $2,500,000, they say, on the 1915 traffic, and recently secured, on this ground, an advance of their rates from the Interstate Commerce Commission. Their statement shows that they secured 48 cents for each piece, and that it cost them 24 cents each to handle it. It cost the Postal System less than 5 cents each to handle its most expensive parcel, the one of 3 pounds and more in weight, that required the aid of vehicle delivery. Six censuses of the parcel-post traffic have been taken, for a half month in April and October of each year, and they show a progressive decline of the cost of parcel vehicle delivery from 39 mills to 28 mills per parcel, and this while the costs to the companies have been going up.

If the cost, 2 cents a parcel for "pick up" and 2 cents more for "collection of the rate from the consignee" (services the companies give, but the post has not yet given), be added, it appears that the Post Office could handle its package (giving all the facilities granted by the companies) at 9 cents, and the heavier express package at 12 cents, against the 24 cents which it costs the companies. The experience shows that if the Post Office were given the express traffic it could make a profit of some thirty millions a year, at their rates, and paying the railways what they now receive of the companies.

But does the parcel post pay? Yes; about 25 per cent on the average, and the larger the package the greater the profit. The parcel that calls for wagon delivery weighs an average of 5½ pounds. It costs less than 5 cents for all postal processes and 6 cents for railway pay—11 cents in all. The Postal System received for it 18 cents, leaving 7 cents profit.

Efficiency; economy; it is hardly necessary to say more. The express company is obviously delinquent under both standards, while democracy's establishment, the parcel post, has given us proof of incomparable achievements in both. It has cut the operation cost per parcel to less than half by express, it reaches the 25,000,000 rural population, and has more than doubled the package traffic. Thus is democracy's purpose for the common man realized, and its wisdom in the selection of economic methods justified by results. Your common man had an "equal right" to have his package carried, but the companies carried only for those who could pay their rates, only three out of the seven parcels potential, whereas the Swiss parcel post carries 10 per capita, probably the figure our parcel post will attain when fully developed.

The House to-day realizes its great need for additional revenue. If the Post Office Department will expand the parcel post to its normal dimensions as is done in other countries there is awaiting it a profit of from $30,000,000 to $35,000,000.

Somebody asked does the parcel post pay, a very proper question. Let us see about that. We have 5 cents, the cost of handling the parcel. Then we have railway pay for 5½ pounds, which costs 6 cents more. You can compute it yourself. The new traffic is costing about 6 cents a ton-mile, or a cent a pound for 333 miles. That is the out-of-pocket expense, for under the sliding scale this is the rate we are paying the railways on parcel traffic.

The country thought that the express companies were making egregious profits in their time. I want to inform the House that no express company in the history of the country has ever made one-half the profits out of the small parcels that the Post Office is making at this moment. At least 25 per cent of the parcel-post receipts represent profit to the service.

We have had enough experience with it now to satisfy the most timid man that the clause in the substitute bill passed by this House, giving the Postmaster General the power to change the weight limit, the size limit, the rates, the zones, and all the conditions of the service, is a power very wisely placed as judged by the result, and that he ought to exercise that power to cover the whole parcel-post function of transportation, as abroad, and give the farmer who is on the farm where the express service can not reach an equal right to transportation in small shipments. That means, at least, a weight limit of 100 pounds. It means also a size limit, say, of 2 feet square. And it means, besides, the collecting of the rate on delivery, and that, as the President promised in his inaugural address, "the United States should be given a parcel post equal to that of any other country in the world." Now, the weight limit in all these other countries, except England, runs from 100 to 132 pounds.

In Germany, in Austria, in Belgium, in Norway, in Sweden, and elsewhere the weight limit is set at 100 pounds and up. In England, it is true, it is only 11 pounds, but in England they never had the occasion for a parcel-post service that we have had in this country. Let me tell you why. In England the railroads deliver and collect the class traffic from all points they reach, and they graduate their rate down to 2 pounds, and as low as 8 cents for the service, whereas in the United States the rate is graduated down only to 100 pounds for railroad service and the lowest rate is a quarter of a dollar.

Mr. Speaker, I am here to-day to tell, in my feeble way, the economic romance of the parcel post in this country. It has dispelled all doubt as to American postal efficiency. It found a field in which the private servitor was doing only three-sevenths of his work, less than a half-man service, and it took this small parcel with the small rate that the express company could not move without bankruptcy, and it is moving it to-day with a tremendous profit. The Bible says the servant is worthy of his hire. Judged by every test of efficiency, of extension of service, of economy in the performance of that service, the postal establishment is entitled to the full field of operation, with regard to the small shipment, and if it is given that field this country will find within a year's time that some $30,000,000 of net revenue will have been added to its Treasury.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Is it not the claim of the railroad companies that this service is now being rendered for the Post Office Department without adequate compensation?

Mr. LEWIS. I do not think it is now the claim of the railroads that that is so. There was complaint for a time; but three sections of the country have been weighed since the parcels post went into effect. I ought to add, however, in justice to the subject, that if the parcels post is extended to the hundred-pound weight limit (and only 5 per cent of express packages exceed that in weight), then we ought to have, in my judgment, not quadrennial weighings but annual weighings, and I believe also under such circumstances the railroads ought to be relieved of the burden of delivering the mails under the 80-rod provision. It so happens, however, with respect to railway pay, that under the effect of this sliding scale we are paying so nearly as can be ascertained some 6 cents a ton-mile, barring rural post offices. The express companies are paying about the same rate, on the average, to the railroads for carrying their traffic. The trouble is that in one section of the country they may be paying as high as 8 and in another section as low as 4 cents, but 6 cents a ton-mile about expresses the average for the different sections of the railroad field.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD. Up to what limit would the gentleman suggest that the Government exercise monopoly on its packages in the parcel-post service?

Mr. LEWIS. Up to 100 pounds, but I would not say monopoly. We do not need any monopoly in the contest with the express company. We supplant them the moment the conditions and facilities of transportation are made equal. People do not realize that the postal establishment instead of being an inefficient institution is, indeed, one of the most efficient working organizations on the face of the earth. Even before the parcel post was established it was moving the average mail piece at a cost of a cent and a third per piece, and moving it over a million miles of rural routes, 250,000 miles of railway, and from once to even nine times a day over 150,000 miles of town and city streets and avenues.

Mr. Speaker, the parcel post has earned a right to be heard, and it demands its right to do a full-fledged parcel service—to have the regular weight limit of 100 pounds, and also the pick-up service.

Mr. ESCH. What effect would a pick-up or collection service in connection with the parcel post have upon the patronage of that service by the citizens?

Mr. LEWIS. I think a very great effect, I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. ESCH. Such an effect that it might still greatly reduce the competition of express companies in the field of the Parcel Post Service?

Mr. LEWIS. Oh, certainly so; where the rates are at all equal, say a 20-cent parcel-post rate and 25-cent express rate, the citizen will call up the express company to get his package. We are losing millions for want of a "pick-up" and "collect" of the rate from the consignee.

PROPOSALS FOR PARCEL-POST DEVELOPMENT.

Weight limit: One hundred pounds for pick up and delivery; no limit when package delivered to and collected from railway terminal by shipper.

Size limit: Eighty-four inches, measuring the length and half the girth combined.

Pick up: When postage on shipment is not less than 15 cents.

Insurance: Graduation of insurance rate from 3 cents minimum to 15 cents for $100.

"Collect": Privilege of "collect" on rate from consignee when postage is not less than 21 cents, the consignee to pay fee therefor at rate of 10 per cent of postage to be charged; minimum, 4 cents; the consignor to guarantee postage. Farm products direct from farm, no extra charge.

Classification: Parcels of first-class mail in single bundles directed to noncity-delivery offices may be sent if bearing "drop-letter" postage plus parcel rate. Any statement relating to contents of parcel may be inclosed within the parcel. Any mail piece exceeding 4 ounces in weight and marked "fourth class" or "parcel" may be posted at parcel rates.

Zones: The zones shall each be 50 miles in extent and be based on the present units.

Rates: First 50 miles, one-half cent per pound, plus 10 cents; farm products, plus 4 cents; minimum rate, 15 cents; farm products, 5 cents. Each additional 50 miles, 2 mills per pound or 5 pounds for a cent. No rate to exceed 12 cents per pound. Actual distances by rail to be taken up to 300 miles.

With the definite experience before us, we can say that the above rates would yield about 25 per cent profit.

Mr. STEENERSON. Formerly the department officials, and I believe the gentleman himself has so stated, stated that the average amount paid the railroads for weight of the mails would be 10 cents per ton-mile?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. The gentleman has now stated that the average is only 6 cents per ton-mile.

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; and I am glad the gentleman has called my attention to that.

Mr. STEENERSON. Has the gentleman explained the reason for this lower estimate?

Mr. LEWIS. No; but I will do so now. The last statement we had of the cost of railway pay was for April, 1913. With a view now to answering the statement formerly made by me, I will state that it showed that the average paid the railways was 10 cents a ton-mile.

Very well. Since that time some two or three, at least two, sections have been reported. Gentlemen perhaps are familiar with the very complex scale of pay under which the railroads receive compensation for carrying the mails. If the weight of the mails per day should be as low as 50 pounds on a particular route, the post office may have to pay as high as $1.50 per ton-mile, but then as you reach a daily weight of 48,000 pounds or more, the pay on that weight is about 5.27 cents per ton-mile. During the summer, I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], after exhaustive study the effect of this sliding scale became apparent to me. The effect is that the cost of any new traffic added, say from this date on, or indeed from the date of the parcel post itself, when divided into the additional compensation pay, amounts to about 6 cents per ton-mile, barring railway post-office pay. The sum of the added traffic moves on the low rates, so that future additions to the postal traffic under existing law will move, not at 10 cents a ton-mile, but move at something like 6 cents per ton-mile, which is above the rate paid by the express companies.

THE ELECTRICAL COMMUNICATION.

Equal rights to all. Equal rights to all. Is this great canon of Democracy realized in the use of the telegraph and telephone? Do the limitations of private monopoly permit the masses to utilize these instruments of communication according to their means and their needs; this régime of private monopoly which still lingers in this part of our postal system after its eviction by the postal system of practically every country but our own? Does the common man enjoy real equal rights to use either, or, as with the express company, is he barred from the equal right to use them by their prohibitory rates?

TELEGRAPH RATES.

Before the parcel post we had the highest parcel rates. They are now among the lowest in the world. But we still have the highest telegraph rates. They run from 25 cents to $1. Where the post conducts the telegraph they run from 12 cents to 24 for the longest distances. Here are the averages for Europe and the United States:

For 150 miles in Europe 12 cents, the United States 25 cents; 250 miles in Europe 12 cents, the United States 30 cents; 700 miles in Europe 12 cents, the United States 50 cents; 3,000 miles in Australia 24 cents, the United States $1.

TOLL RATES.

Our toll or long-distance telephone rates are even more immoderate. They run from three to seven times as high as the postal telephone rates of other countries. Here is a statement of the average rates for nine countries on the Continent of Europe:

Distance in miles	100	300	400	500	700
Continental rate	$0.20	$0.37	$0.39	$0.46	$0.53
American rate	$0.60	$1.80	$2.40	$3.00	$4.20

That is, for 100 miles we pay three times, for 300 miles five times, for 400 miles six times, and for 700 miles eight times the ordinary rate on the Continent of Europe for a three-minute conversation.

Mr. Speaker, I am obliged to make a sensational statement about these long-distance rates. It costs the American as much to ship his long-distance conversation over the wires, mile for mile, as it costs him to ship a ton of freight over the rails. The railroads get on the average 7 mills a mile for moving the ton of freight. The telephone company charges 6 mills a mile for carrying the three-minute conversation. Gentlemen can realize how weighty their conversations sometimes are. They weigh about a ton on the long-distance wires. [Applause.]

Mr. SNYDER. In your comparison of long-distance rates in the United States with rates on the Continent of Europe, do you attempt to maintain that the efficiency is equal or that the service is as good?

Mr. LEWIS. There are two kinds of service in the other countries. We have only one here. Abroad they give two kinds of service. If you are the superman that wants the quick service and will pay the double rate, you can get the "instantaneous service," but if you are an ordinary man or your affair is an ordinary affair, you can get these low rates of which I speak. The Bell system has rates only for the superman—for the Packard man. Its Ford facilities are entirely denied. [Applause.] I am using their own allegory, not my own; but their own allegory condemns them from the standpoint of democracy.

SOCIAL RESULTS.

Mr. Speaker, what is the result of these rates? Well, sir, it is just the same result as by express. Taking the telegrams and long-distance messages together, other countries use the wires from two to four times as often as we do. Denmark shows 17 such messages per capita and New Zealand 12; we show only 3. While we rank first in the use of the letter—101 per capita—12 outrank us in the combined use of telegrams and long-distance messages. And while our companies maintain only one telegraph office to seven post offices, these postal institutions maintain two telegraph offices for every three post offices. This is the penalty the masses must pay, an almost complete deprivation of service, that private monopoly may own this part of the Postal Service; the highest rates and the lowest service among the nations.

A POSTAL TELEPHONE.

"There is a road to every man's house. There ought to be a telephone on the inside," said the president of the Bell telephone system. True, very true. But it was democracy that built these roads to every man's house, and it will have to be democracy that strings the wires, the postal wires, into the common man's home. The resources of society are quite sufficient. He has an equal right, then, to the use of this great agency of civilization. Democracy will actualize this right for him by postalizing the telephone and telegraph.

How can the right be made equal? By providing a local rate so low that the humblest citizen can pay it, to call the doctor or to call the farmer and buy his table necessaries direct, by parcel post, at their first price and their first smell. Postal telephones give this low rate. The average local rate of postal systems, including the independents in the United States, is less than a cent a call. Any man can afford to pay that, and our postal system could give that rate with a profit and give a greatly improved service, using the automatic telephone. A cent a call postal rate would equalize every man's right to the telephone service, just as our postal rates have done.

But how stands the facts to-day? Let us take the city of Baltimore, which is fairly typical of our American cities. The lowest rate obtainable there for a two-party business and residence phone is at an annual sum of $24, giving 360 calls, at 7 (6.66) cents per call. If you want more calls, you can have them, above 360 to 1,800, at 5 cents each, and above 1,800 to 5,400, at 4 cents each. Now, the unlimited rate for the city of Berlin, for an exclusive service, with four times the population of Baltimore, is $42.84, or 80 cents a hundred calls. The Baltimore busines man pays $174 for 5,400 calls.

This Baltimore rate exceeds the flat-rate tariffs ($160) of London and Paris combined and equals the combined unlimited tariffs for Christiania, Stockholm, The Hague, Copenhagen, Auckland, Amsterdam, and Rotterdam. Instead of running below the letter rates, as with postal systems, our local telephone rates run with the street-car fare. It is $48 for the first 600 calls in New York and Washington, 8 cents a call. You can send a 4-pound parcel from Baltimore to New York for 8 cents by post (27 cents by express) and the post will deliver it and make about 1 cent profit.

It is pertinent now to discuss the effect of these local rates on the popular use of the telephone. Well, in 1911 Baltimore had 43,000 telephones; each was used but 993 times (calls) in the year, while the average for the country is over 2,000 calls. The phone in Washington, at rates higher than Baltimore's, represented only 822 calls per annum. That is, the private-rate methods prevent those who pay for their telephones from using them for more than half of their potential demand. The people of Baltimore had to do with 71 calls per capita, as against 156 calls per capita for the rest of the country.

Let us recur a moment to the comparison between Washington and Baltimore. Rates of $3.53 per 100 calls meant a phone utilization of 993 calls in Baltimore. Rates of $4.22 per 100 calls meant only 824 calls in Washington. That is, to increase the rate of Baltimore 20 per cent, to that of Washington, would reduce the phone utilization by 17⅓ per cent. The company would secure the same gross revenue with slightly reduced exchange expense and the subscriber 17⅓ per cent less service for the same payment. Conversely, you reduce the Washington rates by 20 per cent to correspond with Baltimore and you raise the utilization by 17⅓ per cent. The experience of the great Bell System shows that an average per 100 calls——

Washington at $4.22 means 824 calls, 44,000 per employee.

Baltimore at $3.53 means 933 calls.

Bell system at $1.86 means 1,747 calls, 65,000 per employee.

Independent at $0.86 means 2,055 calls, 111,000 per employee.

Norway—Postal at $0.62 means 2,332 calls, 118,500 per employee.

Here is a law of increasing returns, on the economic side, probably without a parallel. What it means is that if you ought to allow as much as 7 per cent return to secure private investors—I do not see how you can fairly expect them for less—you will have to scale your rates somewhere near those in Baltimore, and kill half the working capacity of the phone and the operative personnel. But if you had a fixed charge of only 3 per cent to pay, especially with the automatic telephone in use by postal systems, a cent a call, with the high utilization would produce sufficient revenue for all purposes.

Mr. FOCHT. I quite agree with the gentleman in respect to the excessive tolls on the telephone, and how they hamper and hinder business, and I would like to inquire—I did not gather the gentleman's conclusion with reference to the low cost at which the Government was able to handle the parcel-post business.

Now, as to the inability of the express companies, do you assign that to their lack of ability and efficiency, or to overcapitalization, or some species of graft?

Mr. LEWIS. I assign it to laws of their nature. The postal establishment is governed by a public-service motive. The private investor goes into a field with a private investor's motive. He would not last long in the field unless he sought to secure all he could in the way of profit. We know as men of affairs that there is a law of private finance as distinct as may be from a law of public finance. For example, let us take this local telephone rate, to which I am coming, for an illustration.

The average use of a telephone by the independent companies in the United States is 2,055 calls a year, at a rate of 86 cents per 100 calls, with 111,000 calls per employee per year representing the service of the personnel under that kind of rate and utilization. But in order to get the 2,000 calls per year on the phone the independents are giving a rate that is less than a cent a call.

Now, we come to the city of Washington, which is paying 4½ cents a call, a little over four times the independent rate. The telephone in Washington is used only 824 times a year and the employees handle only 44,000 calls per annum. The rate determines the working output of plant and personnel.

Now, then, we come to the motive. Your private investor in the city of Washington is making, say, 8 per cent profit out of his system of rates. I am not sure that he ought to get less. I do not think I would like to put any of my money into any such enterprise that did not promise something like 7 or 8 per cent. So it is a law of the nature of the private investor that requires him to make these rates what they are. But suppose Gen. Burleson were introduced into this field in Washington, and he were told, "Your phone here is used only 800 times a year. Its normal use, as indicated by the rest of the country, is 2,000 times a year. If you reduce the rate from 4 cents to 2 cents, the service will double, and you will not get quite as much revenue out of it as you did at 4½ cents, but what you lose in one pocket you will gain in the other pocket, by doubling service to the public, and the public and the post office are convertible terms. If you double the service on one hand and you lose 5 per cent in revenues on the other, from the standpoint of the postal establishment, your gain is 95 per cent, and you have actualized the equal right of the common man to use a telephone.

It so happens, although the subject is too complex for oral statement, that the difference between a required profit of 8 per cent and the required interest rate of 3 per cent on the investment would probably, with the aid of the automatic telephone, enable the postmaster to give not a 4-cent, not a 3-cent, not a 2-cent, but ultimately 1-cent-a-call rate for this great city. The rate in other countries tends to run about half the letter-postage rate.

Now the homes of the masses are nearly as bereft of the telephone service as they were of the express. The postal institution is the agent to popularize these agencies of communication. It has a genius for doing small things cheaply and well, the small things that deter the timid private investor, and it can actually make its wholesale price its retail price. Now, it is the postal object not merely to confer equal rights in form. It so organizes its services, so formulates its rates, as to remove any economic barrier to its use. The common man has realized his "equal right" to use any form of the postal service. Its rates are adopted to his means. A cent-a-call rate will put the phone in every home. Can there be any doubt that we should postalize the communication as we did the parcel and thus realize the rights of the plain man?

Two lines of attack only are made on the postal program. It is argued that there are more telephones in use per capita in the United States than in postal telephone countries. This is not true for Canada and elsewhere. It is not true for Maryland, with its 67 phones per 1,000, against 171 in Iowa—Maryland ranks twenty-ninth among the States. But even where it is true it is explained by our greater social wealth, which is the guaranty that we can have a telephone in, as we have a road to, every man's house. We have one-fourth of the horses in the world, two-thirds of the automobiles, and our postal system carries approximately as many letters as all the countries of Europe.

It is contended that as to toll, or long-distance rates, the Bell system gives what they call an "instantaneous" service, while the postal telephone-toll rates I have quoted command only a "take-your-turn" service, as with our telegrams. The postal systems give both kinds of services. For twice the popular rates they will give the busy man of means whose affairs justify his paying such rates a real "instantaneous" service. But your common man "taking his turn" can have the low rates which are within his means. They attempt to sustain the American rates with the suggestion that they represent a "Mercedes" or Packard car service, while the postal rates abroad are likened to the Ford. Exactly. Democracy abroad has given a Ford, or rather an affordable service, rates to suit the classes and the masses, and with distinctions of service amply gratifying the demands of both.

Another attack, made mostly by the poorly informed or the interested, suggests that our postal system is run at a deficit. This is a statement made in ignorance of the facts. It ignores the fact that 29 per cent of the total postal services are performed in the carriage and handling of second-class matter, and 24 per cent of this for nothing, together with 2 per cent more for Government mails, 26 per cent in all. This service—over $50,000,000 annually—represents a pure gift by the people to the cause of education and the dissemination of knowledge. It amounts to about the same proportion in postal operations as the passenger traffic in railway operations. Suppose the people who ride on the railways had government to compel the railways to carry all their passengers for nothing, could they then be heard to condemn the railways for maleconomy or inefficiency in failing to pay interest and dividends. "Ingratitude, thou marble-hearted fiend." This is what some of the beneficiaries of the $50,000,000 postal subsidy are doing.

THE INTERNATIONAL COMMUNITY.

But the greatest single application of democracy remains to be stated, and includes in its beneficent object common man and superman as well. You are familiar with the thought that nearly all governments have been founded by force, and since the force was limited to given localities, so, too, has been the government. Only the government founded by the Cæsars appears as a possible exception to this remark. It extended from Persia to Gibraltar, from the Pillars of Hercules to India's coral strands, and resulted in the Pax Romana, the operations of which have meant so much for modern civilization. No one since has been able to found anything resembling international government, and so we have no real international law.

In the absence of such government with the legislative, the judicial, and the executive functions the equal rights of men to life, liberty, and property are trampled under foot in an anarchistic international community. There is the same kind of need for law and order in the international community that there is in the city, the county, and State. For the rule of anarchism the régime of government should be substituted to safeguard the most commonplace human rights; and this means a legislative, a judicial, and executive institutions, under which a system of definite government and law may replace the gap, the anarchistic gap, in universal government, which now gives rise to the occasions causing abominable war.

"It can not be done," says the tory and the blinded pessimist, who dreams as much as other dreamers, but always dreams nightmares and who is afraid to brush down the cobwebs lest the ceiling may fall. It can be done, say the voices of the fathers who formulated the Federal Constitution. We did it; we formulated the interstate government, now possessing 48 members, and it performs all the functions of an international government, including some national functions. When we deprived the State of the treaty-making power we took away its war-making power as well. A Congress makes laws to govern the interstate, the international, relations of these 48 States, which the interstate courts interpret and the interstate marshals enforce. We had to meet just the same problems to be met by your generation in introducing law and order into the international community. Questions of the inviolability of State boundaries, disarmament of the member States, interstate and foreign commerce, representation in the lawmaking body. Your task is not greater than ours, and your duty and your opportunities, they are impossible. Meet them as we meet ours, with discriminating courage and a faith in the future sustained by the achievements of democrary in the past. The philosopher Turgot once declared: "I never admired Columbus so much for discovering a new world as I did for going out to hunt for it on the faith of an opinion." Here is your difference between your democrat and your tory. There are bogs, there are incurable evils. He would avoid the bogs by never moving in any direction. He never takes chances, and yet some chances must be taken if progress is to be made. Even the surest propositions of science involve elements of doubt for the finicky, and but for the leaders, the pioneers, the supermen willing to take some chance, republican governments, the common school, manhood, suffrage, and the principal elements of civilization could never have been gained. A new era is coming. When the burgetarian of the future finds that his interest charges on the public debt abroad are greater than the gross receipts of the railways, and again he is asked to put more money into the maw of militarism, then the international question is going to become a domestic question, and what the fathers did for 48 States in this country in constructing an interstate government to prevent war, will then be done for the 53 States whose sovereignty represents the population of the globe. [Applause.]

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Amen!

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD] is recognized for one hour. [Applause.]

EMBARGO ON ARMS AND AMMUNITION.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, when the European war first broke out Mr. Wilson, as President of the United States, true to his firm purpose to keep our country out of war, admonished our people to remain neutral and refrain from every word or act that might betray a preference or prejudice for or against either party to the unhappy conflict. I presume that every man of ordinary intelligence sympathizes with one side or the other engaged in that horrible struggle. Like most other Members of Congress I have heeded the advice of the President and have carefully refrained from any public utterance on the subject of the war, but from the very beginning the tories of Boston and the money changers of New York and New England have been saying and doing all in their power to push the United States into war with Germany. The real attitude of these propagandists is easily discovered from a reading of the following quotation which appeared yesterday in the New York Times over the signature of Dr. Charles W. Eliott, of Boston:

> One satisfactory solution can now be clearly discerned, and only one, which would be both feasible and effective. A firm and durable combination of Great Britain, France, Italy, Russia, and Japan—present belligerents—and, by invitation, the United States or Pan America and Scandinavia could assure the freedom of the seas for all of the world in time of peace and for themselves and their allies in time of war.

On last Thursday the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] assumed to address the House on the subject of an embargo on arms and ammunition. Instead of discussing the grave question which he had chosen for his theme he devoted his whole vehement harangue to an ardent espousal of the English cause, a virulent invective against the Germans, and an absolute forgetfulness of America.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the time has now come when somebody should speak on behalf of our own country.

Let us overlook the passionate outburst of the gentleman from Massachusetts and discuss his subject—an embargo on arms and ammunition—which he so carefully ignored. The gentleman did at one time get close enough to his subject to say that there is nothing in international law which would constitute it an unneutral act for any citizen of the United States to export arms or ammunition to any of the belligerants. Nobody disputes that proposition. So far as international law is concerned any citizen of the United States has a right to export arms and ammunition to any Government or any individual in the world, whether it be to Germany or England, to Austria or France, to Madero or Huerta, to Carranza or Villa. But it is also true that there is nothing in international law which would constitute it an unneutral act for the United States to lay an embargo on the exportation of arms and ammunition whenever it shall be deemed to our interest to do it. Of course I do not forget that some of the tories of Boston have urged that if war has once begun and has resulted in a given state of facts beneficial to one belligerant it would be an unneutral act for our Government to so change its own laws as to change such existing state of facts; that the progress of the war has resulted in the British driving the Germans from the sea, so that the allies now have a beneficial monopoly of buying arms in the American market, and that for us to now enact any legislation which would impair that monopoly would be an unneutral act, even though such legislation were enacted solely for our own benefit. Nothing could be more absurd. It shall be enough for the purposes of this discussion to call attention to the fact that the United States has already taken an opposite view of this question during this war.

On March 4, 1915, a fleet of German cruisers was afloat on the high seas. On account of the superiority of the British Navy this German fleet could not go to home ports for its supplies, but had to rely solely upon what could be secured from neutral ports, mainly those of the United States. This German fleet had become a serious menace to British shipping and the transportation of soldiers from British colonies to the seat of war. This was a condition brought about by the progress of the war, which was favorable to the Germans and disadvantageous to the British. On that day, March 4, 1915, the Congress of the United States changed that condition which had so been brought about by the progress of the war by the enactment of a resolution which made it impossible for those German cruisers thereafter to get supplies from our ports as it theretofore had been lawful for them to do. No protest from Germany or any other country was made against this legislation. By the enactment of that resolution the United States has foreclosed the question whether a neutral power may, by the amendment of its own laws in its own interest, change conditions which have resulted from the progress of a war between other powers. The only question remaining is whether the best interests of the United States would be promoted or retarded by laying an embargo upon the exportation of arms and ammunition.

Mr. Speaker, I favor an embargo. [Applause.] There are many urgent reasons why it should be established.

In the first place, an embargo would lessen the expenses of our military establishment. The gentleman from Massachusetts and many others from those sections where arms and ammunition are manufactured are urging Congress to undertake a scheme of militarism which would cost billions of dollars. They tell us that such a policy is absolutely necessary to save our country and perpetuate its institutions. If there is such a danger, by all means in our power we should prepare to meet it. Naturally the first thing we should do is to look about us and ascertain from what source such a danger is likely to come. We should then be in better position to prepare to meet it.

Now, what country can or is likely to undertake our overthrow? I call upon the gentleman from Massachusetts to tell us where is the lair of the lurking lion whom he dreads and against whom he asks us to make such costly and burdensome preparation? It would not be fair to the gentleman from Massachusetts to observe him so overwhelmed with alarm and assume that he has no ground upon which to base his apprehensions. Then, sir, I again ask, from what country do we fear an attack of such character that it is necessary to bend the backs of the people under the burden of taxation which would be necessary to meet the expenses of your gigantic military scheme?

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit me to ask him a short question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I will yield for a question if it is pertinent to the question that I am discussing.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he favors a temporary or a permanent embargo on exportations of arms and munitions of war?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Well, Mr. Speaker, that is hardly germane to the question I am discussing. But I may say for the gentleman's benefit that I would be glad to see a statute enacted putting a perpetual embargo on the shipment of arms and ammunition from this country. Moreover, I would be in favor of a law that would declare a Government monopoly on the manufacture of all arms and ammunition. [Applause.]

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Yes.

Mr. TAGGART. The gentleman favors, then, the placing of the same kind of an embargo on the exportation of arms and ammunition for the foreign armies as is placed now on the exportation of arms and munitions to the foreign navies? That is, you wish to extend the national embargo to the foreign armies as well as to the foreign navies?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It is just a question. I want to ask the gentleman this question: The President having recommended that we take steps for preparedness, does the gentleman think it would be good public policy, or in the interest of peace, for the President to publicly declare he thought we were in danger of having war with any other country?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, that is not pertinent to what I am discussing.

The rest of us are entitled to know what you know, and to consider the facts which you consider as calling for the extraordinary militarism which you so hysterically demand. Again, I ask, where is the foe you fear? The best method for arriving at a conclusion would seem to be to apply a process of elimination.

I believe the gentleman from Massachusetts will agree that no great preparedness is necessary to defend us from an attack by Cuba, Mexico, or any Central American or South American State, nor by Norway, Sweden, Holland, Denmark, or Switzerland, nor for many years to come by China, Persia, or Siam.

As a make-weight to their pro-British propaganda the tories have undertaken to arouse the country to a fear of German invasion. To frighten their crying children into silence they sing: "The Germans will get you if you don't watch out." Having caught the refrain of that silly song the gentleman repeats it here.

For a moment let us discuss the probabilities of a German invasion of this country.

In the first place, I am sure that the Germans, in their own interest, desire to be on friendly terms with us. The very best they can hope for is to come out of the present war in urgent need of credit, raw materials, and markets. [Applause.] They are sensible enough to know that to no other country could they look with so much hope as the United States, which has so large a surplus of what they will need. True, they may have some heartburnings over the truculent utterances of our tories, but in the face of these they would still regard it as more desirable and more expedient to come to us rather than go to England and Russia for what they want.

But, Mr. Speaker, to meet the tories upon their own ground, let us assume the absurd position that as soon as she emerges from the present war Germany will undertake to invade this country. To accomplish it she would have to land a conquering army on our shores. Such an army would have to cross the ocean under convoy of the German Navy, which is not as strong as our own, and disembark her army in the face of the resistance of our Army and coast defenses. Every sensible man knows it could not be done. But let us project the silly proposition further and assume that Germany could land an overpowering army on our shores, and that she desires to do it. Even then she would not undertake it. Germany knows very well that if she should send her army across the ocean for any purpose she would be immediately invaded by Russia and France and despoiled of her territory. [Applause.]

Then, to summarize, I assert, first, Germany has no desire to invade our country, but will prefer to borrow and buy from us and sell to us; second, that she could not if she would land an army on our shores; and, third, if she could accomplish such a feat she would not undertake it, because she knows that upon the departure of her army her country would be overrun by Russia and France.

Mr. Speaker, the tories who assert the possibilities of a German invasion do not believe it themselves, but are simply trying to capitalize the fears of the American people in their attempt to force the United States into the war on the side of the British.

What I have said about Germany applies with equal force to Austria. It is clear, then, that any danger from Germany or Austria can not be the basis of the fears of the gentleman from Massachusetts which impels him to urge such stupendous preparedness.

I again ask what country could endanger our security. Is it France or Italy or Russia? Neither of them is strong enough; and if she were, like Germany, she would not dare send her army so far away from home lest in its absence she should be invaded by Germany and Austria.

Is it Japan that the gentleman from Massachusetts and others, who demand such hasty and costly preparedness, fear? Japan, like Germany, has a navy much inferior to ours. It is not strong enough to convoy an army to our coast.

So, now, Mr. Speaker, I have made it clear that not one of the countries which I have named could successfully invade the United States, even with no more military preparedness than we now have.

There is only one more country to be considered. That is Great Britain. I do not believe that she has any more desire to invade the United States than has any of the other countries which I have mentioned. Neither do I believe she could accomplish it if she tried. Her navy is strong enough, but her army is not.

I, however, am not one of those who feel that we should gauge our preparedness by what we believe to be the designs of other countries toward us, but by the possibilities in the event any of them should entertain hostile designs.

I do not believe any country alone could successfully invade us, nor do I believe any combination of countries could be formed with enough strength to accomplish it except Japan and Great Britain. As I have already said, I do not believe that either of these countries have such designs. I have also said we should not rely upon what we believe to be the friendly designs of other countries, but put ourselves in a position to defend our country should they betray hostile designs. In the case of Japan and Great Britain there is one disturbing circumstance. I refer to the treaty in force between them which requires either to support the other in war. I regard that treaty as very unfortunate, and believe it has been the cause of many grave fears by the people of other countries.

If Japan, contrary to what we believe to be her temper, were to undertake hostilities against us and had the support of the British, our situation would indeed be critical. In such an eventuality our condition would be all the more unfortunate in that we should have to fight against the billion dollars' worth of arms and ammunition which we have sold to the British in the last year. This would certainly be to us a great handicap.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of an embargo on the exportation of arms and ammunitions lest we might unwarily strengthen the arm of a future adversary.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a good deal of interest to the remarks of my friend from Missouri, and I would like to ask him one question in all good faith, and I hope he will consider it pertinent.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. If it is pertinent, I shall be glad to answer it.

Mr. McKENZIE. I understand the gentleman is strongly in favor of an embargo on munitions of war. The question I desire to ask the gentleman is whether or not he would favor including in that embargo horses and mules from the State of Missouri?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I will refer the gentleman to any standard dictionary to see whether horses, mules, wheat, corn, beef, and pork or any of those things fall under the definition of arms and ammunition. Remember I did not say "munitions." I said "ammunition." I meant precisely what I said, and I do not now include in that any other thing except arms and ammunition; that is, guns and things to shoot out of them.

Mr. McKENZIE. I beg the gentleman's pardon if I made a mistake in asking the question——

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Oh, no.

Mr. McKENZIE. But I have always understood that artillery is of but little use unless you have horses and mules with which to transport it over the country.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Oh, Mr. Speaker, that is begging the question. Arms and ammunition are valuable even where there are no mules and horses. Gasoline engines can be used to haul them, and they can be transported in other ways. But lest some tory makes capital out of what I have here said, and claims that we are trying to keep our farmers from selling their food supplies and our manufacturers from selling their articles, I want it to be clearly understood that the embargo I propose applies only to those things that are strictly contraband of war. I mean precisely what is contained in the words, as I have used them, an embargo on arms and ammunition, and I do not include horses, mules, and other things that may be used for war or in peace.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. For a question pertinent to what we are discussing.

Mr. KELLEY. I was interested in the statement of the gentleman that he thought acts of this sort would lessen the military establishment of our own country, and I was rather curious to know how it would.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I think I must depart from the discussion of my subject far enough to express my regret that I have devoted 15 minutes to stating a proposition that nobody understands. What I meant to be understood as saying was this, that if we sell a billion dollars' worth of arms and ammunition to a foreign country which may hereafter, unfortunately, become our adversary, we shall have to make just that much more arms and ammunition for ourselves before we are equal to the country we have thus supplied.

Mr. KELLEY. I may say to the gentleman that I was rather impressed with the argument of the President when he was here—his argument to the contrary.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I believe there is another reason why we should establish an embargo on arms and ammunition. As long as they are manufactured in this country the logical effect of it is that the United States is made the basis of operations from which belligerents assault one another. Go into the factories which are making these blood profits and you will find a British or a French officer looking over and inspecting these arms and ammunitions, taking careful note of the American methods, becoming more familiar with the American method of preparedness than are some gentlemen on this floor. The United States is to-day in these ammunition factories simply the basis of operation by which one belligerent is carrying on the war against another, and that in the face of a statute which says that our shores shall not become the base of operations for any belligerent in any war to which we are not a party.

Again, look at the people who are indulging in the manufacture of arms and ammunition. I was appalled the other day when I had called to my attention the rise of the stock in some of these concerns. An ex-Representative said to a present Representative: "If you had bought that stock a year ago every $100 you put in would now make $1,000." Take the Du Pont Powder Co. In 1914 their stock was selling for $122. In 1915 it was selling at $1,000.

Another feature of this thing is that these people who maintain these ammunition and gun factories are prominent people; they are powerful, they are influential, they are the men who furnish advertisements to large newspapers, they are men who can get entrée into newspaper offices. They are the men who can shut such speeches as I am delivering out of the public papers and carry columns of things such as were uttered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]. It raises in the country and influential class of people engaged not only in the manufacture of arms and ammunitions, but, I grieve to say, it also engages in the business of manufacturing markets for the unholy stuff they produce.

The gentleman from Massachusetts had much to say in disparagement of hyphenated German-Americans. Who is not proud of hyphenated Americans? There have been pure Americans who forged their names into the pages of American history. Among them Powhatan, Tecumseh, Osceola, Sitting Bull, and Geronimo. But the people who built our Commonwealth, molded our Government, fashioned our institutions, and developed our civilization were the hyphenated Americans. In the younger days of our Republic our guiding spirits were the Anglo-Americans. Then we have had the Irish-Americans. Who can conceive what the Irish-American has done for America? It would be an invidious discrimination to name any of them to the exclusion of the others, and yet the time is far in the past when the tories of Boston gave Irish-Americans cold comfort. We Missourians all feel proud of the Irish-American when we pass through Statuary Hall and see the statue of our one-time United States Senator, Gen. James Shields, at different times a Senator from three States and a general in the Union Army in the war between the States. That old Irish-American helped to make this country great. We have had Franco-Americans, Danish-Americans, Swedish-Americans. Even Afro-Americans have played their part. Who shall say that Fred Douglass and Booker Washington were not blessings to the generations in which they lived? We have had our Scotch-Americans, who have wrought well, and I am glad that the President has not hesitated to catalogue himself as a hyphenate. In his Columbus speech a few days ago he said with some pride that he was a Scotch-Irishman.

Why does the tory utter with hissing hatred the term German-American? Of all of the hyphenated Americans, who has been more industrious, honest, law abiding, or patriotic than the German-American? In what line of human endeavor has the German-American not played a leading part? When the Civil War broke upon us the German-American was in the forefront of the contest, battling for the Union. Had it not been for the Germans Missouri would have gone with the Confederacy. In that event the southern boundary of Iowa instead of the northern boundary of Arkansas would have been the battle line. More than 200,000 German-Americans enlisted under the Stars and Stripes in that war. Go into any State of the Union and in every vocation you will find the German-American playing a leading part.

Oh, these hyphenates. As time rolls on we will be prouder and prouder that we have the German-American in this country. [Applause.] Out in my State we give our daughters in marriage to German-American sons and take the daughters of German-Americans in marriage to our sons. We join our fortunes with theirs and with pride and affection we mingle our blood with theirs. Why should they be the victims of so much calumny here now? Will somebody point to any German-American in this country who has expressed a sympathy for Germany as against the United States? The most he has done is to express a sympathy about a matter in which the United States is not concerned, about a war to which the United States is not a party. What German could look back upon such a history as Germany's, and remember the glorious deeds of that glorious people and not feel a just pride and heartfelt sympathy for his fatherland in the hour of her sorrow? I am an Anglo-American. Every drop of blood that courses through my veins came from England. But, Mr. Speaker, I am constrained to say that no nobler civilization ever blessed the world than the German. God bless the German-American.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. For a pertinent question of what I am discussing.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman believes in a sufficient and ample preparedness, does he not?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I do.

Mr. FOCHT. Does the gentleman believe that any foreign foe that wants us should come and get us, and that our preparation should be for defense and not invasion?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I believe that if any foreign foe wishes to come here and get us, we should see that it does not take us.

Mr. FOCHT. In other words, that we should take them.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. No; I do not say that. I will state my own position.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman is opposed to any foreign invasion of this country, and that our defense should be amply prepared for it.

Now, I want to call attention and ask the gentleman to amplify some portion of his generally splendid address, and that is in regard to the finances of Europe. I think the gentleman recalls that Napoleon said, "Give me three things and I will have the universe at my feet," and those things were "money, money, money!" Now, I understand that Europe is bankrupt, that the rest of the allies are on the pay roll of Great Britain, and that Great Britain is coming here borrowing on her bonds and securities; and since money constitutes the sinews of war, how are they going to prosecute any war against us while they are financially broke? [Applause.] In other words, several years ago when Europe was at her maximum strength on land and sea we heard nothing about this most lavish proposed preparedness. Now, when Europe is on her back, broke and bankrupt, and at her minimum strength, it seems to me much of this fear at this particular time is groundless. [Applause.]

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. I thought the gentleman interrupted me for a question, but it turns out he has not; nevertheless I must express to him my gratitude for putting so much better than I could the very thing I was thinking. I agree with him, and if I had time I should like to discuss the impropriety of taking the people's credit of this country and loaning it out to the foreign countries who are engaged in war. [Applause.] We should, rather, lend it to our own people to support their own industries and carry along prosperity for ourselves.

BRIDGE ACROSS OHIO RIVER AT STEUBENVILLE, OHIO.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill H. R. 3593, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3593) to authorize the Ohio-West Virginia Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Ohio River at the city of Steubenville, Jefferson County, Ohio.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Ohio-West Virginia Bridge Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River to and into Cross Creek district, in the county of Brooke, in the State of West Virginia, from the southern end of the city of Steubenville, in the county of Jefferson, State of Ohio, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Also, the following committee amendments were read:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "Virginia," insert the words "its successors and assigns."

Page 1, lines 7 and 8, after the word "River" in line 7, insert the words "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation."

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is there a similar Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. The Senate bill is identical, with the exception of these amendments.

Mr. MANN. It is a similar bill?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It does not require unanimous consent if the Speaker will lay the Senate bill before the House.

The SPEAKER. The trouble about that is this, namely, that the conditions do not come within the rule. The House committee has reported a bill that is not on the calendar. At the same time the gentleman from West Virginia asks leave——

Mr. MANN. He asks leave to consider the Senate bill in the House——

The SPEAKER. Yes. The bill S. 2409 in lieu of this House bill, which has been reported. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. MANN. Let us hear the Senate bill read first.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2409) to authorize the Ohio-West Virginia Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Ohio River at the city of Steubenville, Jefferson County, Ohio.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Ohio-West Virginia Bridge Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of West Virginia, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River to and into Cross Creek district, in the county of Brooke, in the State of West Virginia, from the southern end of the city of Steubenville, in the county of Jefferson, State of Ohio, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman should offer the amendments, if he intends to do so.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not have to have unanimous consent. The Clerk will report the House amendments.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman offers amendments to this bill which were reported by the House committee to the House bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] offers them as his amendments, individually. The Clerk will report both of them.

The Clerk read the first amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "Virginia," insert the words "its successors and assigns."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the Senate bill by inserting, after the word "River," line 7, the words "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the House bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the House bill will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HENSLEY, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of W. J. Rosselot, no adverse report having been made thereon.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR WATERWAYS.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent at this time that I may be allowed to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. I desire to be notified, Mr. Speaker, when I shall have consumed 50 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Very well.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I desire, so far as possible, to answer any questions that may be asked. This has been my custom in the past. But I wish first to get my statement before the House as clearly as I can, and it will take all of the time at my disposal to do that. I shall be ready to answer questions at the conclusion of my remarks. At this time I trust I shall not have interruptions.

It is needless to say, Mr. Speaker, that on the subject of waterway waste I differ in judgment from Members who are alone interested in particular projects, and, of course, that is a matter of regret on my part, but it can not be helped. Everyone must consider the subject according to his own best judgment. That is what I have endeavored to do.

Before undertaking a discussion of different waterway projects and the allotment of $50,000,000 given by Army engineers in 1914 and 1915, I wish to call attention to some remarks made January 7 by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND]. Let me say that he and I are personally very good friends, and the House recognizes in him an honorable and a very able man. He made some statements in his speech that I desire to have thoroughly inquired into so the country may know all the facts.

His statement, which is before me, is not an unusual statement, because we hear it from waterway lobbies and we have had it from the gentleman's own State before. It comes to us from various sources, from waterway journals, and from some public men, that the railways are interested in the fight being waged against waterway waste. The gentleman from Missouri put the charge specifically the other day, for which I thank him. In order to determine whether or not the charge of railroad interference with legislation be true—because it can not be decided here—I have drawn a resolution to ascertain the facts, and I trust the House will investigate the truth or falsity of allegations now made upon the floor of the House.

PERSONAL AFFILIATIONS.

So far as I am individually concerned, my colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], will vouch for the fact that in past years we both were engaged in helping to draw the railroad-regulation laws that were passed by the State of Wisconsin. We were also among those who helped pass those laws through both houses of the Wisconsin Legislature after a long and bitter fight. I do not think the charge of railway partiality will lie personally against me. I never received a dollar from a railroad in my life, but, on the contrary, have been called upon in past years to prosecute suits against them. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] does not know the facts, nor does this House, but an official investigation will determine the truth. Possibly with equal propriety I might challenge the gentleman's position and assert that he appears here as a personal attorney for a steamboat company, or that he is a stockholder or owner of a transportation company, or interested in a great land reclamation project on the Missouri River. I do not say so. I do not believe it to be a fact; neither does the House believe it is so. It is in no way a personal matter between the gentleman from Missouri and myself, for I feel sure both desire to have an investigation held, to determine the truth of his serious charges. I have drawn this resolution, providing first, that the Judiciary Committee of the House shall conduct an investigation to ascertain if the railways have in any manner, by propaganda or otherwise, inspired the opposition that was offered to two waterway bills last session; further, to find if the railways have taken any position upon any legislation now or heretofore pending before the House or the Senate. Not only that, but in order that this may be a thoroughgoing investigation——

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman does not wish to be interrupted?

INVESTIGATE THE LOBBIES I SPECIALLY NAME.

Mr. FREAR. Not until the conclusion of my statement. I shall then be glad to be interrupted. In order to ascertain other important information, I ask that the resolution which I offer at this time shall include what is known as the Missouri River lobby—I do not know whether any Member present has any knowledge of it—a lobby which has an interest in 500,000 acres of land, that are worth from $100 to $125 an acre, reaching a total value approximately of $60,000,000, according to the official records.

Next I desire that the same resolution shall include activities of the Upper Mississippi Reclamation Association, which has 780,000 acres of land that it desires to reclaim at Government expense, or partially so, land valued at $80,000,000 according to the official records. I have here an invitation received this morning naming me as a delegate to some reclamation convention that is called to meet at Cairo on January 19. It comes from one of these numerous waterway "congresses" that I have failed to embody in my resolution.

I desire next to have the Federal Congress investigate activities of the Mississippi River levee lobby. I have shown to the House in the past that eight railroads paid $40,000 to that lobby for propagating its peculiar work, and I submitted in the RECORD last session a subscription list from what purported to be a photographic copy of the original.

I also ask that the resolution include the activities of the Alabama Water Power Co., which owns 96 per cent of all water powers in the State of Alabama—a company which now has its lobby here and had it here during all the last session, a lobby which seeks $18,700,000 of Government funds with which to build a 150-foot dam down at Muscle Shoals on the Tennessee River, and for other purposes. We drove that project out of the bill last year, but we are now notified from the RECORD, inserted in both the House and the Senate on the 7th instant, that the Georgia Legislature demands we pass an appropriation for the Muscle Shoals project. I am particularly desirous of ascertaining if the charge is true that the Alabama Water Power Co. has set apart a large fund for lobby expenses, according to common report.

I further desire, in addition, to have my resolution reach the Atlantic Dredgers' Association, which I have shown to the House in the past has secretly divided up among dredgers the Government contracts for dredging. I have disclosed that fact by their own communications, and also that its members are contributors to some of these waterway lobbies I have described.

I desire also to have this resolution include—and I have so drawn it—the activities of the Waterways "Congress," I believe it is called, which was in session in Washington a few weeks ago, and which conducted back fires against Senators and Members who opposed waterway projects here at the last session of Congress. I placed the facts in the RECORD at that time. I have drawn the resolution so that Congress can ascertain all the facts. Here is the statement of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] and the resolution:

[Statement of the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. BORLAND) Jan. 7, pp. 627 and 629 of the RECORD.]

* * * * * * *

Nobody knows better than the railroads that if they can get Congress to withhold appropriations for a single year every shipper who has patronized the boat lines will be driven back into their arms. Any ambitious statesman who wants to run for President of the United States on a railroad platform should begin by a submarine attack upon the waterways.

* * * * * * *

At this crisis, when water transportation is becoming a substantial factor, it is much easier for the railroads to cripple it and put it out of business by preventing appropriations in Congress for the continuation of the work. If they succeed even for a single year in causing an abandonment of the work, shippers whose whole commercial interests are at stake will be compelled to come back to the railroads and a confidence in water transportation as a permanent factor will be destroyed. This is the bug under the chip of the whole waterway fight. Doubtless the railroad policy is a short-sighted one, and doubtless it would be better for them as well as for the country at large to recognize the waterways as a permanent addition to the transportation facilities of the country; but just now every railroad politician and railroad paper is busily shouting "pork," to frighten the advocates of river improvement; or "preparedness," to charm them away from a continuance of the waterway policy.

Resolution.

Whereas on January 6, 1916, charges were made on the floor of the House that railway companies were instigating the fight waged during the Sixty-third Congress, and were interested in the opposition presented during this session against waterway waste, which charges, in justice to all parties concerned, ought to be fully investigated; and

Whereas House resolution 612, Sixty-third Congress, second session, specifically charged that the Atlantic and Gulf Coast Dredge Owners' Association has been actively and improperly engaged in securing the passage of river and harbor bills; and

Whereas House resolution 613, Sixty-third Congress, second session, specifically charged that a lobby organization known as the Rivers and Harbors Congress was actively and improperly engaged in promoting the passage of improper river and harbor appropriations; and

Whereas the same resolution specifically charged that the Mississippi River Levee Association is a lobby supported in part by railroad contributions, and is actively and improperly engaged in securing the insertion of improper items in river and harbor bills; and

Whereas numerous other lobbies have been specifically named in the public press as actively engaged in improperly securing the insertion of particular appropriations in annual river and harbor bills: Therefore

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee of the House be instructed to bring before it any and all witnesses having or assuming to have any information regarding the connection of any railway company, directly or indirectly, with the opposition to the passage of river and harbor bills during this or any other session, or any railway that has had connection, directly or indirectly, with any other bills;

That such committee shall further investigate the activities of a Missouri River lobby that is alleged to have an active interest in securing appropriations for the reclamation, at Government expense, of 500,000 acres of private land along the Missouri River, valued, according to official records, at $60,000,000;

That said committee shall further investigate the activities of the upper Mississippi Drainage Association, that is alleged to have an active interest in securing appropriations for the reclamation, at Government expense, of 780,000 acres of private lands along the upper Mississippi River, valued, approximately, at $78,000,000, according to testimony contained in official records;

That said committee shall further investigate the activities of the Mississippi River Levee lobby that is alleged to be supported in part by railway contributions and is further alleged to have an active interest in securing appropriations for the reclamation, at Government expense, of private lands along the lower Mississippi River, valued at hundreds of millions of dollars, according to testimony contained in official records;

That said committee shall further investigate the activities of the Alabama Power Co., which is alleged to have an active interest in securing, by installments, an appropriation of $18,701,000 from the Government, through the river and harbor bill, for the erection of 150-foot power dams, and including a Government loan to such company extending 100 years, with interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum;

That said committee shall further investigate the activities of the Atlantic and Gulf Coast Dredge Owners' Association, which is alleged to have improperly supported waterway lobbies, and to have undertaken secretly and improperly to distribute Government contracts among different dredging concerns doing business with the Government;

That said committee shall further investigate the activities of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress lobby that is alleged to improperly urge the passage of extravagant waterway bills by instituting back fires in the various States against Members of Congress who are opposed to such bills; and

That said committee be instructed to report at the earliest possible date any facts developed from such investigation which may have any relation to appropriations for projects now being urged upon the Sixty-fourth Congress.

WATERWAY WASTE.

Mr. Speaker, we have paid out of the Government Treasury over $850,000,000 for our waterways, and I make the assertion that any man who gives study to the subject will become convinced that over one-half of that amount has been wasted. I believe this to be a conservative statement.

I further state at this time that practically two-thirds of all the money appropriated for waterways every session goes into the rivers and creeks of this country, whereas the inconsiderable commerce of these rivers and creeks has decreased from 80 to 95 per cent on the different projects during the past 40 years.

On the closing day of the Sixty-third Congress it placed $30,000,000 in the hands of Army engineers, in addition to $20,000,000 given to them six months before for waterway distribution. I desire to discuss this $50,000,000 allotment by the Chief Engineer, and also to refer to our waterway legislative methods.

Speaking of a former bill passed by Congress, Chairman SPARKMAN, of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, said in a speech last January:

> It was characterized as an iniquitous measure, a "steal," and as having been framed, constructed, and completed upon the despicable principle of division and silence.

With this he disagreed, but to the same effect was the remark in debate of a distinguished Senator from South Carolina, now in Congress, who denounced a river and harbor bill as a "humbug and a steal."

With these reflected opinions of annual river and harbor bills the country seems to agree; but it may not know that, although wasteful bills aggregating $92,000,000 were defeated last session, the $50,000,000 substitute allotments of 1914 and 1915 by the Chief of Engineers deserves equal condemnation. Great waste characterized that allotment, and, although a saving of $42,000,000 in the total appropriations by a defeat of the two bills is a matter of public congratulation, those who contributed to the defeat will realize a sorry result if content to accept a temporary saving while the wasteful and scandalous legislative practice remains undisturbed. I fully appreciate the tremendous power behind the system. It includes many well-financed waterway lobbies, the self-interest of Members in caring for their own districts, in regular political perquisites, in jobs for thousands of men now employed by Army engineers, and in millions of dollars annually paid dredgers and other contractors. It vitally affects landowners along the lower Mississippi and Missouri, who expect to realize hundreds of millions of dollars, in the aggregate, through advanced values of lands reclaimed at Government expense. The annual river and harbor bill is also backed by real estate and water-power lobbies which demand Government aid.

It is, in fact, a great pork barrel, largely affected by political pressure that accommodates countless private interests which now profit at the expense of the Public Treasury.

ARMY ENGINEERS' APPROVAL.

When Congress began squandering public money on wasteful waterway schemes a few years ago the record shows that Senator Burton, the country's greatest waterway authority, sought to check waste by having Government engineers approve all projects. It was an experiment, and in order to erect some slight barrier against greed, subordinate officials were appointed to determine great commercial projects and enormous expenditures. Men who had no commercial or business training and no direct responsibility to the people were chosen to prevent Congress from yielding to local pull. From the record of wasteful projects now approved by Army engineers we realize the powerful pressure that has been brought to bear upon them and we discover that their approvals are now used to justify many scandalous projects which would not otherwise pass Congress.

It is a disappointing experiment because we find proposed waterway waste in 1915 was twice as large in volume, if not in character, as at any time before engineers' approvals were required by Congress. This does not reflect upon the personal honor of engineers individually or collectively, because the blame rests with political influences that have broken down the independence of subordinate officials. No thinking man can close his eyes to conscienceless jobs now masquerading under the guise of waterway improvements. Nor can we get rid of these jobs without the consent of engineers who are confronted with the same influences that put them over. If the present system is discreditable and notoriously wasteful, why not change it? It is with that purpose I desire to offer some observations in order to suggest lines of independent investigation for those who believe we ought to cut loose from a bad system.

INFLUENCE ON FREIGHT RATES—STONE AGE STATESMEN.

Any attempt to sift worthless projects from waterway bills is hooted down by a few stone age statesmen and lobby agents who affect to believe that millions of dollars in Government money now annually thrown away on private-land reclamation, private water powers, and deserted rivers, in some indefinite way will serve to reduce freight rates for the public at large; that those who oppose wasteful waterway bills are thereby preventing a reduction in railway tariffs. No well-informed man will so argue to an intelligent audience, and it is significant that railways now contribute liberally to waterway lobbies to secure Government-built railway, water terminals, and other private privileges. Under existing law any undue loss in income on one branch of the railroad must be made up on the rest of the system to secure reasonable rates guaranteed under the Constitution and yet the Government is asked to waste millions on favored communities to be paid out of taxes contributed by other communities.

Men who oppose waterway waste are among those who have demanded strict railway regulation.

Speaking personally, as before stated, with my colleague [Mr. LENROOT] and other State legislators I was identified with the passage of railway-regulation laws which were secured in Wisconsin after a lively fight lasting several years. Having the greatest waterway commerce of any State in the country, with one exception, and with the two greatest lakes and greatest river in the world washing its borders, Wisconsin is profoundly interested in genuine waterway development, but she will never come to the Government Treasury under the pretense that railway freight rates are to be lowered by such means.

Her railway commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission have abundant powers to control such rates and have exercised those powers effectually. The same situation is true in practically every State that cares to use the constitutional rights it possesses.

POWERFUL WATERWAY LOBBIES ON HAND.

On the third day that this Federal Congress was convened by law, a river and harbor lobby that styles itself a "congress" second only to the Federal Congress, held its annual meeting in this city, called together by a sensational lobby folder, entitled "If the war against waterways wins." Declared to be a "mutual bribery" association by the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, this lobby conducts a public and secret campaign that threatens every Member of Congress who opposes its notorious methods. It calls its meetings at the beginning of every session, demands of Congress $50,000,000 or more annually for a "policy, not a project," and its officers and members insist they take an active part in making up annual waterway bills and in determining the distribution of public funds. Orators with questionable projects to advance or axes to grind are heralded by its press bureau for weeks in advance. Few others appear before the lobby meetings.

In any other country or in any State of this country such a gathering would receive public condemnation and its methods would inevitably drive it out of existence. Not so at Washington, where the lobby makes its demands and throughout the year conducts a publicity bureau which furnishes "copy" to the press and inaugurates back fires against Members who revolt against its methods or the annual bill it assumes to help frame.

A LOBBY THAT SHOULD BE INVESTIGATED.

I introduced a resolution in Congress last session to investigate this "mutual bribery" lobby. Original evidence now in my possession was offered to show that, directly or through subsidiary lobbies, the dredgers, railways, and other interests that have a direct financial claim on Government grabs, contribute secretly toward the lobby's support. In some instances this lobby equally divided with its collectors the subscriptions paid by gullible supporters. Intrenched from the Capitol Building to the Southern Building it instigates back fires on Members of Congress to compel support for "pork barrel" bills. Officers enjoying many distinguishing titles from known lobby officials, to Ex-Chief Bixby, United States Army, a regular lobby attendant, all deserve credit for wasting a hundred million dollars and more of Uncle Sam's money on questionable projects during the last two or three sessions.

Providing a public investigation can be secured, as proposed by my resolution based on charges made by the gentleman from Missouri, my offer to furnish original evidence against this lobby is renewed, while in the meantime those interested in studying the lobby's real purposes and secret activities will find food for reflection in pages 15896 to 15911 in volume 51 of the RECORD. It is unnecessary to prove that the "river and harbor congress" has no proper place in legislative work, because from its own official admissions it is a "mutual bribery" organization, as stated by the greatest public transportation board in the country. No one desires to rob it of that distinction, and I will briefly refer to its notable achievements in distributing "pork" among the States.

Public and private citizens of undoubted probity have lent their names and presence to the lobby under misleading and persuasive arguments that by so doing they were performing a local duty and advancing legitimate waterway legislation. At this time I do not care to add anything to the previous exposure of disreputable lobby methods, secret sources of contributions, and back fires which it inaugurated last session, nor do I propose to waste time over fulminations from the lobby "congress," as it desires to be styled. Nor will I bandy words with those who advocate "mutual bribery" methods.

ONE HUNDRED MILLIONS OF ANNUAL WATERWAY "PORK" DEMANDED.

Expert testimony from its officers as to the lobby's power over Congress and its accomplishments were fully presented in the RECORD of October 8, 1914. I will only briefly refer to one or two significant utterances.

PORK DISTRIBUTED ACCORDING TO CONTRIBUTIONS.

One of the cardinal principles of the Rivers and Harbors "Congress" is that "nothing given, nothing got." By paying 0.001 per cent of Federal appropriations to the support of the Rivers and Harbors "Congress" every community has the supporting arm of Mr. Fox, Mr. Ellison, Mr. Thompson, Mr. Davenny, and other officials of this second "congress." On pages 60 and 62 of its 1911 report appears a list of appropriations given to the different States of the Union amounting, in all, to $178,616,897 from 1907 to 1911, inclusive.

In two columns the members of the "second congress" are impressed with the relation between that body and the amount of Government appropriations for each separate State. I quote literally from the listed method of comparison and cite a dozen States or more to show the proportionate grabs that are held out invitingly to gaze by the Rivers and Harbors "Congress" officials.

	Amounts subscribed to the support of National Rivers and Harbors Congress, by States, 1906–1911, inclusive.	Amount of appropriations received by States, in rivers and harbors bills, 1907–1911, inclusive.
Pennsylvania (east)	$4,295	$4,837,745
Connecticut	2,115	2,318,000
Massachusetts	2,850	1,451,733
Maryland	1,755	2,778,265
New Jersey	2,735	3,484,895
North Carolina	2,538	2,259,614
South Carolina	1,137	1,237,290
Virginia	4,306	4,082,454
Georgia	8,281	4,102,889
Florida	1,620	5,188,670
District of Columbia	1,530	1,243,000
Alabama	6,000	6,952,000
Louisiana	9,505	3,820,292
Texas	8,825	9,193,309
Mississippi River	.....	21,842,775

Mississippi River (1914), $10,500,000 or nearly one-half of the six years' total.

UNFAIRLY DISTRIBUTING THE PORK.

New York and Florida receive more than the average State, excepting that the Mississippi River lump sum would swell the adjacent States over $21,000,000, if counted. Florida has many small waterways, like the Kissimmee and the Oklawaha, and is the home of influential Members at both ends of the Capitol, who determine the fortunes of the annual river and harbor bill.

Doubtless it appeals to lay members to realize that by the investment of $1 in the "second congress" $1,000 will be forthcoming from the Federal Congress. It is in harmony with the views of Secretary Ellison and with the purposes set forth so eloquently by its constitution.

To become entitled to generous Federal appropriations as a harvest for a small per cent investment, the following annual dues are provided for membership in the "National Rivers and Harbors Congress of the United States," as it is styled by its officers:

	Annual dues.
Individuals	$5
Firms or corporations	10
Organizations of less than 400	25
Organizations over 400 and less than 600	50
Organizations of 600 to 1,000	75
Organizations of 1,000 or more	100
Waterway associations	100

A system of graduated contributions for which graduated appropriations are in effect assured.

SECRETARY REDFIED'S LITTLE JOKE.

According to a positive demonstration from its own official reports, the rivers lobby "congress" has relieved the Federal Congress from all responsibility for the distribution of "pork" among the various States.

This is the lobby addressed by Secretary Redfield, who declared that there is no such thing as "pork."

Yet "Capt." Ellison, official secretary of the "congress" lobby, is quoted by the official organ to have evoked applause with the sentiment—

We send Congressmen here to legislate for the Nation, theoretically, but actually to get all he can for us, and if he does not get our share, and then some, we do our best to replace him.

Ellison holds a pistol and says, "Hands up, or deliver the cash." He also holds an "honorary life" certificate in the lobby "congress."

SECRETARY ELLISON INITIATES SECRETARY REDFIELD.

On December 8, 1915, Secretary Redfield welcomed the "congress" lobby to Washington, as stated, and in performing that peculiar courtesy he said that a weakness in the lobby's usefulness lay in the habitual "though untruthful" use of the word "pork." This statement without comment is also respectfully referred to a great Democratic leader, still in public life, who has denounced the annual pork barrel as a "humbug and a steal"; also to the New York Board of Trade, that described the lobby addressed by Secretary Redfield as a "mutual bribery" organization; and last, but not least, to the lobby officials, whose pork-securing service is set forth in their 1911 report, pages 60 to 62.

It may be hard to fix responsibility for Treasury deficits, waterway bills, or Eastland disasters, but to deny a self-evident fact must be accepted by Ellison and his associates as a piece of Redfieldian humor. Let us hope that our joking Secretary, as chief executioner, will now proceed to hang the pork barrel as high as Haman.

WHAT SECRETARY THOMPSON WANTS.

Secretary Thompson, who runs things at the "congress" lobby headquarters in the Colorado Building the year round, goes other lobby officials one better in his speech before the annual meeting, in December, 1914. The press quotes him as saying, by way of public correction:

The fact is that our president is a Senator and took his seat in that body a year ago last March. We amended our constitution in 1912 so as to strike out the recommendation of $50,000,000 a year. We did not strike it out because we are the kind of chumps who believe that $50,000,000 a year is too much, but because we believe the safe, sane, and wise policy would be for the Government to spend $100,000,000 or more every year on this great work.

The permanent record might properly substitute "grab" for "great."

Thompson says "we," including President RANSDELL, Fox, et al., struck out $50,000,000 and now believe $100,000,000 annually is the proper amount.

Later in these remarks it will appear that $5,000,000,000 is not an excessive amount for waterways, according to the judgment of Secretary Thompson, who, however, may reserve the right to double his limit in order to make sure of the Mississippi land reclamation project, even as he has jumped his demands from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000 annually.

OPPOSITION IS AGAINST FRAUD AND WASTE, NOT WATERWAYS.

CONGRESS SHOULD INVESTIGATE ALL LOBBY INFLUENCES.

It is needless to repeat what was stated last session, that I have no conscious prejudice against any individual nor against any waterway project other than may be justified by the official engineers' reports. Those who question motives for opposing the wasteful river and harbor bills or criticizing the allotments made by the Chief of Engineers are invited to join with me in the demand for an investigation. I have asked an opportunity for placing all evidence squarely before the House and the country, confident in the belief that from facts and records in my possession it would bring about a better understanding of the secret influences and prodigious waste which accompany annual river and harbor bills. The public has a right to test the good faith of proponents and opponents of pork-barrel methods, and that result can not be reached by charges and recriminations, but by concrete facts, which I am prepared to submit against the river and harbor lobby and the present waterway legislative system whenever an investigation can be secured.

We are not concerned in ascertaining in whose district or State questionable waterway projects may be located. The question is one of fact whether or not criticisms are well grounded, and I yield to every Member who feels called upon to defend any project the same sincerity of purpose which I claim for my own action. Members may have fallen heir to hopeless waterway projects that, under existing methods, will remain to burden posterity long after all of us shall have passed away. It is unimportant to fix legislative responsibility for the existence of such projects, because the only question to determine is whether we shall continue expenditures for worthless ventures or extravagant payments for projects entirely disproportionate to commercial needs, according to official reports.

WHO PAYS THE BILLS?

Every project is maintained by the Federal Treasury. The people of Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Illinois, New York, Texas, or California have equal interest in the proper expenditure of public funds, because such funds are raised by war taxes, income taxes, and internal-revenue receipts contributed proportionately by every State. It can be no more just for the Government to build 150-foot dams to create water power for an Alabama concern on the Tennessee or for a Georgia water-power company on the Etowah than to build other dams the height of Niagara Falls in New York, Montana, or Idaho, for the benefit of the General Electric Trust in those States. Neither is it just for the Government to reclaim private lands for the use and private benefit of Mississippi or Louisiana or Missouri landowners unless we generously furnish free fertilizer for worn-out farms in New England States and elsewhere. In fact, what is the distinction between buying up bankrupt canals apparently to render first aid to Pennsylvania's financially injured and extracting pine stumps free of expense for the farmers in Minnesota, Wisconsin, or Michigan?

With striking inconsistency the Government has thus far refused aid to State highways; it has refused to loan money to farmers or needy citizens at low rates, notwithstanding scores of rural-credit bills have been considered, but Army engineers have approved a $10,325,000 gift and a $8,575,000 100-year 3 per cent loan to a $50,000,000 private water-power trust at Muscle Shoals, which now owns 96 per cent of all the water-power rights of Alabama. Stranger than the Army engineers' action, a preliminary appropriation was inserted into the last river and harbor bill for this project after its defeat in the House and before its defeat in the Senate.

A BILL TO PREVENT WATERWAY WASTE.

These matters I desire to discuss in an impersonal way in order to present the existing wild and scandalous scope of waterway expenditures. If we are to continue the rapidly growing waste, extravagance, and misapplication of public funds, then there must come a day of reckoning when those who defend such expenditures will be held responsible.

Whatever criticism may be fairly lodged against any project or the system fastened upon us through our own apathy, every intelligent observer believes that patriotism and honesty of purpose prevail in these Halls to-day as firmly and generally as ever before. If victims of pernicious legislative practices whenever local interests are involved, we know individual action is often inspired by local demands for a fair share of public pelf. Can we seriously question the empty value of a doubtful political asset that has actually become a liability, or the duty of every Member to unload unjust individual burdens onto a high-class board created to act impartially for the general good?

With this purpose in view, I have presented House bill 6821 for your consideration in an effort to secure systematic and scientific overhauling of our waterways by impartial and competent men. It proposes a capable board commissioned to develop waterway traffic wherever practicable and to prevent extravagant Government expenditures for useless projects. I do not claim for the bill all that may be offered to make it most effective, but I do say it is a definite proposition which seeks to give relief, and it invites thoughtful attention from every friend of legitimate waterways and of economical administration. I will attach it as an exhibit to my remarks because of its value as a public economy measure when once passed.

INDISPUTABLE EVIDENCES OF ENORMOUS WASTE.

We are advised strong influences are to be put forth by powerful lobbies to rush through another $50,000,000 wasteful appropriation. Every dollar so wasted reduces the amount available for genuine waterways and legitimate purposes of government.

When reported, the bills are rolled through the House with expedition, and five minutes' time for debate is often the limit afforded in exposing waste disclosed by single projects that may reach many millions of dollars, and it should be remembered that many continuing projects are utterly worthless.

For this reason I desire at this time and prior to the presentation of the regular bill to show by indisputable proof that the $50,000,000 given by Congress last session to Army engineers for allotment, in lieu of the $92,000,000 bills defeated, was in fact largely wasted on useless continuing waterway projects that have been repeatedly exposed and are condemned by the official reports which apologize for their continuance. Further, that an engineer's recommendation may be, and frequently is, as bad and weak in character as anything ever set aside by presidential vetoes or denounced in Congress as "humbugs and steals."

"WATERWAY" APPROPRIATIONS A LOCALITY ISSUE.

I have been advised that the fight against vicious waterway bills should be made a political issue, but that is impossible. The pork barrel is a locality issue, pure and simple, and it is high time those who pay the rapidly growing bills, that already aggregate $850,000,000, should demand an accounting of stock.

Expert statisticians advise us that Northern States, because of their greater population and wealth, pay or contribute approximately 95 per cent of all taxes and Government revenues compared with Southern States. Army engineers' reports show that probably 95 per cent of all actual commerce carried over our waterways is to or from Northern States, yet I believe it can be demonstrated that a dozen Southern States which furnish about 5 per cent of the Government's revenues and only about 5 per cent of the country's commerce, in effect receive over half of every river and harbor bill, which with sundry civil bill waterway items now averages over $50,000,000 annually.

Herewith is an interesting statement, which I have not personally verified, but I believe is correct:

States.	Total corporation income tax collected.	Total individual income tax collected.
Alabama	$177,127.39	$84,633.40
Mississippi	73,516.09	34,664.59

These receipts are for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

In other words, the above list shows 13 Southern States that are liberally cared for in every river and harbor bill and 5 Northern States that paid into the Public Treasury about $10 for every dollar contributed by sister States from the South. The statement has no relation to legitimate waterway improvements, but in "pork-barrel" appropriations it indicates where the "pork" comes from.

In a bill devoted to sectional interests no other result can be reasonably expected. Twenty-seven of the leading committees of the House have chairmen from Southern States, and they, together with a majority of the regular Democratic majority coming from that section, control committee recommendations and appropriations by the River and Harbor Committee.

Promises of sectional influence to be openly exerted on the next $46,000,000 bill have also been frankly admitted, as will appear later on, and the only question seems to be what are we going to do about it? What will the people say, who pay 95 per cent of the revenues, maintain 95 per cent of the commerce, and then give over half of $50,000,000 annually to southern projects, many of which are unrelated to genuine navigation. If we must have pork, is there no polite rule of honor in legislative kleptomania as to its distribution? Even the celebrated jury once mentioned by Mr. CALLAWAY refused to convict a culprit for stealing a hog because every member of the jury had received a slice, but that judicial precedent would not be urged here, because authoritative history records that the jury equally divided the corpus delicti. In the case of waterway bills, constituents of three-fourths of the jury furnish 90 per cent of the pork—all excepting the snout and tail—while the remaining three jurymen demand more than the other nine contributing jurymen combined. This is not measuring equities, but appetites.

A HELPING HAND FROM THE "LEVEE" AND "CONGRESS" LOBBY.

Sectional influence is also far-reaching when the river lobby that claims to have an Italian hand in drafting the bill finds its brains and energy in members of the lower Mississippi levee land-reclamation organization. Strangely enough, the levee lobby officials also happen to be officials and manipulators of that other lobby organization styling itself a "river and harbor congress." "Levee" officials and "congress" officials, practically the same men, tried to get from the last Federal Congress, and nearly secured, for their Mississippi River land-reclamation project, through two bills reported to the Senate, the tidy sum of $16,450,000 for the lower Mississippi, south of the Missouri, while hundreds of misguided, famishing birdlings, who chirp before the annual lobby congress for waterway worms, are only helping to enlarge the fat Mississippi mother birds. Pulling chestnuts out of the fire becomes a fine art when all lobbies and lobbyist contribute to the landowners' reclamation grab along the Mississippi.

WHERE THE PUBLIC MONEY GOES.

Judging from the past, I desire to indicate where the next wasteful "waterway" appropriation will probably be distributed and further to furnish conclusive evidence on which subscribers to the lobby fund previously mentioned have a right of action against the lobby "congress" for fulfillment of its 1915 subscription contract. Bear in mind, during this discussion that the present Chief Engineer, who determines all waterway questions and who allotted $50,000,000 last session, was a struggling lieutenant colonel in the Army a half dozen years before he was elected to the office of Santa Claus. He shares honors and responsibilities with the lobby for all distributions.

Of the 240 projects to which Chief Kingman in 1915 allotted $26,258,472, the Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, Tennessee, Cumberland, and Beaufort Canal were given $11,813,000, or 45 per cent of the total, according to his statement given out April 1, 1915.

Out of 300 projects contained in the defeated 1915 bill (H. R. 13811) reported by the Senate committee aggregating $38,000,000, the same six river projects above mentioned were awarded $17,795,000, or approximately 47 per cent of the total.

Including items for the Ohio contained in the sundry civil bill, these 6 projects out of 300 in the bill and 240 in the allotment were awarded over one-half of all waterway appropriations for 1915.

In other words, Chief Kingman considered these projects of overwhelming importance, and distributed the remaining 55 per cent among 234 projects, one-half of which were other rivers with insignificant commerce.

WHERE THE COMMERCE IS FOUND.

According to an analysis that will be hereafter offered, several times the aggregate actual waterway commerce carried by the above six streams is handled by either Buffalo, or Boston, or Cleveland, or Philadelphia Harbors. Over ten times the total actual commerce carried on those six rivers is handled at the Superior-Duluth Harbor, while New York's inner harbor, that received $300,000 from the allotment, annually handles twenty times the total commerce of the six rivers that received $11,813,000 from Chief Kingman in 1915.

Waterway improvements in the South, whether located in Virginia, Louisiana, or Texas, should properly be matters of national, not State or local concern. Hampton Roads, New Orleans, or Galveston Harbors are as important to preserve as the harbors of Boston, Philadelphia, or those of the Great Lakes. If any river or canal enjoys State or interstate traffic sufficient to make it a real artery of commerce instead of a shriveled useless vein, it surely is equally entitled to Government aid, whether situated among Southern or Northern States, because a broad policy of internal improvements is of national benefit—when of national importance.

But reckless, wasteful giving of Government funds to favored localities for private ends or local use is scandalous and demoralizing, and no argument is needed to show we have no right, legislatively or morally, to divert public funds to such uses. Some harbor improvements and a large majority of our so-called canal, river, and rivulet improvements are shown to be of insignificant value or no actual value either to the Nation or the State. They are conspicuously matters of local and private interest, urged by local constituencies and made possible only through the present system of political influence which is notoriously exercised in this and similarly framed bills. While improvements for legitimate waterways and open river channel work should find favor, they are necessarily delayed or prevented by raids upon the Federal Treasury for political projects.

At this point I append a table taken from allotments to 240 projects and to which I may later refer.

Engineers' allotment 1914 and 1915 of $47,586,000.

[Twelve projects that received 50 per cent of the total.]

Rivers.	Twenty million fund.	Thirty million fund.	Total.
Mississippi	$5,250,000	$5,815,000	$11,065,000
Missouri	950,000	1,100,000	2,050,000
Ohio [1]	1,769,000	3,915,000	5,684,000
Tennessee	223,000	501,000	724,000
Cumberland	210,000	378,000	588,000
Ouichita	300,000	136,000	436,000
Aransas Pass	470,000	180,000	650,000
Sabine Pass	240,000	100,000	340,000
Brazos	230,000	240,000	470,000
Black Warrior	768,000	48,000	816,000
Cape Fear	185,000	323,000	508,000
Beaufort Canal		400,000	400,000
Total	10,595,000	13,136,000	23,731,000

[1] The Ohio River was also given $3,200,000 in the 1915 sundry civil bill.

Of two hundred and twenty-odd projects given the remaining 50 per cent from both allotments, about one-half were trafficless rivers and a large number were southern projects, which, together with the above 12 projects, have a combined actual commerce of less than one-half the waterway tonnage of Buffalo, or Boston, or Cleveland, or Philadelphia, or several other lake and ocean harbors that could be named.

"WE MIGHT BETTER BUY THE FREIGHT AND BURN IT."

Due apologies are tendered a great waterway expert for using his striking statement for the above caption. Permit me to further offer at this time an estimate of the cost to the Government for furnishing waterways to float actual commerce on a few of our large projects:

	Per ton.
Ohio River (excluding soft coal, $50 to $70 per ton)	$5.00
Ouachita	8.00
Upper Mississippi	12.00
Lower Mississippi	35.00
Arkansas	20.00
Hennepin	36.75
Missouri	40.00
Muscle Shoals	41.00
Aransas Pass Canal	80.00
Brazos	80.00
Red	100.00
Muscle Shoals (proposed)	150.00
Big Sandy, Ky	350.00

Other rivers, some of which have an average haul of from 30 to 50 miles, are equally expensive luxuries to a war-tax burdened people. An analysis of "commerce" statistics will be offered in the course of these remarks to show the inducement presented by Army engineers for recommending present wasteful expenditures.

IS WASTE AND FRAUD GENERAL?

Following a four-day fight last session under the five-minute rule against the last river and harbor bill, I met the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. Murdock, then one of the leaders of the House, and he said to me, "Many of us have voted for such measures for 10 years and more, kicking them around, without realizing before what big frauds they have grown to be."

A day or so later one of the ablest men in the country, who also voted in the House with Murdock against the last river and harbor bill, called attention to the naval appropriation bill of over a hundred million dollars, then before the House, remarking, "There is as much waste and graft in this bill as there is in the river 'pork barrel.'" Substantially the same remark was made by a rear admiral of the Navy, who approved the fight against the last two waterway bills, condemning waste and fraud in the river and harbor bill and in the naval bill in equally strong terms. High officials have pointed to the same proportionate waste in public-buildings bills.

In view of such statements, among many others, from highly reputable Members of the House and country, I believe it is my duty, so far as I can, to present facts that should cause the most confirmed pork grabber to stop, look, and listen in these days of righteous indignation against fraud and waste, and to demand a thorough investigation.

When the 1914 river and harbor bill was before the House it carried over $43,000,000 in a few good but many extravagant or worthless projects. No roll call could be secured, and the bill went through with a whoop and a laugh. It was and is an annual joke bill and is now double in amount and just as bad as when TILLMAN called it a "humbug and steal" over a dozen years ago.

When the Senate committee reported the same House bill, some of the worst new projects exposed in the House were stricken out, including Mattawan Creek, Kissimee Creek, and Oklawaha Creek, carrying present and future appropriations of about $1,000,000. But the Senate committee added many other projects, so that when reported out to the Senate it carried over $53,000,000 in addition to $6,990,000 appropriated by the sundry civil bill. New projects that would eventually add $33,000,000 more, or about $93,000,000, were included for waterways in the 1914 bills.

It is recent history that the scandalous 1914 bill was defeated in the Senate and a $20,000,000 substitute passed, which sum was placed in the hands of Army engineers for allotment. It is also familiar history that most of that amount, according to statements on the floor by members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, was given to southern States that boast little actual waterway commerce.

ANNUAL PORK BARRELS THE FASHION.

Four months later, at the regular session, the House passed another river and harbor bill of $34,000,000, in round numbers, greatly reduced in amount, but twice the size of our old-fashioned genuine improvement bills. This time we secured a record vote in the House against the bill, after killing the initial appropriation for a scandalous $18,700,000 Alabama water-power project and exposing many other wasteful and worthless items. The Senate committee added $4,000,000, in round numbers, to the $34,000,000 House bill, in addition to $4,000,000 given by the sundry civil bill. For a second time, a bill then reaching $38,000,000 was killed and a $30,000,000 substitute was passed by Congress, again to be allotted by Army engineers. The aggregate of the two defeated bills and the sundry civil bill reached over $102,000,000. The two substitute bills as passed carried just $50,000,000 apart from sundry civil items of about $10,000,000, or a saving of about $42,000,000 from the two Sixty-third Congress waterway bills, and the Chief Engineer was authorized to apportion the $50,000,000 substitute among the most needy projects. The last allotment of $30,000,000 was placed in his hands on the closing day of the Sixty-third Congress, and attention is called in passing to this last allotment.

SENATOR BURTON'S SERVICE.

I would be remiss in a public duty if I failed at this time to give credit to those who bore the brunt of the recent waterway fights and won two unprecedented victories in the Sixty-third Congress. It requires moral courage of a high order to confront colleagues with whom one has worked for many years and to point out legislative wrongs committed in the name of public service.

That courage was evidenced in the last Congress by the distinguished Senator from Ohio, who fearlessly faced unjust gibes and criticisms with unaffected forbearance and by superior knowledge, marvelous endurance, exceptional powers of debate, and masterful presentation of existing wrongs proved to the present generation that high ideals in statesmanship still exist. Senator Burton's fight against two vicious river and harbor bills, aggregating over $92,000,000, will live in congressional history long after merchant-marine and other struggles have been forgotten. Faithfully supported by Senator KENYON and a small group of fearless associates, he led the opposition during days and nights of continuous session, resisting assaults upon the Federal Treasury waged by selfish interests.

History records that their memorable fight has saved to the country over $42,000,000; but far surpassing in importance any mere question of dollars and cents was the notable defeat of vicious legislation. Whatever may be the fate of wasteful waterway bills which are to follow in this and future sessions, the exposure of waterway sophistry and defeat of its accompanying chicanery brought about by Senator Burton's great effort will live as the crowning achievement of his congressional career.

The Senate and the country has lost the ablest waterway expert of the country through Senator Burton's voluntary retirement. Now that the opposition to waste has suffered a severe loss through his departure, the bars are again to be let down. One hundred new Members of the House are expected to be anxious to show results by securing to each constituency a piece of pork, and we are to be confronted with an old-time bill, larger than ever before. So says the lobby, which speaks authoritatively in its hour of triumph.

HOW LARGE WILL THIS YEAR'S BILL BE?

The vicious bill of 1914, which was killed in the Senate, carried $43,289,004. Over $10,000,000 more was added to it before it was reported out to the Senate for discussion and defeat.

In view of this fact, it is interesting to note that after visiting President Wilson in reference to the coming waterway bill the Washington Times of December 1, 1915, only a few days ago, says:

> Chairman SPARKMAN called to explain what was desired by his committee. He said $46,000,000 was needed to complete work already begun. Last year the appropriation was cut to $30,000,000 by Congress, and it is understood this year the administration forces will urge still further reduction. SPARKMAN said after the conference that his committee would not delay in its efforts to get these appropriations in spite of the administration's desire to have its national-defense program taken up in Congress first.

No one familiar with the genial chairman of the committee will believe he was correctly quoted, because it will take approximately $46,000,000 to complete the fanciful Ohio canalization project alone, and there are over a hundred other pending hungry projects, including the $20,000,000 Missouri River reclamation scheme and the limitless private land reclamation lower Mississippi project, that may take several hundred millions in addition to about $100,000,000 already spent on the lower river; but more of that later on.

WHAT THE NEXT BILL WILL CONTAIN.

In order that we may also appreciate the prospective character of the new river and harbor bill, I quote briefly from an interview with Chairman SPARKMAN, of the committee, published in the Washington Star on March 12, 1915, shortly after the close of the last session, wherein he is quoted as saying:

> If revenues improve, the next river and harbor bill will cover a number of important new projects. The committee may visit the Muscle Shoals water-power project in Tennessee and other places on that river May 10 and the Sacramento and Feather Rivers in California in July or August.
> The Muscle Shoals project, already recommended by Army engineers and urged by Senator elect UNDERWOOD, the retiring Democratic leader of the House, and other Members of the southern delegations, contemplates a Federal appropriation of $18,000,000, reimbursable to the Government, with a view to comprehensive development of the water power. The Government's proposed share of expense in the Sacramento and Feather Rivers project is $5,800,000, although the whole project involves $30,000,000 expenditure. Other projects pending, which will be considered when the bill is taken up, include the purchase of the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal for $8,000,000 and the $5,000,000 canalization development of the upper Cumberland River above Nashville.

ACTIVE AID FOR THE COMMITTEE.

Pursuant to the foregoing prediction, Washington now swarms with "waterway" lobbyists hailing from all points of the compass, including not only the $50,000,000 "mutual bribery" lobby but also the Ohio River lobby, the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal lobby, supported by the Atlantic inland waterway lobby, the upper Mississippi drainage lobby, the Alabama Water Power Co.—$18,700,000 for Muscle Shoals—lobby, the Texas inland waterways lobby, the Missouri River lobby, and many other insistent lobbies, while enthroned over all is the powerful Mississippi River reclamation lobby that annually gets the largest slice out of every waterways "barrel." All are here or have served notice they will be here to help Congress frame the bill.

Just what will be presented by the committee only time will disclose; just what will be its battered but swelled shape when it passes both Houses no man can tell; but the engineers' allotment of the last $30,000,000 bill is worth considering at this time for the reason that all projects are attempted to be justified by their supporters because first given the Chief Engineer's approval.

Before presenting what I believe to be conclusive evidence of incompetence and repeated violation of the spirit of the law on the part of the Board of Army Engineers, I desire to refer to the last river and harbor bill substitute, passed March 3, 1915, which reads:

NOTORIOUS PROJECTS CONDEMNED.

SEC. 15. That the following projects now under improvement shall be reexamined in accordance with the law for the original examination of rivers and harbors, with a view to obtaining reports whether the adopted projects shall be modified or the improvement abandoned.

Then follow 10 projects, beginning with the inland waterway from Norfolk to Beaufort and ending with the Missouri River. Incidentally I hope to address myself to the Missouri River project in a few moments; also, incidentally, the Missouri River was thereafter rejected upon reexamination by the engineer called upon to examine it.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman does not want to be inaccurate. The Missouri River was reported against by the district officer, but his report was reversed, and I suppose the gentleman knows that the report reversing it is in the hands of Congress.

Mr. FREAR. I prefer that the gentleman would not interrupt me. I accept his statement, however, without question. Neither report has been received by Congress from the engineers.

Mr. BORLAND. I interrupt only because I know the gentleman wants to be accurate.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY].

Mr. FREAR. This one time.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I wonder if it would be possible for us to have the report of that engineer that they dismissed out there and reversed?

Mr. FREAR. I thank my friend from Texas for the suggestion. That was the question I was about to present to the House. Strange as it may appear, on the 22d day of April, 1915, the gentleman who rejected the Missouri River project—Col. Deakyne—made his report, which has been in the hands of gentlemen who support the Missouri River project, but Congress has not had it up to this time. I have tried unsuccessfully to secure it from the River and Harbor Committee, of which I am a member. I have assumed that there is such a report, because newspaper notices are to that effect. The gentleman states that that report was overruled by the Board of Army Engineers. I understand so by newspaper reports. I have no information other than that.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FREAR. I desire not to be interrupted, because I have a great deal of ground to try to cover.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I should like to ask about that report. The gentleman has made a rather interesting statement. Did he inquire at the Engineers' Office?

Mr. FREAR. Oh, no; I inquired where it ought to be—in the hands of the Rivers and Harbors Committee.

Mr. BORLAND. The report is in the hands of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, of which the gentleman is a member, and they have sent it to the Public Printer and it is now in the hands of the Public Printer.

Mr. FREAR. I desire that this shall not be taken out of my time, Mr. Speaker. I do not wish to be interrupted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. FREAR. I have been to the clerk of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and he said he had no report, although it was made many months ago. He said it had not been presented yet. I so understood him, although this report was made by Col. Deakyne April 22, or over eight months ago.

TEN QUESTIONABLE PROJECTS.

I quote from the same $30,000,000 allotment a provision demanding resurveys of the 10 projects named, as follows:

Inland waterway from Norfolk to Beaufort Inlet, N. C.
Coosa River, Ga. and Ala.
St. Lucia Inlet, Fla.
Brazos River, Tex., from Old Washington to Waco.
Red River, La., Ark., Tex., and Okla.
Ouachita River, Ark. and Okla.
Arkansas River, Ark.
Tennessee River, Tenn., Ala., and Ky.
Fox River, Wis.
Missouri River, Mo.

And the Chief of Engineers is directed to make a report upon any other projects, river or harbor, the further improvement of which under present conditions is undesirable or in which modifications of the plans or projects should be made.

The foregoing provisions were inserted in the Senate substitute of $30,000,000 for 1915 and were agreed to by the House in lieu of the $38,000,000 bill reported by the Senate committee.

The best waterway expert in the country, Senator Burton, framed both substitute bills, aggregating $50,000,000, adopted by Congress in 1914 and 1915, respectively, and framed section 15, just read. His high standing, judgment, and long public experience entitled his opinion to great weight at the time the 1915 substitute was presented to the Senate, at which time the following significant statement was made by him:

AN INDICTMENT AGAINST ARMY ENGINEERS BY THE COUNTRY'S BEST WATERWAY EXPERT.

Certain steps have been taken by the insertion in this substitute of section 15, in which it is directed that the following projects now under improvement should be examined in accordance with the law for the original examination of rivers and harbors, with a view to obtaining reports whether the adopted projects should be modified or the improvement abandoned. Then follow an enumeration of 10 projects, which are probably the worst in the list now under improvement, and a general provision that the Chief of Engineers is directed to make a report upon any other projects, either river or harbor, a further improvement of which under present conditions is undesirable or in which a modification of the plans or projects should be made.

We have confidence that the section will be carefully complied with by the Corps of Engineers; that they will examine de novo each one of these 10 projects, and if further improvement is undesirable, they will say so; and that if there are other improvements of minor nature, not mentioned in this list which require reexamination, that reexamination is to be made. I am frank to say that I do not altogether feel satisfied with the apportionments which were made by the engineers under the act of October 24, 1914, the first $20,000,000 substitute bill. The following are some illustrations of what was done:

Contentnia and Smith Creeks and Neuse and Trent Rivers in North Carolina, for which appropriations were opposed, carried in the original bill a combined appropriation of $41,000, of which amount $27,000 was allotted. The Cape Fear River, above Wilmington, carried in the original bill $91,000 and was allotted $70,000. (In 1915, $173,000 was allotted for this same project.)

The Flint River received $18,000 for the proposed $25,000.

The Chattahoochee carried $120,000, and received $65,000.

The Coosa received in the allotment $40,000.

The item for the St. Johns River, $300,000; in the allotment it got $220,000.

St. Andrews Bay was provided with $65,000 in the bill, and got the full amount in the allotment.

The bill gave the Choctawhatchee $25,000; the allotment, $20,000.

The Black Warrior was down for $750,000, and got the full amount.

The item carried for the Yazoo River was $10,000, while the allotment gave it $30,000.

The Big Sunflower was originally provided with $90,000, and in the allotment received the full amount. The item for the upper Brazos, one of the most strenuously opposed items, was $275,000, yet in the allotment it received $200,000.

In the case of the Trinity, one of the worst items in the bill, but slight deference was paid to public opinion. Out of an original item of $255,000 the allotment was $203,000.

The Missouri River, Kansas City to the mouth, an absolutely indefensible project, got an allotment of $850,000.

TEN COUNTS IN THE INDICTMENT AGAINST ARMY ENGINEERS.

After this pronounced protest by our greatest waterway expert against the $20,000,000 apportionment made by Army engineers in 1914, and an explicit demand for a reexamination of worthless projects, the Chief Engineer, through the publicity bureau of the river and harbor lobby, furnished to the press on April 1, 1915, just 30 days after the passage of the $30,000,000 1915 substitute bill, a full statement of his apportionment of the new fund, from which I quote allotments for several projects that were explicitly condemned in the Senate as among the "worst on the list."

Chief Kingman's allotment to 10 questionable projects.

	1915	1914
Waterway, Norfolk to Beaufort	$400,000	None.
Coosa River	106,000	$40,000
St. Lucia Inlet	None.	None.
Brazos River	200,000	200,000
Red River (above Fulton)	40,000	40,000
Ouachita River	136,000	320,000
Arkansas River	193,350	46,000
Tennessee River	501,000	233,000
Fox River	20,000	10,000
Missouri River	1,000,000	850,000
Total	2,596,350	1,739,000

OVER $5,000,000 FOR 10 QUESTIONABLE PROJECTS.

To further show the disregard of our Chief of Engineers for the wishes of Congress or of a law solemnly passed it is proper to state that on January 1, 1915, balances on hand unexpended for these 10 questionable projects reached $2,655,000, which with the 1915 allotment aggregated $5,251,350 to be expended on projects approved by Army engineers but condemned in no uncertain way by Congress. Let us examine further into this remarkable allotment.

The list of 10 projects for which resurveys were ordered by law and protests recorded were given by engineers nearly one-tenth of the 1915 allotment of $26,258,000 reported April 1, 1915. Peculiarly enough, $2,576,350 or over 99 per cent of the allotment on these 10 projects was for southern streams that had been denounced in Congress in unmeasured terms less than 30 days before. Notwithstanding that caustic arraignment and legislative demand for resurveys of these projects, the Chief Engineer's allotment for such projects was approximately 50 per cent greater in 1915 than in his condemned allotment made in 1914.

Before discussing the attitude of Army engineers I desire to add a few other questionable allotments from the April 1, 1915, gifts made by our Treasury guardians:

Five more questionable projects in Kingman's (1915) $30,000,000 fund.
Mississippi River (a promoting land reclamation project)	$5,815,000
Ohio River (a $64,000,000 canalization project)	3,640,000
Missouri River (a 500,000-acre land reclamation project)	1,100,000
Beaufort Canal (among the most worthless of all)	405,000
Cumberland River (so bad it was three times reported against)	378,000
Total	11,338,000
Another picture from Kingman's (1915) allotment.
New York inner harbor (the greatest in the world)	$300,000
Boston Harbor	135,769
Buffalo Harbor	187,375
Cleveland Harbor	92,000
Total	715,144

New York inner harbor received 1 per cent and the Mississippi 22 per cent of the last allotment.

These four harbors handle fifty times as much actual commerce as the five rivers and canals first named. They handle presumably twenty times as much actual commerce as any 10 Southern States with the "five questionable projects" included, and yet the free silver ratio of 16 to 1 is substantially the proportionate allotment given by Chief Kingman to questionable or worthless projects over four genuine waterways.

When New York, Ohio, and Massachusetts find out where Congress and Kingman place pork which these three States largely supply, it will be interesting to note their respective emotions.

OTHER QUESTIONABLE ALLOTMENTS BY GEN. KINGMAN—A DOZEN MORE COUNTS IN THE INDICTMENT AGAINST ENGINEERS.

Pamlico and Tar Rivers, N. C., allotted $35,800, the full amount requested. Commerce has diminished 70 per cent in the past 12 years. Five hundred and ten stumps, 16 saw logs, 1 scow, and 1 old house were recovered from the river by the Government in 1913. That was its largest traffic, according to the Army engineers' report, page 1965. Imposing commercial statistics, on analysis, are found to comprise over 88 per cent floatable timber.

Cape Fear River, N. C. Upper river $173,000, the full amount requested. Cape Fear River, N. C., below, $150,000, or 70 per cent of the full amount requested. Unexpended balance on hand January 1, 1915, for the river was $176,506. Expenditures to June 30, 1914, reached $5,805,790. Practically a half million dollars was used in 1915 to stimulate the dredging fleet to activity on Cape Fear River. Needy projects are subject to North Carolina's first call at the hands of Army engineers. Why?

Winyah Bay, S. C., $70,000, or more than called for by the 1915 bill. Balance on hand January 1, 1915, $33,802. This 13 miles of waterway has cost $2,980,664 and yet lost 30 per cent of its commerce last year. Army engineers have given it a good hypodermic to keep it going through 1915.

St. Johns River, Fla., $370,000, the full amount requested. Balance on hand January 1, 1915, $111,381. Amount already expended, over $6,500,000. Commerce is 40 per cent floatable lumber and ties. Florida projects are first in number and amount in all waterway bills. Florida also has first call at the hands of Army engineers. Why?

Tombigbee River, Ala., $48,800. Total requested, $64,500. On hand January, 1915, including Black Warrior, $417,544. Amount already expended, $9,901,295. Commerce on Tombigbee, 1913, excluding timber and stone, was 16,031 tons (p. 2199). This project has great water powers and political powers within reach and received three-quarters of a million out of the preceding $20,000,000 allotment.

Pearl River, $11,000. Amount requested, $24,000. On hand, $12,985. Loss in commerce last year, 42 per cent. All commerce is timber, sand, and gravel. Twelve thousand six hundred and fifty-one snags and obstructions were removed by the Government in 1913, or over 400 daily (p. 2219). The "snag" commerce is bravely maintained by the Chief of Engineers' allotment.

Big Sunflower, $104,000. Received $98,000 in Engineers' October allotment. Balance on hand January 1, 1915, was $99,500, or $200,000 made available for a commerce 70 per cent of which is floatable timber and gravel. Thus far appropriated and allotted, $644,983. "The existing project has no effect on freight rates" (p. 889).

Galveston to Port Bolivar, $40,000, full amount requested; $27,237 amount on hand. Loss in commerce last year, 40 per cent. How much would it take to wipe out the balance?

Galveston to Texas City, $50,000; full amount requested. This is a $7,000,000 project, which shows Texas is not entirely forgotten.

Three Texas canals: (1) Galveston-Brazos River section, $15,000; full amount. Commerce in 1912 was 614 tons. (2) Brazos-Matagorda section, $30,000; full amount. Commerce in 1912 was 600 tons. (3) Arkansas Pass-Cavallo section, $30,000. Commerce in 1912 was 380 tons. (These are the official engineer's figures.) What is $80 per ton to an Army engineer who has $50,000,000 to spend?

Tennessee River, $501,000 out of $672,000 requested. This project was denounced in the Senate on March 2, 1915, as one of the worst of the list. It was rejected twice by Army engineers. It has absorbed many millions and gets another half million to help keep the dredging fleet in motion.

Some of these projects named are worthless and all have received extravagant allotments from a precious war-tax fund. Other projects, some of which are probably worse than any of those enumerated, will be discussed before I conclude in order that we may know where more of the $50,000,000 allotment was placed by the Chief Engineer.

WHO IS TO BLAME FOR WASTE?

Fifty million dollars allotted last session by this official was largely wasted. Not even the President of the United States has such power or discretion in times of peace, and yet the Chief of Engineers is only following political partition methods inaugurated by Congress. Old Dobbin with his blinders never excited more pity or ridicule than is attracted to political naval stations, political Army stations, political Federal buildings, and political waterways. Private water powers, private land reclamationists, private real estate schemers unite with dredgers, contractors, and other notorious waterway lobbyists in demanding money at the expense of the public purse.

Outside of Dobbin's blinders the public scoffs at the exhibition, and inside the blinders we wink at it. With coast defenses pitifully weak, we divide naval funds to cover several Atlantic coast political yards, inaccessible to battleships and where experts declare two or three would answer. Forty-nine political military posts are maintained to protect our people from wild Indian uprisings within 49 different constituencies. How can we pretend to regulate private business by law when we conduct public business in an unbusinesslike way and how can we hope for honest administration of public affairs in subordinate places when confronted with our own acts of omission and commission.

After repeated exposures of back-scratching methods, of appeals to patriotism in order to put forth wasteful projects, of corrupt, secret lobby methods, we should accept our share of responsibility for wasted funds, for it is unjust to make goats of subordinate officials. But as Army engineers have been quoted in defense of every questionable, vicious, and wasteful project demanded in Congress, it becomes necessary to acertain just what value is to be placed upon engineers' approvals.

THE RECIPE FOR SECURING A WATERWAY PROJECT.

Let us concede at the outset that Army engineers are experts in military training. They are the pick of West Point, prepared for military responsibilities, yet instead of being employed on works of national defense, for which the Government educated them, their days and countless millions are spent on muddy creeks and worthless waterway schemes. Is it not time to pause and inquire into the reason for this absurdity? What functions of government or what public service is involved in surveys of crooked creeks and dry runs? Will the champions of "preparedness" demand that 60 engineers be relegated back to the Army and to their proper duties?

Dredgers, contractors, and other beneficiaries want work for private profit. They start things and urge local communities to get something from the Government for nothing. The local commercial or boosters' club, aroused to action, says to Representative Gettum from Grabville, "Bring home the money or don't come back." Every Representative is confronted with the utterance of Ellison, secretary of the $50,000,000 waterway lobby, "Get what is asked or get out." So Representative Gettum begs the committee for a local survey. The committee shifts responsibility by putting the project up to Army engineers for approval. The engineers survey and reject. Mr. Gettum shouts for help and reelection while engineers reexamine Mud Creek and again repudiate the job. Under pressure he then corrals his State delegation, reaching to nine Congressmen and two Senators in the Cumberland River case. Statesmen show Army engineers where to jump off. The board reflects; the board sees new light and somersaults and approves. Then Mr. Gettum presents his approved contract to the River and Harbor Committee. Our committee finally agrees with Gettum—who has nine votes in his pistol pocket with two more in the upper watch pocket—and so we eat persimmons, declaring them good though puckery. Solemnly we are now pointed to the engineer's approval, and all doors to legislative criticism thereafter are forever closed. We pretend to expect that our subordinates, the engineers, will withstand pull, pressure, and power. Constituencies, animated by secret agencies, seek questionable aid from their Representatives, and we pass it on to the engineer. How does he acquit himself?

INSINCERITY AND INCONSISTENCY—HOW ENGINEERS PILE UP ENORMOUS DEBT BURDENS.

For years Congress has been lectured continually and justly in engineers' reports for wasteful methods in making insufficient piecemeal appropriations for specific projects. How often is Congress criticized for spreading appropriations over rapidly increasing number of wasteful projects recommended by our critics, the engineers.

Instead of making contracts for the completion of important and necessary projects, reports show Congress has been deservedly reprimanded by Army engineers for piecemeal, unbusinesslike practices. Heretofore we have dodged the issue because we knew the engineers were right and the practice indefensible.

In other words, before meeting the necessities of New York Harbor or other actual waterways we must continue small slices of public plunder for Jamaica Bay's real estate project on Long Island or for some New Jersey fertilizing factory lustily howling for money for a privately used harbor. Scuppernong Creek and Cape Fear River's annual grab of a few hundred measly thousands or Richmond's inner harbor real estate scheme are used as a foil for San Francisco Harbor's actual needs, while aid for Chicago's water front may be made contingent upon adoption of a Muscle Shoals $18,700,000 water-power holdup or a notorious $8,000,000 annual grab by the Mississippi land-reclamation lobby. All requests are taken into the fold by the legislative factotum that hands out soothing sirup, a little here, a little there, to stop distress. Hundreds of interests are cared for annually, but no project is completed. Engineers have repeatedly called attention in their reports to this unbusinesslike spectacle offered by statesmen chosen to represent a Government's best interests.

Yet I desire at this juncture to discuss an unprecedented Treasury raid, eventually reaching possibly to one hundred millions or more, for which Army engineers are directly responsible.

CONSOLATION PRIZES FROM THE CHIEF ENGINEER—STARTING EVERYTHING, FINISHING NOTHING.

By the last two substitute bills we gave our engineering critics unrestricted power to distribute $50,000,000 for waterways. We did this in order to defeat two objectionable bills aggregating $92,000,000. Although Army engineers had recommended double the amount we placed in their hands, Congress tightened the strings before turning over its purse to about one-half of the amount recommended. We were therefore assured by engineers that many worthy projects would necessarily suffer from lack of funds to cover needed work. In other words, every dollar of the last $30,000,000 allotment placed in their hands had many legitimate pockets gaping before it from New York to San Francisco, yet after wasting millions on scores of notoriously worthless waterway projects we find the Board of Engineers plunged in to the limit by giving to itself $500,000 of this precious allotment fund for new surveys.

Ignoring a hundred waiting projects, aggregating $100,000,000 already adopted but not yet begun, the chief first divided approximately $26,258,472 among good, bad, and indifferent projects, as shown by the apportionment. After retaining over $3,000,000 for contingencies, our office boys, improvident and irresponsible constructors of a new pork barrel, went Congress one better by grabbing over an unparalleled grist of over 200 new surveys, which may eventually reach anywhere from a hundred to a hundred and fifty million dollars more in obligations for new projects. Think of the program, when in addition to nearly $400,000,000 in present waterway obligations, $500,000 is to be spent in these war-tax times by engineers in order to discover a hundred or more new mud ponds and crooked creeks. Have I made the situation plain? If not, study engineers' reports to learn what wasteful methods of piecemeal appropriations Congress has pursued for years, and now find our wildest dreams of waterway madness surpassed by these same engineer critics.

Chasing over the country from Podunk Inlet, in Jersey, to Cowpasture Creek, in Virginia, or Texas, surveying proposed real estate and land-reclamation ventures and private water-power schemes, giving extravagantly to wasteful projects they have been directed to reexamine and report on, ignoring legitimate military duties, the Chief of Engineers has provided a 1916 campaign of canal entanglements and crooked-creek invasions that challenges the attention of European strategists. Every new survey under present conditions becomes an indictment against wasteful methods embraced by engineers who have taken from the precious $30,000,000 allotment fund a half-million dollars for consolation prizes.

TREMENDOUS WATERWAY OBLIGATIONS.

To understand the full effect of withdrawing $500,000 for new surveys, it must be understood that about half of a total expenditure of $850,000,000 has been spent by the Government on our "waterways" within the last dozen years. In addition to this extravagant sum, future obligations have been incurred, as follows:

Projects now under way, which require a further sum of	$250,000,000
New projects adopted will require	101,000,000
Over 200 surveys in 1915 bill, possibly	150,000,000
Total	501,000,000

It was stated last session that 40 to 70 per cent of all surveys have been sometimes approved by Army engineers, and, judging from new projects awaiting appropriations, projects will average about a million dollars each. Some are small and others reach many millions. With new projects and new surveys the Government now is invited to embark on expenditures for new projects of $250,000,000, out of a total obligation of a half billion dollars, or an increase of 50 per cent in the number of projects adopted. In a riotous waste of public money through the convenient agency of Army engineers is it not worth while to pause until the American people catch their breath after paying their last war taxes?

BRIDGE BUILDERS ON THE THRONE.

Does it not appear that we have made a hopeless muddle of their duties and of ours by placing military bridge builders and pontoon constructors in absolute control of hundreds of millions of public funds, including $50,000,000 during the Sixty-third session of Congress?

When did engineers gain knowledge or experience to fit them for determining commercial needs or waterway possibilities of a community or hundreds of communites? Read their reports and learn the miserable showing that has been made by a great army of clerks, dredgers, contractors, and other beneficiaries, reputed to number 25,000 or more, wasting millions of public money annually as it slides through the fingers of the Chief of Engineers and his associates.

We may well believe younger Army engineeers are high-class men, who object to responsibility for this record of ingratiating humbuggery charged up against Gens. Bixby, Kingman, and the Board of Engineers. I do not question the honesty or capability of younger officers, but their superiors have had their heads turned by an astounding shift of public authority from Congress to their shoulders.

What a humiliating spectacle is presented to Congress when we see the Chief of Engineers distributing spoils through a complete control of projects, surveys, and public funds. What a pitiful picture of legislative weakness when Congress surrenders its constitutional prerogatives and eagerly divides the allotments given by engineers and river lobbies that claim to hold the spigot which distributed a $62,000,000 flood of war-tax currency for waterways during the Sixty-third session of Congress. No wonder the country figuratively holds its nose annually until the barrel is rolled out of sight.

GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION OF PRIZES—COUNTS IN THE INDICTMENT FOR MISREPRESENTATION.

When the last $30,000,000 allotment was made by the Chief of Engineers a placating statement accompanied it in the press, wherein the public was informed that of $26,258,472 distributed, New York received most of the allotment and Michigan had the second largest helping. By geographical sections we were told the North and Middle Western States were allotted $12,967,000 and Southern States $10,483,000, and so everybody ought to be happy.

These figures are deceptive, but accepting them at their face, we are reminded that six months before, in October, 1914, the same engineers allotted over one-half of the $20,000,000 (1914 appropriation) to southern projects, and quickly followed it up with $10,483,000 more on April 1, 1915, which indicates where a balance of political influence is to be found. A more miserable apology was never offered for a geographical distribution of political pork. New York Harbor handles probably two dozen times as much commerce as all the actual waterway commerce of the South put together. New York's great inner harbor gets about $300,000 from the allotment, or less than St. Johns River, Fla., which carries comparatively an insignificant actual commerce. Buffalo's actual commerce is about 20,000,000 tons, or probably several times the total actual commerce of all southern waterways combined. Buffalo gets $187,375, after having been rejected from the preceding October allotment. This is less than one-half of $400,000 given to the Brazos River, Tex., in the two engineer allotments, although the Brazos reports only 1,080 tons of actual commerce, or 1 ton to 20,000 tons when compared with Buffalo. Texas has several important chairmanships, Buffalo none, so 20,000 to 1 may be a new Democratic allotment ratio.

SPECIOUS EXPLANATIONS.

Michigan was declared to hold second place by the Chief of Engineers in his allotments, but such result is reached by crediting St. Marys River to Michigan. This river is a short waterway connecting the Lakes, and carries over 75,000,000 tons of annual commerce between States, or ten times the combined actual southern waterway traffic, and yet this link between lakes is strangely accredited to Michigan. Senate Document No. 492, Sixty-third Congress, charges over $32,000,000 spent between lakes to the State of Michigan. Why? As well credit the Panama Canal traffic and $400,000,000 expense to the Panama 10-mile zone. Why did not the engineers so report the Mississippi or properly charge to Louisiana $20,000,000 spent at the river's mouth? Who revises the engineers' reports? Who juggles the Louisiana figures, and why?

After giving over one-half of the $20,000,000 1914 appropriations to southern projects, our Chief of Engineers seeks to explain a $30,000,000 1915 geographical distribution, and in so doing apparently omits to include in the apportionment as southern projects any part of the $1,300,000 given to the lower Missouri and Mississippi below the mouth of the Missouri or any part of the $3,610,000 given to the Ohio River through lower Mississippi River traffic. Nor do these amounts cover some $5,000,000 more for the same projects included in the sundry civil bills that were passed. Eighteen North Carolina projects with an unimportant combined actual tonnage received about $900,000 out of the allotment in 1915. Twenty-four familiar Florida items received $840,000 for a commerce that rivals North Carolina's in insignificance, while Texas, with its 18 projects, gets over a million dollars; and, counting the preceding allotment of October, 1914, Texas is the proud possessor of $2,500,000 from the Sixty-third Congress due to the liberality of Army engineers. Aside from Galveston Harbor, its actual waterway commerce, as shown by the reports of Army engineers, compared with expenditures invites scrutiny.

Glancing over the list of influential Members of the last Congress in both Houses, it is not difficult to understand how these three States scraped about $5,000,000 out of the two barrels, although their combined actual commerce is probably less than one-quarter that of either Buffalo, Boston, Philadelphia, or other ports than can be named.

WHO BOOSTS THE BARREL?

Possibly some disinterested defender—some man who has never been or never expects to be a beneficiary of the present system of "division and silence"—will rise to justify; but before he undertakes to do so I desire to submit some more specific facts of public concern found in the Chief Engineer's report for 1914, of the keg the chief built.

THIS IS THE MALT THAT LAY IN THE KEG THE CHIEF BUILT—MAKING SCIENTIFIC CHANNELS FOR TRAFFICLESS STREAMS.

Of $850,000,000 thus far poured into our rivers and harbors, so far as it affects public interests or legitimate navigation, possibly two-thirds has been wasted. Not one dollar in ten would have been expended if local communities especially concerned had been compelled to contribute a reasonable part of the expense shouldered onto the Government. That is a test for other local improvements, including highways, one frequently required in European countries when government aid is given, and one we may profitably adopt in our waterway expenditures. If placed in an independent bill, with the pork-trading features eliminated, not one dollar in ten would have been appropriated by Congress.

Nearly 20 per cent of the entire $850,000,000 expended by Uncle Sam for rivers and harbors, or about $150,000,000, has been thrown into the Mississippi River alone, while actual commerce on the river has dropped to 5 per cent of the traffic recorded 50 years ago, when Government expenditures on the river were unknown. After spending a king's ransom and enough to pay the President's salary for 2,000 years to come, we awake to find that the Mississippi River navigation and Mississippi River commerce is a joke. We also learn that the Mississippi River lobby now back of the $50,000,000 annual pork barrel is cloaking its efforts to get extravagant appropriations for the Mississippi lower river land reclamation project by demanding wasteful appropriations and votes for every inconsequential creek and waterway in the country—clamoring for "a policy not a project"—but regularly demanding $10,000,000 to $12,000,000 for the Mississippi River, of which 80 per cent goes to the lower river. Condemned by the Mississippi Valley press and experienced engineers, this land-reclamation scheme is a big Ethiopian in the waterway woodpile worthy of investigation.

How are such wasteful and extravagant appropriations excused by the chief who makes annual reports to Congress?

BETWEEN ST. PAUL AND MINNEAPOLIS.

Take the great river appropriation referred to, that of the Mississippi. From the "head of navigation," Minneapolis, the river has a tortuous, unnavigable stretch to St. Paul, 10 miles below. Based on the Chief of Engineer's recommendations, $2,589,000 has already been appropriated for this 10 miles of river, or at the rate of a quarter of a million dollars per mile. Of this stretch the Chief of Engineers says, page 935, in his 1914 report:

> The construction of the lock and dam may develop a passenger traffic between St. Paul and Minneapolis and is expected to reduce the freight rate on flour and grain.

He further says:

> The only traffic on the river in 1913 consisted of excursion steamers to Minnehaha Creek, below Lock 1 (p. 2483).

With $149,567 on hand in January, 1915, the Chief of Engineers recommended a $235,000 appropriation for this project in the 1915 bill. When that bill was defeated he allotted $65,000 on April 1.

The fact is notorious that after 20 years' improvement and an expenditure of over two and one-half million dollars on this 10-mile stretch of river not one ton of commercial freight has ever been hauled from St. Paul to Minneapolis or from Minneapolis to St. Paul by river, nor has a solitary lonesome passenger ever taken the trip on an excursion boat or otherwise in the recollection of the oldest inhabitant.

On the other hand, presumably 75,000 passengers travel daily between those two cities on eight railways and two interurban lines connecting the cities, paying a dime to be carried from the farthest extremity of one city to the remotest corner of the other, 20 miles distant. Probably 175,000 tons of freight on the average are daily carried by transcontinental trains between the two cities, and yet, after spending over two and one-half million dollars on a 10-mile stretch of river, without securing a single passenger or one ton of freight, in 1904 Army engineers have promised a passenger and 250,000 tons of annual freight traffic, and so gave $65,000 more to this patent commercial farce.

A WATER POWER FOR NAVIGATION.

During the past half century the Twin Cities have grown from straggling villages to a half million people and more, and during about all that period the only regular upper-river excursion craft reported has been a diminutive ark called Hiawatha, which accommodates a handful of excursionists during the short river season, but it never goes farther than Minnehaha Creek, 4 miles below Minneapolis. Hiawatha's smokestack resembles a rusty stovepipe stuck through the roof of a settler's cabin, while the original Hiawatha never had it on his venerable namesake for suffering during "cold and cruel winters" when tied up, forlorn and useless, at the St. Paul wharf.

On this "passenger" business the Government has spent $2,589,000, exploiting the venerable Hiawatha and a water-power project near Minneapolis. Who is to be benefited by the subterfuge? Think of the stupendous farce set forth on page 2442, which records no terminal facilities at Minneapolis and no commerce, but prospective increase in waterway commerce of 250,000 tons—and not a ton in sight for a half century.

How did the Chief of Engineers put such statistics over Congress, and why did Congress wink at the humbug, and what was the real purpose of spending $2,589,000 of the taxpayers' money for a lock and dam below Minneapolis? Was it to get plenty of money lower down on the Mississippi and on a hundred other southern streams and creeks that $2,589,000 was given to this St. Anthony water power? How are the people of Minneapolis, of Minnesota, or of the country to be served by this Treasury haul, for which the Chief of Engineers is primarily responsible, with his passenger and freight buncombe estimates? It is nine-tenths completed. Shall it be abandoned? Who shall say? If not, what steps have been taken by Congress to utilize this water power? In other words, who gets it, and why did the Government build it?

ST. PAUL TO ST. LOUIS—ANOTHER COUNT IN THE INDICTMENT.

The next stretch on the Mississippi River is from St. Paul to St. Louis, and the Chief Engineer, on April 1, 1915, apparently in order to hand over nearly $5,000,000 to the lower river in 1915, threw a round million into this part of the upper river. In January, 1915, $444,274 remained on hand for this section, according to Senate Document No. 953, Sixty-third Congress. What justification was offered for spending nearly $2,000 per mile in one year on this stretch of the river? What commerce is served?

Keeping in mind that actual commerce on the river has probably decreased 95 per cent during the past few years, during which time $20,000,000 of Government funds has been dumped into this 600-mile stretch during that period, let us see how the Chief of Engineers excuses an allotment in 1915 of an even million in addition to the balance on hand and in addition to approximately $30,000 per mile already spent on this project. Examine his statement of commerce, taken from page 2437 of the Chief Engineer's report for 1914. It will not be found easily in the index.

The report says the quantity of freight carried by all boats, including the rock and brush used in Government work and also including logs and lumber floated down the stream, is as follows, and then follows a table, of which 772,392 tons hauled 9,445,576 ton-miles, valued at $781,897, is for material used by the Government in improving the river.

A comparative statement of upper river commerce is also offered by years, during which period between $20,000,000 and $25,000,000 have been expended by the Government on the advice of Army engineers. While the 1913 commerce was only about 35 per cent of that floated in 1885, it will be ascertained upon analysis that over nine-tenths of the 35 per cent floated in 1913 is bogus commerce, or, assuming the 1885 commerce reported to have been legitimate, in 28 years river freight fell approximately 96 per cent.

Referring to the 1913 statement, let us briefly examine the items, which show some remarkable facts.

ENGINEER'S STATISTICS OF COMMERCE (?).

"Commerce" reached 2,145,315 tons in 1913, so the Chief of Engineers reports. Tons of what? Let us see:

	Tons.
Brush for river construction work	82,450
Gravel dredged from river	398,178
Rock for river work	708,000
Sand dredged from river	562,000
Logs that have floated for 50 years	98,268
Lumber and wood barged	64,408
Animals ferried across river	55,322
Automobiles ferried across river	6,034
	1,974,980

All could be floated in 2 or 3 feet of water, leaving 170,335 tons of questionable commerce remaining, which was hauled on an average of 26 miles or thereabouts.

What a legislative travesty when eleven-twelfths of the commerce for which $1,000,000 was allotted by the Chief of Engineers is of that character. Who weighed the brush? Who weighed the logs? Who weighed the rocks, gravel, sand, and so forth, used in the river work? Where was it carried and for what purpose? Was it floated 1 mile or 10 miles? Who knows? Why measure Government material for river work, anyway?

A WONDERFUL SYSTEM IN VALUING "COMMERCE."

The Chief of Engineers says that 26,609 tons of horses were carried a mile and a half across the river and their value was $6,540,900, or one-fifth of the total. Other live stock carried across the river, he says, was valued at $5,218,730; and then, to cap the climax, this report adds that 6,034 tons of automobiles ferried across the river were valued at $9,545,950.

Nearly two-thirds of all the glowing commerce valuations on the upper Mississippi, including Government sand, rock, and gravel, turns out to be animals and automobiles ferried across the river.

Again, how much of the remaining 170,000 tons was repair material or Government supplies out of a total 772,000 tons reported? How much was duplicated before it could boost a million-dollar allotment for the upper river?

QUADRUPLICATIONS OF SAME FREIGHT STATISTICS.

Last session Chairman SPARKMAN was asked by Mr. CALLAWAY in debate if river tonnage passing different places was not often included in the Chief of Engineers' reports, and if it was not duplicated, to which the chairman frankly responded: "Oh, yes; it is duplicated, triplicated, and quadruplicated in some cases." With that indefinite rule of estimate, if 170,000 tons, not of Government materials but of actual commerce, still remained, but was quadruplicated in computation, it would actually amount to less than 45,000 tons, for which $1,000,000 was given April 1 by the generous Chief of Engineers, with an additional $1,000,000 annual interest charge for past expenditures. Yet the little harbor of Ashland, in my own State, handled 5,623,000 tons during the same year, excluding 35,000 tons of logs, while the Superior-Duluth Harbor handled 46,875,416 tons, or about 1,000 tons to 1, if river estimates were quadrupled by our guardian of the Treasury, the Chief of Engineers.

What shall be said of an official who demands $1,000,000 annually for traffic that has decreased to an insignificant fraction of what it was 30 or 40 years ago? Comparatively no expenditures were then made on the upper river; $1,000,000 annually now. What value can be attached to such flimsy statistics which serve as a basis for an expenditure of a million dollars annually?

From $6 to $16, depending on the basis of estimate, is the annual cost to the Government for every ton of actual commerce on the upper river, including river ferriage, and of that remaining "commerce" 22 per cent was shells and soft coal floated a few miles in barges. We could have built a permanent bridge in 1915 across the river with that million dollars or bought a hundred ferries, if need be, or could have built and stocked 50 miles of Government-owned railway, with something to show for the investment. Again, at $2,000 per mile we could have built a fine highway from Minneapolis to St. Louis. Better still, and up to date, we could annually buy a half dozen Ford trucks to carry all the actual commerce on the river and turn a good part of the remaining nine hundred and ninety-odd thousand dollars back into the Treasury to help lighten war-tax burdens and save a depleted Treasury from bankruptcy. But scores of dredgers and contractors would have been without occupation. Reasonable channel work on the river is needed, but who can excuse this great waste?

In a public speech at St. Paul August 3 last, Senator Burton declared the present St. Paul to St. Louis stage of water of 4½ feet is greater than the Elbe's, and yet our river is without commerce. What has become of the $20,000,000 spent on the upper Mississippi River? Who divided the money and who is behind the lobby that is now wildly shouting for more? Where is the commerce? Twenty million in 40 years for dredgers while we were losing our commerce.

NO COMMERCE PRESENT OR PROSPECTIVE.

Last session the bogus river commerce on the upper Mississippi was exposed. On that occasion I was here criticized by Representatives from St. Paul and Minneapolis because of assumed disloyalty to my own section of the country. In other words, it was proper to denounce worthless southern expenditures, providing we overlooked northern waste. When it was demonstrated that Mississippi River commerce is a myth, the House was gravely assured that an experimental trip was to be made in 1915, and commerce would be rejuvenated by Mr. Bernhard, a New Orleans barge owner, who, figuratively, could make water run up hill. Two barge lines had proved disastrous failures in recent years, but another commercial Ajax had been discovered, and he proposed to revolutionize economic laws.

Picture the situation. The Twin Cities receive or ship, possibly, several hundred million tons of commerce annually. The Government contributes nothing toward the expense, but, on the contrary, the Interstate Commerce Commission and State railway commissions are authorized to prevent freight extortion by controlling railway charges. On the other hand, before one dollar was ever expended on the river, over 40 years ago, several hundred boat arrivals occurred annually at St. Paul, but after an expenditure by the Government of some $20,000,000 on the upper Mississippi River, commerce is comparatively non est, while nothing larger than a logger's batteau or an Indian canoe ever tried to get up to or go down river from Minneapolis.

The Chief of Engineers gives bogus commerce reports and rainbow promises to justify continuing extravagant expenditures; but this year St. Paul tried to enlist business men in furnishing freight for the Bernhard barge proposition, and I quote from a report to show how the mountain labored in order to bring forth a diminutive mouse. Ponder over this tremendous folly and ask yourselves what lunacy commission would report as of sound mind any business man guilty of the feeble judgment Congress has displayed with an annual investment of $1,000,000 in this upper Mississippi River project. Every year it nestles in the barrel recommended by Chief Kingman and his army of dredgers and contractors. Why? Is it to offset the $7,000,000 annual lower river grab? Remember the following report is of possible, not actual, guaranteed river commerce, in anticipation of which Representatives waxed eloquent on this floor when the bill was before the House last session. I quote from the St. Paul Dispatch of August 12, 1915, but have a fuller statement of the report, which only emphasizes the folly attending an expenditure of twenty millions on the upper Mississippi River:

[From the St. Paul Dispatch, Aug. 12, 1915.]

DEMAND IS SLIGHT FOR RIVER SHIPPING—ASSOCIATION OF COMMERCE COMMITTEE FINDS 20 FIRMS USING WATER FREIGHT.

A report made to-day by a special committee of the Association of Commerce shows little demand at this time for river transportation. An estimated tonnage of 10,464 inbound and 2,472 outbound for one year was made to the committee by 20 out of 64 business firms.

36 DO NO RIVER BUSINESS.

Thirty-six of the 64 firms said they could do no business by river transportation.

Eight shippers said they may be able to use the river, but were unable to make any definite statement. Several of the largest firms did not reply to the communication sent to them by the committee.

REPORT FOR A YEAR.

The tabulated report for a year showed from foreign ports by way of New Orleans 1,124 tons of freight would come in and only 7 tons go out. From Pacific and Atlantic ports, by way of New Orleans, 4,200 tons will come in and 1,715 go out.

Along the Mississippi River 2,704 tons could be picked up and 165 tons sent to the way points. From St. Louis to St. Paul the inbound is estimated at 606 tons and the outbound at 360. Pittsburgh and other points on the Ohio would send 1,830 and take 225 tons from St. Paul.

TOTAL TONNAGE 12,936.

The total tonnage is estimated by the 20 concerns at 12,936. This is the estimated amount of the business and not an estimate of all St. Paul firms.

For October 160 tons can be brought in by river and only 3 tons sent out.

The committee which made the investigation is composed of H. T. Quinlan, J. W. Cooper, C. E. Tuttle, C. H. Bigelow, C. J. McConville, Charles Patterson, H. S. Sommers, J. A. Seeger, J. A. Gregg, and J. Clair Stone.

Can anything be added to this tragic statement of a $20,000,000 expenditure for a waterway that will float about 12,000 tons of commerce for St. Paul annually out of a hundred million tons and over handled by the Twin Cities? Some open-river expenditures ought to be made to provide for the small existing local freight, but $2,000 per mile annually is a notorious waste of money directly chargeable to the Chief of Engineers.

Yet from his reports we are told, according to a contributed manuscript which will later be considered—

Some gas cars were ferried across the river
To swell freight statistics, more coin to deliver,
And a three-million water power "to aid navigation"
Is the outside limit of imagination.
Who charges that Congress divides up the malt,
While blaming the board for all of the fault
That's laid to the keg the chief built?

ANOTHER SPECIFIC INDICTMENT—SILVER STIMULANTS FOR THE MISSISSIPPI NEAR ST. LOUIS.

About $17,223,000 of Government funds have been dumped into the 200-mile stretch of the Mississippi reaching from the mouth of the Missouri to the mouth of the Ohio. After spending over $86,000 per mile on this part of the river, Senator Burton, the greatest waterway authority in the country, says we had spent more money on this 200 miles of river than the Prussian Government had spent on the entire length of the River Rhine during all the centuries that have passed. Traffic on the Rhine ordinarily reaches 45,000,000 tons annually, or many hundred times the traffic reported on this 200 miles of the Mississippi. Yet the Chief of Engineers gave $300,000 on April 1, 1915, in addition to $297,260 balance on hand, or about $3,000 per mile in 1915 to keep dredgers busy on this notoriously wasteful project.

It has been a popular amusement with disgruntled pork advocates to try and discredit the distinguished Senator who night and day held his feet, aided by Senator KENYON and other courageous men, until the Sixty-third session waterway humbugs were defeated; but from an unexpected source Senator BURTON is corroborated in his statement of monumental waste along this part of the river. All the faith of waterway lobbyists and river enthusiasts in recent years has been pinned to J. H. Bernhard, the boat builder, who has predicted a rejuvenation of river traffic. Every citizen devoutly hopes Bernhard's prophecy will be realized, but in a discussion by Mr. Bernhard, found in the proceedings of the American Society of Engineers for 1915, occurs this remarkable statement, that is respectfully dedicated to the horn of plenty controlled by Chief Kingman:

To-day the Mississippi from St. Louis to its mouth affords a channel which is the best to be found in any stream in the world * * * and see its emptiness. An 8-foot channel is all that the most efficient service requires. The Government works unremittingly to develop waterways only to see the water-borne traffic grow less as the years go by.

Still the average "river man" will insist the poor condition of the channels keeps our inland waters idle. This is preposterous; the Rhine could never compare with the Mississippi in its advantages for transportation; its channel is narrower and shallower, more changeable, the current is swifter, and ice is known in the winter over its entire navigable length, yet in 1913 more than 97,000 vessels passed the Dutch and German frontier on the Rhine.

Further along Bernhard submits from official reports a statement of 37,529,153 tons carried on the Rhine in 1913, and it is safe to say this did not include sand, gravel, rock, and brush used in river work or automobiles and cattle ferried across the river, as reported by our own official Government statistician, Chief Kingman.

Senator Burton and Bernhard agree that you can not get commerce on water by idly wasting money in digging shifting, deeper channels. It takes men with freight to make commerce, and they obstinately refuse to ship by water. Yet we are spending $3,000 per mile on this 200 miles in 1915 by virtue of Chief Kingman's allotment.

AN $80,000,000 ARGUMENT.

Seven hundred and eighty thousand acres of land are to be reclaimed between Rock Island and Cape Girardeau. When reclaimed it will be worth from $50 to $150 per acre, according to estimates. That is a plum worth striving for, and the Government is now being strenuously urged by powerful influences to do the job. It beats "navigation."

A ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY MILLION INVESTMENT.

In order that a clear understanding may be had of startling conditions on the Mississippi River, where we are now annually dumping from seven to ten million dollars, I offer three tables taken from official records of river freight handled at the largest river port on the Mississippi. No through lines run on the river either above or below St. Louis. The absolute worthlessness of Army engineers' reports on "commerce" will be further demonstrated, but the Merchants' Exchange report, at least distantly, relates to actual commerce. After making allowance for duplications resulting from reshipments and observing that the bulk of all freight was presumably soft coal received from the Ohio River, it will be well for the country to ascertain what we are getting for $150,000,000 already spent on the Mississippi, with an annual interest charge of about $5,000,000, apart from seven to ten millions more in annual gifts of new, crisp Government currency for dredgers and contractors, raised in part by direct war-tax assessments.

COL. TOWNSEND'S CONFIRMATION—A REMARKABLE STATEMENT THAT COMMANDS ATTENTION.

Before presenting the Merchants' Exchange illuminating table of commerce I desire to quote briefly from a speech made by Col. C. McD. Townsend, Army engineer and president of the Mississippi River Commission. Incidentally the address was delivered before the $50,000,000 annual river lobby that recently held its annual round-up in this city. He said, page 215, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Sixty-fourth Congress:

St. Louis for the past 50 years has been the principal origin or terminus of the traffic on our western rivers, and its records summarize their tendencies. Its river commerce attained its maximum of 2,120,000 tons in 1880, and has since steadily declined to 153,000 tons in 1914. In contrast it may be stated that the commerce at Sault Ste. Marie, the outlet to Lake Superior, in 1880 was 1,300,000 tons, and attained a maximum of 79,000,000 tons in 1913. The commerce of New York Harbor exceeds 125,000,000 tons.

FOUR MILLION WANTED FOR MORE LAND RECLAMATION.

To show what Missouri and Illinois Members are up against I quote briefly from proceedings of the Upper Mississippi Drainage Association as reported in the Globe Democrat of November 9 last:

The chief topic under discussion was a plan to obtain Government aid in completing levees between Rock Island and Cairo. This can be done, according to statements made at the meeting, with $4,000,000. It was pointed out that $60,000,000 has been appropriated by the Government for work south of Cairo and a very small amount for the river north of Cairo. It was decided to ask the next session of Congress to appropriate $1,000,000 a year for this work.

Sure. But why stop at $1,000,000 or $4,000,000, when the lower Mississippi has had more than $60,000,000 and nearer $100,000,000 from the Government largely for land reclamation? Why not demand that for every dollar spent on the lower river reclamation work and every dollar spent on the Missouri River reclamation work an equal amount should be spent on the upper river? In short, why not throw open the Federal Treasury doors and take over every land reclamation and private water-power project in the country? If one gets a grab, why not all? Incidentally this is the 780,000-acre reclamation project covered by the resolution just offered.

IS NOT COL. TOWNSEND'S JUDGMENT SOUND?—IT CALLS A HALT ON 58 RIVER PROJECTS. WHY NOT?

Again, I quote from Col. Townsend's remarkable address before the river and harbor lobby which was extended in the RECORD of December 11, 1915. Therein he says:

Specifically the writer would not abandon any navigable stream in the Mississippi Valley that has been partially improved, but would leave 58 of them in their statu quo, confining operations to snagging and the maintenance of existing works and would concentrate appropriations on opening up a channel of the capacity of that existing on the lower and middle Mississippi to Chicago and Pittsburgh * * *.

If the facilities thus afforded by the Government are utilized, the upper Mississippi and the Missouri Rivers should then receive attention.

Col. Townsend calls a halt on the upper Mississippi and the Missouri River improvements until the $100,000,000 Ohio and $275,000,000 lower Mississippi projects are finished, and if these streams are ever utilized (?) then go on with the remaining 58 projects, including the Missouri and upper Mississippi. He is amply sustained in his demand for a halt on the 58 projects, but our rivers will not be "utilized" for reasons set forth by

Col. Townsend in that same address. He proposes a channel to Chicago, when Army engineers have shown the utter uselessness of digging a 14-foot canal to accommodate lake vessels, 98 per cent of which draw over 14 feet. In fact, Col. Townsend's inconsistency only demonstrates the eagerness with which men strive to see their own projects advanced, and, based on absolute lack of commerce on the lower Mississippi, we must infer Col. Townsend's job influences his judgment.

A NAVIGATION COMEDY IN THE LOWER MISSOURI.

In order to continue a study of engineers' statistics, I leave the lower Mississippi project temporarily and take up another remarkable illustration of advanced mathematics now found on the Missouri River, which Col. Deakyne condemns and which Col. Townsend, of the Army engineers, asks to have left in statu quo. While passing this deserted waterway, we are permitted to revel in "commerce" delusions. Attention is given this project, because after spending $20,000,000 of Government money during 50 years, on the recommendation of Army engineers, on the different sections of the Missouri River down to the mouth, they have launched us into an additional twenty-million-dollar expenditure, or thirty millions, in a game that has no limit, but now reaches $35,800,000 on the Missouri. Let us see what we are to get for $75,000 per mile for 400 miles. I quote from the Chief of Engineer's 1914 report, page 2513:

[1] Owner.

Total ton miles, 5,173,170.

Of this imposing commerce over 312,000 tons of "sand" was hauled about 1 mile in 1913. Nine-tenths of the "traffic" was barged 1 mile. Study the table in order to get a fair understanding of humbug statistics handed Congress by Army engineers and of a vanished river traffic.

In January, 1915, Senate Document No. 953, the engineers had on hand for this project $1,290,048. On April 1, 1915, the river and harbor lobby sent to the press the Chief Engineer's allotment, wherein $1,000,000 more was given for this 400-mile stretch on the Missouri. Instead of a 6-foot channel being required, a 2-foot channel will float the insignificant commerce, according to experienced river men, and for that river's commerce $2,050,000 was allotted by Chief Kingman out of the $50,000,000 turned over to him by Congress.

Deducting from the above table sand and 11,159 tons of ties and wood barged about 10 miles, leaves 24,000 tons of questionable commerce for which the Chief of Engineers gives $1,000,000 in 1915, or over $40 per ton 1913 expense for the waterway, including maintenance and interest on prior expenditures. Speaking of this Missouri River project on March 2, 1915, one month before the allotment was made, Senator Burton said:

You may spend $20,000,000—yes, $30,000,000—on this project, and in spite of that enormous amount the traffic will diminish, because you are facing a condition that no policy of river improvement can reverse—the loss of that class of river traffic and the utilization of other agencies for the carrying of freight. I wish it were not so, * * * but I am tired of "rainbow chasing," and that is what this is. It is much worse than "rainbow chasing"; it is pure, bald, unmitigated waste.

After this remarkable denunciation of a bald, wasteful project shouldered onto taxpayers by "rainbow chasing" engineers, and after positive legislative notice directing a resurvey of this "pure, bald, unmitigated waste," and with a million dollars balance on hand to throw into the mud, our Chief of Engineers triumphantly dumped in another million on April 1, 1915. Two jitney busses would have carried all the actual commerce and saved $998,000 of war-tax revenues during 1914.

Was TILLMAN to blame when he said the bill is a "humbug and a steal"? We know it is farcical and we do more than wink at it. With positive knowledge that the waste is twice as large as in the days when TILLMAN exposed the humbug, we approve it, Mississippi, Missouri, and all, with every other worthless project that the bill contains.

Concerning this waterway mockery, I quote from a Minneapolis paper's editorial of August 21 last this significant statement:

A BREEZE IN RIVER-IMPROVEMENT CIRCLES.

The Missouri River cities and especially Kansas City, are very much agitated over the adverse report of Col. Herbert Deakyne, of the Engineer Corps of the Army, on the expenditure of more money to improve navigation on that river. Col. Deakyne is the Government engineer in charge. He has made his surveys and reports that it is entirely feasible to provide a 6-foot channel from the mouth of the Missouri to Kansas City and that the expense will not overrun the estimate of $20,000,000. But attached to his report as an engineer is his recommendation to the Government that further work on the Missouri be discontinued, because in his opinion the railroads are now so well regulated through the Interstate Commerce Commission that river navigation is not necessary.

What has happened as to the Missouri might happen as to any other navigable stream. Col. Deakyne might be transferred to the upper Mississippi some day and decide that there was not business enough existing or prospective to justify river improvement.

KINGMAN WASTE VERSUS COMMON SENSE.

For fear the engineers may awaken to a like farce perpetrated on the upper river near Minneapolis, we are advised Col. Deakyne will not be welcomed on the Minneapolis lock-and-dam project. This possibility need not cause idle fears. Whatever belated intelligence was exercised by Col. Deakyne in reporting what everyone on the Missouri has known for years, Chief Kingman will set aside his report. That is the power and custom of Chiefs of Engineers, including especially Gen. Bixby, as disclosed by their own reports. The Missouri was pronounced of doubtful value by the 1915 bill, passed March 3, 1915.

Gen. Kingman on April 1 gave $1,000,000 for the questionable project which Col. Deakyne condemned 22 days thereafter. Is not that food for thought on the part of every disinterested man who must verify Deakyne's conclusions after glancing over the engineer's reports for recent years?

WHERE THE MONEY GOES.

To show specifically why $1,552,650 was recommended by Col. Deakyne for land-reclamation purposes in 1915, and $1,000,000 paid by Chief Kingman, I quote from page 2510, report 1914, on this 400 miles of the Missouri, along which Army engineers estimate 500,000 acres will be saved, valued at $100 to $125 per acre—land belonging to private interests deeply interested in this $20,000,000 project:

During the coming fiscal year it is proposed to carry on work with the funds for which allotments have been approved in the completion of contracts now in force and in work by day labor and Government plant, as follows:

97,500 linear feet standard revetment, at $10	$975,000
11,000 linear feet concrete revetment, at $10	110,000
21,950 linear feet 3-row standard dike, at $15	329,250
Maintenance of improvement	25,000
New plant	13,400
Snagging and repairs to plant	50,000
Surveys and superintendence	50,000

Other work will be done if appropriations are made.

This work is expected to result in greater permanence and depth of channel in the improved sections and greater ease of navigation.

A $60,000,000 LAND-RECLAMATION PROJECT.

One million four hundred thousand dollars was demanded for 25 miles of revetment and diking in 1915, and $1,000,000 was given by Gen. Kingman to confine a mile-wide river in places to a 1,200-foot channel, and incidentally to reclaim private land valued at sixty-odd million dollars.

Maj. Schulz disclosed an Army engineer's secret troubles along the Missouri when he said, according to the official record—

If I get a small amount of money, $50,000 to $60,000, for that stretch of river, every locality and almost every Congressman writes for the work right on their particular spot, and there I am.

The mental strain is easier when $1,414,250 is distributed "for that stretch" annually. Schulz is gone and Deakyne, who recommended nearly a million and a half for 1915, and then recanted—he, too, is gone, banished. A half million acres is to be saved at Government expense by Chief Kingman, according to the reports. What do you think of the system?

I believe the Missouri River is rightfully classed as a southern project, not because of geographical location, but from the fact it is closely related to the lower Mississippi, is recognized largely as a similar land-reclamation venture, and is supported in committee and in Congress by some of the most influential men in the majority party. It may also explain why Gen. Kingman gave $1,000,000 more to a project first rejected because "pure, bald, unmitigated waste," and why he will overrule the report of Col. Deakyne, and why, if so, he ought to be subjected to a thorough public investigation by his superior officers.

MISSOURI COMMERCE STEADILY DECREASING.

Since the opening of this Sixty-fourth session two learned and bulky briefs in favor of reinstating the Missouri River project have been placed on my desk.

Therein it is urged that Col. Deakyne conceived a prejudice against the new $20,000,000 project based on the poor commercial showing for the year 1913. (Brief, p. 24.) Apart from the fact that actual commerce on the Missouri River is reported to have decreased in sympathy with the Mississippi River over 90 per cent during the past half century, it is notable that the insignificant commerce in recent years and reported for 1913 (p. 2513, 1914 report) decreased 30 per cent during the last year reported (see p. 2811, 1915 report). My analysis and comparisons have been based on the 1914 report, but from the last one just handed me I note in defense of Col. Deakyne's prophecy the following significant loss in an insignificant commerce out of over 10,000,000 tons alleged to have been handled by Kansas City in 1914:

Tons of reported commerce.

1905	343,435
1913	347,235
1914	240,550
Loss (30 per cent)	104,685

Actual commerce.

1905	18,182
1913	24,000
1914	19,000
Loss (20 per cent)	5,000

A loss of 30 per cent in officially reported commerce and of 20 per cent in actual commerce, deducting sand and flotable timber, during the last year reported is more convincing than voluminous briefs. Col. Deakyne was a prophet, although 19,000 tons, or ten times that amount, is a pitiable showing on a $20,000,000 investment during the last 30 years. Deakyne urges us to drop the $20,000,000 new project. Why not do so?

COMMERCE?

I have given a full table reported by the engineers for the 1913 commerce and will give the principal items of deduction for 1914, taken from page 2811, 1915 report:

		Tons.	Tons.
Total tonnage reported			240,550
Sand and gravel barged one-half mile	tons	211,421
Sand and gravel, 9 miles	do	2,286
Railroad ties rafted 18 miles	do	6,041
Railroad ties, 9 miles	do	334
Wood, 12 miles		1,091
			221,173
Excluding sand, gravel, ties, and wood			19,377

It takes a courageous man to count as commerce 213,707 tons of sand barged less than a mile, but an Army engineer can do it.

A significant part of this statement is that the average grain haul for 1914 was 115 miles, showing conclusively that the much-boasted grain traffic between Kansas City and St. Louis after an expenditure of over $20,000,000 is pure gammon. The distance between these cities is 400 miles in round numbers, and apparently not one ton was shipped from Kansas City to St. Louis. An insignificant amount, 5,290 tons, is reported with an average haul of 115 miles; but what under heavens permitted engineers to recommend a $35,000,000 expenditure for this river to accommodate a little local freight, hauled a few miles, when Kansas City claims it has been shipping 10,000,000 tons of commerce annually by rail? Again, an S. O. S. call for a keeper from some feeble-minded establishment is momentarily expected.

HOW MUCH IS THE COST?

Before I pass from this phase of the Missouri River project, I understand there is a difference in understanding as to the amount that has been expended on the Missouri River by the Government. I am free to confess that the average engineer's report is as clear and intelligible as a Chinese puzzle, but after considerable digging into ponderous records there has been reported to the River and Harbor Committee by its assistants the following items:

For general improvements	$15,450,000
Appropriated under new project	6,250,000
Balance due on new project	14,100,000
Total when the present project is completed	35,800,000

You will find this accurate—$35,800,000.

The Missouri River has cost the Government over $21,000,000, and when the present project is completed the Government will have spent $35,800,000 for that deserted river.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the gentleman want to be corrected now?

Mr. FREAR. I will accept any correction.

Mr. BORLAND. I will say the gentleman is as incorrect in that as the gentleman is in those other statements.

Mr. FREAR. In what particulars?

Mr. BORLAND. There has been appropriated, up to the 4th of March, 1914, on the present project——

Mr. FREAR. Take 1915. I was referring to the last report.

Mr. BORLAND. 1914; the gentleman's figures do not reach any further back.

Mr. FREAR. Oh, yes; June 30, 1915, is the last date.

Mr. BORLAND. There has been appropriated up to the 4th of March, 1914, $4,400,000 on the present project. There was appropriated previous to 1902 about $9,000,000 on the Missouri River, most of which, or much of which, was dissipated by doing exactly what the gentleman——

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I object to an argument. I object further because the gentleman is entirely wrong. My own statement is correct.

Mr. BORLAND. In October, 1914——

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BORLAND. Just a moment.

Mr. FREAR. No; I must object to the gentleman's occupying my time any further. And I ask that this not be taken out of my time.

Mr. BORLAND. But I can answer——

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I object to the gentleman's answering at this time within my time. I extended him——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I call the gentleman from Missouri to order.

Mr. BORLAND. I thought the gentleman yielded——

Mr. FREAR. To a question, and then I told the gentleman distinctly I did not yield to an argument. The gentleman is entirely wrong. Look at the statement in the hands of every member of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. They all know.

THIRTY-SIX MILLIONS FOR WHAT?

Mr. Speaker, in support of my statement of expenditures on the Missouri River by the Government I refer to pages 2822, 2823, 2824, 2825 of the 1915 report, which shows expenditures on the Missouri to June 30, 1915, reach $19,789,104. I believe this includes several duplications, but these are the figures to which my attention has been called as the correct statement of expenditures already made on the Missouri River. To this should be added $2,236,907, balance unexpended (p. 1065, 1915 report) and $14,100,000 balance of the $20,000,000 unappropriated. If these figures are correct, the project will reach over $36,000,000, as disclosed by the tables.

Whether or not the statement is just exact, what a miserable, paltry showing is made on the river where 19,377 tons is all that was carried less than a couple of hundred miles, on the average, out of 10,000,000 tons handled at Kansas City in 1914. And what a tragic tale of waste when $19,789,104 has been poured into the rat hole by these Army engineers who, with $2,236,907 on hand, overruling Deakyne, demand $14,100,000 more for finishing the project. Is it not awful?

The only man who smiles during this war-tax-paying season is the "show me" Missourian who owns a few of those 500,000 acres, worth $60,000,000, that the Government is reclaiming.

POSITIVE EVIDENCE OF $300,000 ANNUAL LOSS—THE GOVERNMENT SHOULD BUY THE FREIGHT AND BURN IT.

Mr. Speaker, one of the ablest dissections of the lower Missouri River, $35,000,000, waste appears in the Journal of Political Economy, No. 10, December, 1915, from the pen of Prof. H. G. Moulton, of the University of Chicago.

For the sake of argument, he concedes all the rainbow chasing arguments and then, assuming the actual commerce of 1914 of 19,000 tons will some day grow to 800,000 tons, Mr. Moulton points out that the saving in freight charges of 20 per cent on the average would be only about $200,000 annual gain for Kansas City shippers. Col. Deakyne's estimate of $500,000 for annual maintenance and $600,000 annual interest, reaching a total annual lower Missouri charge against the Government Treasury of $1,100,000, is then presented to offset the $200,000 supposed saving to those favored shippers. No intelligent man dreams that a river commerce of 18,182 tons in 1905 and 19,000 tons in 1914 will reach 800,000 tons or 100,000 tons of actual commerce for 10 centuries to come at the present rate of progress. It is equally noteworthy that the proposed Government investment, now reaching $35,800,000, on the Missouri may be approximately $40,000,000 by the time the present project is completed.

Prof. Moulton takes the subject seriously, but the 200 delegates from 10 States called together August 17 by the lobby "congress" that distributes all the pork according to its own modest admissions, included, presumably, delegates interested in the $60,000,000 land-reclamation project on the lower Missouri or the Rock Island to Cape Girardeau $80,000,000 land-reclamation project on the Mississippi or the $2,000,000,000 land-reclamation project on the lower Mississippi, all of which are being financed by our war tax burdened people in order to help private interests. Prof. Moulton's contribution is valuable, but Army engineers do not analyze "unmitigated waste" of Government funds when listening to the voice of political might.

I like to get testimony first hand, and here we have a statement that appeared in one of the leading papers of the country on August 21, 1915, immediately after the hearing held in Kansas City. It is an Omaha, Nebr., statement, appearing in the Chicago Tribune, and gives an interesting side light on the Missouri River:

AN ELOQUENT SERMON FROM OMAHA

MISSOURI RIVER IS A GRAVEYARD OF STEAMBOATS—SNAGS IMPEDE NAVIGATION DESPITE GREAT SUMS SPENT BY GOVERNMENT.

OMAHA, NEBR., August 21, 1915.

While Kansas City, Omaha, Sioux City, and other cities are trying to revive steamship traffic on the Missouri River, and are asking Congress for appropriations to deepen the channel, the skeletons of 295 steamboats are rotting in its sands and, according to Government statistics, two-thirds of them were lost on snags and trunks of trees in the channel. Only 4 of the 295 whose histories are known met their fate on sand bars.

"Remove the snags from the river and the steamships will have no trouble," say old river captains and pilots.

The Government has already spent large sums on the Missouri River. The records of the Missouri River Commission show that $7,150,000 was expended by that body from 1884 to 1902. Of this amount $3,280,201 went for "the effective, progressive, and systematic improvement of the river," as expressed in the commission's report.

GREAT SUM FOR EXPENSES.

Nearly $1,000,000—$855,765—was expended for a plant, for office work, and for the expenses of the commission and incidentals.

And after all this treasure had been poured into the Missouri the traffic was insignificant. In 1901, the last year for which the Missouri River Commission compiled statistics, only 72,339 tons of freight were carried on the river below Sioux City and 37,349 tons above the city.

Of the 72,339 tons below Sioux City but 8,443 tons were hauled by steamship; the rest, wood and railroad crossties, were rafted.

In 1915 there is just one steamship on the river between Sioux City and Kansas City. She is the Julia, of 10 tons, and she plies between Omaha and Decatur, 60 miles. The United States Government spent many millions of dollars in order that the Julia might operate. On her last trip the Julia brought one passenger—the first and only steamship passenger to land in Omaha in 30 years.

Can anything be stronger than this arraignment of the project by those who live on the river and know the facts? Read it twice, it shows what Army engineers have done for a grateful people.

However, one passenger in 30 years is a thousand per cent better than no passengers in 30 years between St. Paul and Minneapolis—after an expenditure of $2,500,000 in "developing a passenger traffic," on the advice of Army engineers.

AN ECHO FROM THE LOBBY.

In an oration before the "river congress" lobby, a Missouri River champion omitted to explain just why the Government is spending $1,414,250, as officially reported, for revetting and diking some twenty-odd miles of private lands this year, under the guise of helping navigation on the Missouri. Also, what became of $855,765 used by the Missouri River commission for expenses? Will political influence overrule Engineer Deakyne, who revolted against the scandalous waste? Chief Kingman is the czar.

COL. TOWNSEND PROTESTS EMPHATICALLY—ANOTHER ECHO FROM THE SAME LOBBY.

Col. Townsend, chairman of the Mississippi River Commission, an Army officer, at that same lobby meeting, read a carefully prepared speech in which he declared the Missouri River and 57 other Mississippi Valley projects ought to remain in statue quo without continuation of projects until it is ascertained whether or not the Mississippi River, as a test river, will be or can be utilized for commerce.

Which do you rely on, Townsend and Deakyne, or local Representatives from Missouri, who plead for a $60,000,000 reclamation project for "navigation"? Will you waste $14,100,000 more for reclamation?

Again, we have higher authority than anything Deakyne has offered, and Deakyne, as I understand, is a man of unquestioned judgment and honesty of purpose, and has no interests in this. Deakyne condemned the project last April. He declared the Government should stop wasting money on the hopeless Missouri River. He was apparently sick of defending a reclamation project any longer.

Col. Townsend, at the head of the Mississippi River Commission, spoke in Washington last month, as stated. I wish I had time to read his report to you. He wants the Missouri River and the other rivers to be kept back in statu quo, because they are all deserted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed 50 minutes.

Mr. FREAR. I would like to spend 10 minutes in answering questions, after I conclude my remarks.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman have 20 minutes more.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin allow me to propound one question?

Mr. FREAR. I surely will, at that time.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the gentleman from Wisconsin continuing for 20 minutes in addition to the 10 minutes that he already has?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, he asked for only 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The proposition is to extend the gentleman's time 20 minutes. He already has 10, which will let him have 30 minutes more.

Mr. BORLAND. I suggest that there are a good many people interested in this.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FREAR. Here is a Missouri River paper, published at Sioux City, on the Missouri River. I might not want to speak in the tone that these editorials are couched in, but it is emphatic and specific and refers to statistics that have been offered to us by the Kansas City boosters.

This is from the Sioux City Tribune of November 22, 1915, and it must be familiar with the facts. It does not mince matters. It affords food for thought, coming from an unprejudiced witness living on the Missouri and familiar with the facts, we may well believe:

MISSOURI RIVER TRAFFIC INVESTMENTS.

The Missouri River "pork-barrel" crowd is still at work—harder than ever. They have succeeded in accomplishing one thing—getting the transfer of Col. Deakyne, the United States Army engineer who filed a report saying further expenditure of money "improving" the Missouri River under the pretense of restoring river freight traffic would be money wasted.

This, of course, is quite a lot. It serves as warning to Army engineers that they must make reports in harmony with the "pork-barrel" crowd instead of reports in harmony with facts if they expect to hold their positions and stand in line for promotion. * * *

However, the Missouri "pork-barrel" crowd has moved on to Washington, to the headquarters of the Rivers and Harbors Congress, a lobby so large and powerful that it has come to be known as the "third house" of Congress. It is relating how "over $34,000,000 of river-traffic investments" are demanding the "pork" for the Missouri River. Foolishly it itemizes these "investments."

An analysis of the itemized list shows that of the $34,688,000 listed as "investments" in Missouri River traffic $10,000,000 is credited to New Orleans Harbor improvements which are being made for ocean traffic. Of the remaining $24,688,000, just $125,000 represents actual investments. The rest shows up in items like these: "Proposed barge line," "proposed bond issue for terminals," "boat line proposed by private funds," and "estimated proposed bond issue."

This is a sample of the way the country is being deceived. There are no actual investments of any consequence in river traffic, because capital knows river traffic is absurd and impossible. If river traffic were as profitable a competitor to railroads as "pork-barrel" advocates make it out to be, the navigable rivers of the country would be crowded with river steamboats just as they were in the early days, for the rivers are surely as navigable now as they were then. The whole proposition is a fraud.

COL. DEAKYNE AND CAPT. DREYFUS—AMERICAN AND FRENCH MILITARY METHODS NOT UNLIKE.

What influence caused Chief Kingman to banish Col. Deakyne, whose official reports disclosed that the Government is spending $20,000,000 for revetting and reclaiming private land on the Missouri? Why not send Col. Riche to Alaska, because Riche ridiculed spending $10,000,000 on the wasteful Trinity project, and also tried to prevent Chief Kingman from giving $1,750,000 to the Alabama Water Power Co. for "flowage"? All to no purpose. While searching for the power that removed Deakyne we should also learn what power caused Chief Kingman to give $470,000 out of his Sixty-third Congress allotment to the wasteful Brazos that floats 1,080 tons of commerce annually—50 per cent more than to New York's great inner harbor, the largest in the world. What power caused Chief Kingman to give $320,000 to the Ouichita and Arkansas Rivers after the House and the House committee had acted adversely on these projects? He raised the gift over 1,000 per cent—but why? What power caused Chief Kingman to urge $100,000 in his last report for the Red River, when the only tangible commerce consists of 240,042 deadheads and other obstructions removed in 1912 and 1913? What influence caused Chief Kingman to recommend $18,700,000 of Government funds for the Alabama Water Power Co. 150-foot dam at Muscle Shoals, and also that the Government build a 150-foot dam for the Georgia Power Co. over on the Etowah?

WHY NOT MAKE DEAKYNE CHIEF ENGINEER?

I desire to refer at some length to these and other projects during my remarks, but I now ask why was Deakyne removed from the Missouri after his denunciation of the wasteful $20,000,000 project, and where is the Deakyne report rejecting the Missouri River project? Several million war-tax-burdened people not included in the State's census are from Missouri and want to be shown just why Deakyne was removed and why his report has been delayed or suppressed. Deakyne tried to protect the Government Treasury. Why not make him Chief Engineer?

AN ARRAY OF UNIMPEACHABLE WITNESSES AGAINST THE MISSOURI.

I understand this last $20,000,000 project on the Missouri was originally rejected by Army engineers. I have quoted among the authorities that join in that verdict or ask for a stay of proceedings Col. Deakyne and Col. Townsend, Army engineers; the Sioux City Tribune, from a flourishing Missouri River city; Prof. Moulton's unanswerable logic as to freight savings; Bernhard's statement on absence of river commerce; the greatest waterway expert in the country, Senator Burton; official reports, showing that 95 per cent of the last money was used by engineers to revet private lands; and, finally, that the insignificant actual commerce of 1913 fell off 20 per cent, down to 19,000 tons, in 1914. These opinions and reports are unprejudiced and presumably are uninfluenced by personal or political considerations.

No man can reasonably question a like verdict would be rendered by any unprejudiced jury of taxpayers, whether located in Maine, Michigan, or Missouri. But while undue influence would impeach the verdict of a petit jury in a $5 pig case, our Army engineers are openly belabored by every known influence from personal interest to political fear on a proceeding wherein the $5 pig has grown to the size of a $35,800,000 porker, if the above witnesses are correct.

ANOTHER MISSOURI RIVER PROJECT—HERE IS THE NEXT ENGINEERS' TABLE OF "COMMERCE" STATISTICS.

Commercial statistics—Upper Missouri River (Kansas City to Fort Benton).

Total		165,766	2,013,106.76

Total ton-miles, 2,684,759.

Again we encounter the engineers' traffic humbug. Of 165,766 tons, a familiar item is 115,685 tons of sand reported to have been barged 2 miles. About 10,000 tons of lumber and piling were rafted or barged, along with 1,200 tons of pussy willows, for revetting railroad switches. Page 2527 shows the railway's interest in Gen. Kingman's allotment. Four thousand one hundred and sixty-six tons of soft coal, apparently for Government dredges, was barged 38 miles for a 9,250-ton contractor's outfit (?), valued at just $10 per ton, which was hauled 35 miles.

Making proper allowances for duplications and quadruplications of grain shipped and received on a 65-mile haul, why should anybody waste time in ascertaining "how old is Ann" when this table of "commerce" is within easy reach? Where is the limit of an engineer's brilliant imagination when a Government contractor's outfit is used to bolster up about one-half of the ridiculous table of valuations, and what shall be said of actual commerce? After spending over a million dollars on this stretch of the Missouri River, and with $111,125 cash on hand, Chief Kingman, with a prodigality that knows no bounds, on April 1, 1915, allotted $100,000 more to the upper Missouri. That should keep one contractor busy for several months and pay reasonable dividends on his $925,000 investment.

A couple of motor trucks would have carried all of the "commerce" last year, whereas nearly $200,000 of Government money was blown into the river in addition to a million or more already spent, apparently to protect private landowners and furnish contractors a fairly continuous job.

THE OHIO RIVER COMMERCE—STATISTICAL INDICTMENT OF ENGINEERING METHODS.

We have journeyed down the Mississippi and Missouri, and now the Ohio is reached. What tales of waste and extravagance could be told by waters that once carried millions of tons of actual floating commerce now driven from the rivers. According to old river men, Government dredges, Government barges, and Government boats float most of the "commerce" now carried on these rivers to support an army of Government employees.

It is said by occasional defenders of "pork" and waste that the Chief of Engineers, who formerly posed annually before the $50,000,000 river and harbor lobby, is not responsible for errors in waterway statistics, and an apology states that his "commerce" reports are admitted to contain duplications and quadruplications. However, our Government educated this official at public expense because of aptness for mathematics and has furnished him constant employment for many years, during which time he has given marked evidence of early training. Our bosoms swell with pride when we turn to the table of Ohio River commerce furnished Chairman SPARKMAN. Apart from duplications, the example in arithmetical progression, furnished by adding together lockages reported, gives an insight into a remarkable method of reaching conclusions now pursued by Chief Kingman. With an insignificant through traffic, aside from soft coal, the explanation fails to explain, although a crude estimate for through coal traffic is offered in justification for adding together the lockages. The table and letter, introduced into the RECORD by Chairman SPARKMAN January 19, 1915, are as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS,
Washington, July 27, 1914.

Hon. S. M. SPARKMAN,
Chairman Committee on Rivers and Harbors,
United States House of Representatives.

SIR: 1. Referring to the statement of the commercial statistics of the Ohio River, telephoned to you some time since, I have the honor to inform you that a report just received from the district officer states that the commercial statistics which he reported by telegraph have been found upon careful check to have contained some duplication. A corrected tabular statement of the statistics is herewith.

2. As to the reason for reporting the statistics at only six locks, it may be stated that the particular locks were selected with a view to obtaining as complete statistics as possible, and at the same time to eliminate duplication as much as practicable. Boats with through tows are required to report only at the first lock through which they pass. The item for open-river commerce is the local commerce carried on between the various locks and dams.

Very respectfully,

DAN C. KINGMAN.
Chief of Engineers, United States Army.

Ohio River tonnage, calendar year 1913.

Total	9,814,123.3	77,026,901.78	4,270,786

A corrected statement of average freight floated on the Ohio, based upon official lock reports, is now presented over Chief Kingman's signature, and invites scrutiny.

When a 63-lock system on the Ohio River has been completed as a monument to congressional waste and engineering complicity "commerce" can then be determined by using 63 as a multiple of lock tonnage. This cumulative method of reckoning is as illuminating as to count the passengers in every car at every street corner in order to determine the total street car traffic. Astounding statistics may thus be produced. Chief Kingman says he has "avoided duplication as far as possible." What is the average haul or tonnage along the river when 1,400,000 tons was ferried across the river? Did the continuous commerce reach 100,000 tons or 50,000 tons, exclusive of soft coal which has floated down the Ohio and Mississippi for a half century at a yearly decreasing rate?

In an effort to excuse a proposed wasteful expenditure of from $60,000,000 to $100,000,000 on the Ohio, according to the varying predictions of Army engineers, our present chief includes in his totals 1,500,000 tons of "open-river traffic" that passes along the river as it always has for 50 years and in much larger quantities before canalization was known and before a dollar was spent by the Government on the Ohio. Was that open-river traffic part of the open-river traffic at each lock? How much freight goes through locks, and how far?

CANALIZATION TO PROMOTE RIVER FERRIAGE.

The limit of imaginary mathematics is reached when to total lockages of freight at a half dozen dams, including open-river traffic, our Chief Engineer adds more "open-river traffic" and finally scores a positive triumph by adding ferriage across the river, which aggregates 2,949,834 passengers, nearly three-fourths of the total number, valued at $36,086,390.07. That odd 7 cents is developed through engineering accuracy. Ferriage valuation is practically one-half of the total value of all tonnage and passengers carried on the river. Assuming that passengers had no value and that freight alone was considered, no further analysis need be made to show the valueless character of valuation statistics submitted by the Chief Engineer to bolster up this $100,000,000 canalization project.

Approaching 2,000,000 tons at one or two different points, over 95 per cent of which is soft coal, sand, and gravel, a traffic rapidly diminishing in quantity and value, leaves the mouth of the Ohio River at less than a million tons of soft coal, so far as can be ascertained, and then drifts slowly down the Mississippi to be recounted at Cairo, Memphis, Vicksburg, and New Orleans. In other words, a few tons of soft coal that reach New Orleans are first counted at a dozen locks on the Monongahela, then at the locks on the Ohio, and then the same coal, used to swell senseless quadrupled statistics, is sent down and recounted at Cairo, Memphis, Vicksburg, and New Orleans, on the Father of Waters.

It is an interesting system; one that only an able engineer could gravely put across with a wealth of misleading statistics and one that is frequently used for duplicating and quadruplicating commerce on other rivers and canals.

In order that a better understanding of Chief Kingman's letter may be had, let us take the tables from which he draws deductions.

OHIO RIVER TRAFFIC AT LOCK 1.

Lock 1 is given 1,982,257 tons. But page 2711 says that is commerce which passed through the lock—"and open river"—at that point. The table further shows that of the impressive tonnage reported, including duplications, 1,946,119 tons consisted of soft coal, sand, and gravel that was always floated down the "open river," leaving a commerce of 36,135 tons, including 11,240 tons of floatable logs and ties, or less than 25,000 tons, that may or may not have required the services of this $100,000,000 lock system.

OHIO RIVER TRAFFIC AT LOCK 8.

Lock 8 and "open river" is given 224,080 tons by Chief Kingman, page 2712. Of that traffic, so reported, soft coal and railroad ties, that for a half century were floated down the open river, reached 207,429 tons, leaving 16,651 tons of cement and other reported freight at that point for which a $100,000,000 lock system is being built under the recommendation of Army engineers.

OHIO RIVER TRAFFIC AT LOCK 18.

Other lock statistics are of the same character. For fear this statement may not be accepted, as based on investigation, I will take the next lock. Chief Kingman's next lock, 18, and "open-river" statistics are found on page 2713. He reports a total "commerce" of 374,945 tons, whereas out of an even 50 items reported, 2 items of soft coal and logs reached 342,836 tons. Just what method was taken for shipping some 7,000 tons of oil and 2,500 tons of lumber, found in the remaining 48 items, the report fails to disclose. One thing is certain amid all this attempt to impress Congress with inflated statistics of open-river and lock traffic, the Government is annually paying bills reaching, with the regular and sundry civil bills, from $5,000,000 to $8,000,000 for the Ohio River alone, for a comparatively insignificant commerce average along the river, apart from soft coal, sand, and gravel, of less than 50,000 tons at given points, as shown by the official reports.

Similar conclusions were reached in the record of April 10, 1914, when other lock statements were analyzed.

WHAT WILL BE THE EVENTUAL COST?

Canalized science v. common sense.

In the debate preceding the defeat of the 1915 bill a prominent Senator called the Ohio River project the "worst of all." It received $1,769,000 from the first allotment, $3,200,000 in the 1915 sundry civil bill, and $3,915,000 allotment from the Chief of Army Engineers April 1, 1915, or $7,115,000 for 1915, in addition to cash on hand—twenty times the amount that was allotted to New York's inner harbor, which handles fifty times the Ohio's actual commerce.

When a $100,000,000 Ohio canalization system has been fastened upon us with its annual interest burden of $3,000,000, and a reasonable maintenance and deterioration charge of $4,000,000 more annually for sixty-odd locks and dams, if the diminishing coal commerce is retained—a violent assumption—the Government will have little tangible traffic to show for its $100,000,000 investment and the annual $7,000,000 charge properly lodged against it.

It is again well to ponder over this extravagance into which we have been led by Army engineers, who seek to defend enormous waste by fictitious commerce statistics. The 45,000,000 tons commerce of the Rhine is probably twenty times the actual commerce of the Ohio, and it appears 95 per cent of the latter is cheap coal, sand, and gravel that requires no special depth of channel, yet seven or eight times the amount spent on the Rhine is slipped through the fingers of our irresponsible Chief of Engineers for a project of no more value to this country than Egypt's pyramids. Does it reduce the price of a ton of coal to a single consumer? Where does it accommodate any actual navigation need apart from floating a few political prospects and fantastic engineering schemes at Government expense? If any commercial house indulged in such investments its officials would be promptly lodged in an asylum to sober off. Is it not about time Congress sobered off and drove out of its counting house those who have persuaded us to adopt such propositions as the 63-lock project on the Ohio River?

A FALLING OFF IN 1915.

From the 1915 report just at hand, page 3015 appears heroic efforts by the Chief Engineer to hold up a decreasing commerce. Yet practically 60 per cent of the valuation was carried by "ferries" across the river.

Again referring to the memorandum mysteriously sent by some unknown authority to which I shall later address myself, we find—

So sixty-four million we throw through dam gates,
Based on fat ferry figures and queer lockage freights,
Even Ford limousines while crossing the river
Help make freight statistics more cash to deliver,
While stray pools of water and Missouri sand
Bag twenty more millions for reclaiming land,
Hand in hand with contractors, whose junk-laden scow
Makes half of the freight for the pork we allow,
Along with a water power for navigation
To give old St. Anthony a gold coronation.
If political pull distributes this malt,
When will Congress decide to call a sharp halt
In filling up kegs like the chief built?

THE LOWER MISSISSIPPI RIVER SCANDAL—A SCORE OF INDICTMENTS IN ONE.

Only a brief reference to this wildly wasteful project can be given. On September 29, 1914, I offered in the RECORD many pages containing definite charges of incapacity and extravagance coming from civil engineers, experienced river men, and residents of the Mississippi Valley, lodged against the present colossal waste on the lower river; also against the Mississippi River Commission, Army engineers, and against the notorious levee lobby. A thorough investigation would determine the truth of explicit charges that were lodged with the committee. Nearly a hundred million dollars of Government money has been spent on the river below St. Louis. Some authorities state the amount to be larger. No man pretends to estimate the permanent value of work done on the river. No recognized authority assumes to know where the end will be found. The river's appetite for gold is growing like that of a gluttonous child, and, lest we forget, this project was fostered and fastened upon us by Army engineers and the powerful river lobby that parades publicly as a "congress," with a "policy, not a project." The cloak that used to get millions annually for navigation purposes has been abandoned. There is no substantial commerce, present or prospective. The facts are now well known. The play on our sympathies for flood control aid is another transparent cloak to cover up a huge land reclamation project our Government is financing for private interests.

Notwithstanding the Mississippi River Commission had in its hands January 1, 1915, over $1,800,000, the Army engineers on April 1, 1915, gave $4,000,000 more to that commission in addition to other lower-river appropriations. I will not now offer further opinions as to the character of that work other than to quote briefly from three leading papers published in the valley. The New Orleans Item in a column editorial uses this significant language:

The National Rivers and Harbors Congress conducts a national lobby for the pork-barrel bill. The Mississippi River Levee Association was organized by some railroad interests who do not want genuine and permanent stream control, because it threatens competition with levee board politicians and levee contractors, whose jobs and profits depend upon the perpetuation of the stupid and vicious old system of disjointed levee maintenance under which the people of the valley have been bled and pillaged.

That is a Louisiana opinion from the home of the National Rivers Congress lobby that conducts the pork-barrel bill. It is respectfully referred to Secretary Redfield, who finds no pork.

BRUTAL LOGIC DEMANDS YANKEE MONEY.

The Memphis News Scimitar published a long, searching editorial, from which again I take a brief but pointed extract:

The old brutal logic that we must "get some of that Yankee money down here" is no longer appealing. The Mississippi River Commission has been discredited by its own reluctant admissions. The political levee boards have been discredited by the people and the logic of events. We must have a new and square deal. We must adopt new and better methods. We must put new and better men in charge, and we must make provision to reimburse those whose property the levee system has destroyed.

Will Secretary Redfield take official notice of the old, brutal, pork-barrel logic?

One more brief editorial extract taken from the Memphis Press is significant:

THE PORK BARREL IS AN ENEMY OF NAVIGATION.

We have told our readers on many occasions that the conscience of the Nation was revolting against the "pork barrel." We told them we were crucifying our chances for permanent relief from floods and from permanent reestablishment of navigation when we continued longer to put our faith in the hodgepodge, wasteful, selfish, aimless conglomeration of good, useless, and evil projects annually or biennially labeled the "rivers and harbors bill." The method of the rivers and harbors bill is indefensible and the results of that method pursued through generations are its own damnation. * * * The would-be perpetrators of the pork barrel are the enemies of the comprehensive program, the enemies of real safety, the enemies of revived navigation. It is not going too far to say they are, in effect, traitors to the Republic.

"Traitors to the Republic"; "Wasteful, selfish, aimless conglomeration of projects"; "Must get some of that Yankee money down here is no longer appealing." These are expressions from leading press representatives of the Mississippi Valley, not from uninformed men. I quoted many pages of equally good authority in a September 29, 1914, speech devoted to the river lobby that has just finished its annual open session in this city. For such purposes Army engineers gave $4,000,000 on April 1, 1915, and $3,750,000 in their allotment six months before, or $7,750,000 within six months, to the Mississippi River below the mouth of the Ohio for a land-reclamation scheme, not a project.

A NEW LOUISIANA LOTTERY.

The Mississippi River levee lobby under the direction of its publicity agent, Mr. John Fox, is trying to educate the American public through leading magazine articles for which he arranged, according to a press announcement, last year.

In these articles a writer estimates that overflowed, worthless lands when reclaimed will be worth from $100 to $175 an acre. In return for this fabulous increase we are advised that in the Helena (Ark.) district an average tax of 41 cents per acre on an indefinite acreage has been devised. Of the Yazoo district he says an ad valorem of 17½ mills, and in back counties 12½ mills, is levied. The same authority, World's Work, June, 1915, says, "Louisiana districts pay an ad valorem of 10 mills per acre," while during the same period our Government is war taxing its people from Maine to California for hundreds of millions to dump into the lower Mississippi in order to make increased land values for railways and other private interests. To change conditions that have existed for millions of years and to make a return of $175 or more per acre on a 1-cent-per-acre investment, this new Louisiana lottery, through the river lobby, first finances its venture with $275,000,000 Government war tax as a beginning, and other funds heretofore given, to use a hackneyed but truthful expression, by "God's patient poor." Brass bands junketing trips, free excursions, and glittering pictures based on faded navigation glories are still used to capture the imagination of Presidents and legislators, but while the same old river lottery lobby paints the pictures and gets the cash, the tax-paying public holds the bag.

A HUGE LAND RECLAMATION SCHEME.

Any sane man who desires confirmation of the purpose of the Mississippi land reclamation scheme will find it fully expressed in the following statement from the 1912 report of the Missssippi River Commission, page 3724:

While the levees have a certain degree of utility in the improvement of the channel and are necessary to "promote the interests of commerce" by providing landing places for the interchange of traffic in times of flood and protecting the lines of railway behind them, their immediate and main value is the protection of the alluvial lands for the benefit of their owners.

What need be added to this unqualified admission by an official agent of the parties in interest?

Quoting from the comprehensive brief of Hon. B. E. Moses, of Memphis, he says in this connection:

This so-called protection of the alluvial lands along the Mississippi River is primarily and fundamentally a work of "reclamation," as that term is generally understood. * * * The history of the levee system along the Mississippi River is merely a repetition of the fight of mankind from time immemorial to reclaim for cultivation the fertile alluvial plains of the rivers of the world. The futility of the fight under the past method of "levees only" is apparent and real and has been impressed upon the people of the valley during the floods of the last two years by ruin, starvation, and death, incident to the breaks in the levee system.

The Government is reclaiming lands that were never before used, and for the benefit of private interests. This purpose is not disputed by any recognized authority, so far as I can ascertain.

THE GOVERNMENT'S DUTY AND LIMITATIONS.

Several years ago Congress commissioned some of her ablest men to make a thorough study of the waterway question and to make recommendations. These men, composing the United States National Waterways Commission, did make a careful investigation of waterways, both in this country and Europe. Fresh from that investigation they laid down certain principles of governmental action that condemn the expenditures now being made on the Mississippi land-reclamation scheme. I quote from the report on this question, as follows:

It should always be borne in mind that the waterway improvements made by the Federal Government under the exercise of its authority should be restricted to navigation. Whenever bank protection or flood prevention or the clarification of water is the sole object of improvements the question presents little difficulty in its solution. Such projects are not a proper charge upon the Federal Treasury. * * * In many instances proposed improvements have as their main object the protection or benefit of private property. In such cases there is a distinct benefit conferred upon individuals or localities which is only of a remote or very indirect benefit to the country as a whole. Lands subject to periodical overflow or lands of uncertain value because of the danger of erosion, when improved, are multiplied many times in value, and there is a constant danger that such improvements will be advocated under the guise of river and harbor legislation framed to benefit navigation when the real object is the benefit which will accrue to individuals or localities. * * * The line should be carefully drawn between improvements which, in whole or in part, are for the protection or development of private property and those which are made in the sole interest of navigation.

This report from which the foregoing is quoted was signed by Theodore E. Burton, chairman; J. H. GALLINGER, vice chairman; S. H. Piles, WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH, F. M. SIMMONS, JAMES P. CLARKE, William Lorimer, D. S. Alexander, Frederick C. Stevens, Irving P. Wanger, STEPHEN M. SPARKMAN, and JOHN A. MOON.

Men whose names have been linked with presidential honors and who have unqualifiedly denounced recent river bills; other men who to-day are the leaders of their party in the Senate and who have also opposed recent waterway legislation; others also of high standing in both Senate and House, including the present chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, Judge SPARKMAN, all of these unanimously and emphatically opposed land-reclamation schemes and then signed the waterway report in 1910.

Since that day a "Congress and levee" lobby, by modest admissions of its own officers, has become a greater power than presidential candidates, Senate leaders, or committee chairmen all combined. Army engineers willingly recommend, pursuant to lobby demands, and Congress—ignoring all legislative precedents, words of timely warning, public economy, and common-sense river improvement—throws wide open the Treasury doors to the Mississippi River land-reclamation lobby.

AN ASTOUNDING SITUATION.

Before leaving the lower Mississippi River, we discover that after spending about one hundred millions on the river, the return in continuous actual commerce—apart from a small sand, timber, and diminishing coal traffic, previously counted on the Ohio—is less than will be found on Choptank or Wicomico Creeks. Further, that this enormous river subsidy has been given without any control of freight rates or rights to any service. After squandering such fabulous amounts on a purposeless project and with a two hundred million deficiency confronting Congress, the Mississippi River lobby demands many more millions in the next river bill.

"STAGGERING" DEBTS PROPOSED BY THIS ADMINISTRATION.

With hundreds of millions of acres in fertile land awaiting development, Secretary Lane, in his annual report, asks for a commission to devise ways and means for raising what he terms "staggering sums" for taming rivers and reclaiming bottom lands.

Secretary Redfield has placed the administration's seal of approval on the river lobby that now demands $100,000,000 annually, according to Secretary Thompson, and which wants $5,000,000,000 for waterways. In fact, Secretary Redfield says there is no pork. All expenditures are proper.

With that program, Army engineers, representing another department, have recommended waterway expenditures already reaching $850,000,000. They now include private water powers, private land reclamation, and endless private beneficiaries in official recommendations.

Preceding administrations may have merited condemnation for waste and extravagance, but when plans are being proposed by Cabinet officials of this administration for burdening the country with "staggering" debts, in addition to "staggering" sums now spent on useless rivers, ordinary taxpayers of all parties will take to the woods or trenches. What means preparedness, public defense, or necessary expenditures when Secretaries Lane and Redfield have found a chance to invest "staggering sums" in abandoned rivers? From a recent Democratic national party platform, adopted at Baltimore, appear the following clearly expressed promise and chosen words:

> We call attention to its record of efficiency, economy, and constructive legislation. * * * We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which befits a democratic government.

"SECRETARY FOX TO MOVE TO WASHINGTON."

The above heading is from Fox's own paper, the lobby organ, for December, 1915. He warns the country as to his intentions. Heaven help us now.

Resolutions passed by State legislatures urging flood control on the lower Mississippi will doubtlessly show up before the House at this session. One was railroaded through the Wisconsin Legislature under suspension of rules by John Fox, publicity agent and expert lobbyist for the Mississippi Levee Association and also publicity agent for the river congress lobby that asks for $50,000,000 annually. In Indiana and many other States he has been industriously steering flood resolutions since the close of last session. Watch for them. They are to be unfairly used to influence your action.

Mr. Fox is the same lobbyist who collected $40,000 from eight railways, as is more fully set forth on page 11710 of June, 1914, RECORD; money secretly contributed to help finance the levee lobby. Although the State legislature resolutions were evidences of shrewd lobby work, financed by secret funds wheedled out of railways and other corporations interested in lands to be reclaimed, they were easily secured from unsuspecting warm-hearted men, because the Uriah Heap arguments went. Crocodile tears for the Mississippi flood sufferers are continually shed by land reclamationists, and are especially heavy before national conventions, where the lobby aids in platform making. For millions of years the river ran undisturbed, excepting when irresponsible Army engineers tried to curb it to narrow limits with disastrous results.

THE GREATEST PROMOTION SCHEME IN THE WORLD.

Then Mr. Fox and his reclamation lobby colleagues conceived the idea of having the Government reclaim from 16,000,000 to 20,000,000 acres of land for the benefit of adjoining landowners. They have succeeded in starting the greatest promotion scheme in the world. It is proposed to bring two or three billions of unearned increment to its promoters and landowners if it succeeds. It would make worthless land increase to hundreds of dollars per acre—if it succeeds—but according to other engineers and many residents along the river it will not succeed further than to bleed the Treasury. A few may reap the golden harvest, but the bubble will burst because of insurmountable conditions. Mr. Fox keeps pulling the heartstrings of his auditors by pictures of poor squatters who are driven out by floods. With full knowledge that the Mississippi is as uncontrollable at flood as ocean tides, a handful of foolish people build on sand and mud bottoms, challenging the laws of nature. Then, through the activities of the lobby, they have Mr. Fox ask Congress to revolutionize nature's laws for their protection. And the lobby, crying lustily for help, fattens its purse at the expense of the taxpayers of the country. Shouting against railroads, the lobby is financed in part by railways owning submerged lands.

A FEW RAILROAD CONTRIBUTIONS.

On June 3, on pages 10591 to 10599 of the RECORD, appear my remarks before the House wherein I pointed out secret efforts to influence Congress on rivers and harbors bills from subscriptions of money to the use of threats against business men. At that time I presented the following subscriptions, running for five years, taken from what purported to be a photographic copy of a typewritten statement made by Col. John A. Fox, secretary and manager of the Mississippi Levee Association:

> It has been estimated that a minimum fund of $30,000 per annum is necessary for this organization to do its work in a complete and thorough manner, and already a considerable portion of this sum has been pledged annually for five years (of $150,000 in all). The subscriptions are as follows:

Southern Railway Co	$1,000
Mobile & Ohio R. R	1,000
Frisco R. R	1,000
Missouri Pacific R. R	1,000
Chi., R. I. & Pac. R. R	1,000
St. Louis & So. West. R	1,000
Illinois Central	1,000
Y. & M. V	1,000
Chicago Mill & Lumber Co	1,000
Caldwell & Smith, Memphis	1,000
International Harvester Co	1,000

> Assurance has been given of other substantial amounts.

As I have before stated, on June 3 I called the attention of the House to contributions made by eight railways for the purpose of aiding in the passage of a river pork barrel. It may be remembered that contributions approximating $150,000 for the five-year period were given in the RECORD, and it was further shown that $40,000 of this amount was guaranteed by eight railroads for the purpose of influencing Congress to pass the bill. At that time I asked why an investigation was not had of this remarkable situation, and I further demanded in my resolution that all interests engaged in lobbying through such bills should be compelled to come out in the open.

A congressional investigation would be wonderfully enlightening in showing what other contributions reached the hands of Col. Fox, who is special director of the Rivers and Harbors Congress and an active publicity agent second to none in the country, as I have offered abundant testimony to prove.

FLOOD CONTROL OR LAND RECLAMATION.

Why should the Government contribute hundreds of millions of public moneys, of "Yankee money," to make billions of dollars in new land values for speculators whose principal contribution is to the lobby fund? Why should not speculators pay for experimental levees, and why should not land beneficiaries be made to stand the expense of such improvements? If not all, why not the greater part?

Why should taxpayers in Wisconsin, the Dakotas, New York, Illinois, Ohio, Indiana, Iowa, and far-away California be taxed to fill the coffers of Fox or any citizen or State legislator who may happen to own Mississippi submerged lands? It is claimed by the lobby that the lower river serves the whole upper valley. That has been a physical fact for millions of years, just as Alaska is always frozen up for several months during every year; but the Government has not yet undertaken to increase the value of Alaska holdings by carrying coal free of charge in order to make the winter climate more salubrious. The Mississippi River reclamation lobby has big stakes in view, and is persistent. That is why the Louisiana Legislature gives to the lobby fund. That is why railroads made a $40,000 gift to the same fund, and presumably many times that amount. That is why Mr. Fox manipulates State legislatures, national conventions, and the Federal Congress as the paid publicity representative of the $50,000,000 river "congress" lobby. The Mississippi River problem should be divorced from land reclamation and legitimate waterway work should be made the limit of Government aid, according to the recommendation of the waterway commission quoted.

ENGINEERS' "COMMERCIAL" STATISTICS.

If time and space afforded, I could quote many other tables of commercial statistics from the 1914 Engineer's Report to show how little value can be placed on either the methods of collection or the data collected. A few of those I referred to during the fight against the last pork barrel. The same floating commerce counted and recounted repeatedly, and saw logs floated to sawmills is a frequent source of misrepresentation of "commerce" carried. Think of the Pascagoula, from which 3,921 stumps and other obstructions were taken in 1913, yet only 10 tons of miscellaneous commerce was carried on the river out of an imposing array of items. Ten tons of flour, salt, and sugar for the sawmill and all the rest timber products. On the Pearl during 1913, 12,000 obstructions were removed for a sawmill commerce that apparently exists to secure Government appropriations.

The Pascagoula and the Pearl were kindly remembered in Chief Kingman's 1915 allotment. Creeks and inconsequential streams of North Carolina, Florida, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Texas furnish scores of instances of misleading statistics, where a casual scrutiny on the part of some responsible board of waterways is required if the Government Treasury is to be protected from the kegs of the Chief of Engineers. Time will only permit adding a few other flagrant projects that crop out at every corner, crevice, and crack of the chief's 1915 allotment to the time-honored old barrel.

THREE DISGRACES REACHING $40,000,000—THREE MORE COUNTS IN THE INDICTMENT AGAINST ENGINEERS.

The Coosa, Brazos, and Trinity Rivers will cost the Government approximately $40,000,000 according to present indications. At the present rate of improvement they will not be finished for a half century or more, and when all locks and dams have been built as recommended by Army engineers, their combined commercial value will be measured by a last year's bird's nest.

It is said semiofficially that a Cockney engineer direct from Liverpool, or more likely Limerick, was asked for his opinion of these three waterways, whereupon he heavily observed:

The Trinity, Brazos, and Coosa,
Don't seem to be of much use—ah;
They never can float any kind of a boat,
Because they lack visible juice—ah.

That, briefly, is one trouble with many of these engineering projects. If they had water or prospective commerce, all would be forgiven.

A $60,000 BUILDING IN A $5,000 TOWN.

Before discussing one or two of many projects for which Texas has become famous, I quote, without comment as to the sentiment, from remarks of an energetic Member of this body who has served Texas for a dozen years in the House and holds a high position in the Democratic Party. His remarks, widely published in the press, if authentic, invite consideraton. He is reported to have said:

There are half a dozen places in my district where Federal buildings are being erected or have been recently constructed at a cost to the Government far in excess of the actual needs of the communities where they are located. Take ———, my home town, for instance. We are putting up a post office down there at a cost of $60,000, when a $5,000 building would be entirely adequate for our needs.

There is no doubt the Government is engaged in building many useless, expensive monuments in many States and in this and other Texas districts, for Texas has 16 Democratic Members, several committee chairmanships, and many able men. Other monuments now building in that State at Government expense are locks and dams and future maintenance charges costing many millions of dollars each, that make a $60,000 building in a $5,000 town measure up like a bulging barrel to an arrogant garbage cart, when both are dedicated to the same service.

It is also true that many hard blows opposing valueless waterway projects in Texas and other States have come from Representatives in those States who are familiar with the facts, including, especially, my distinguished friend, Mr. CALLAWAY, whose humorous ode to the Trinity last session is unanswerable.

THE NOTORIOUS TRINITY OF TEXAS—BEGINNING EVERYWHERE, ENGINEERS FINISH NOWHERE.

Take the engineer's own story of this waterway romance that is defended by powerful political pull. On page 812, 1914 report, he says:

No record of traffic over this improvement (the mouth of the Trinity) was obtainable, no replies having been received to numerous letters sent to interested parties with request for statistics.

Observe the method pursued in securing statistics from "interested parties" to justify a $20,000,000 river project now under construction. Of the river proper (p. 854), he says:

The original estimate of cost of this improvement was $4,550,000.

Two pages further (856) he informs Congress:

The total amount expended on the existing project to June 30, 1914, was $1,870,061.84, in addition to $7,000 spent on the original survey. The amount spent during the fiscal year (1913) was $342,929.

The elevator is going up. Again, he says that on June 30, 1914—

The project is approximately 10 per cent completed.

The elevator carries money instead of commerce. Even the Chief of Engineers will concede that if it takes $1,870,061.84 to complete 10 per cent of a project, it will require more than $4,550,000 to complete 100 per cent of the job. It is also instructive to learn that at the present rate of progress this waterway can not float commerce for 110 years to come. Let me briefly quote from page 2343:

There is little or no commerce on Trinity River above mile 6, except the handling of timber products, which extends to about mile 30. (The proposed "improvement" covers 513 miles to Dallas.) No commerce can be expected above Liberty (near the river's mouth) until the river is completely canalized.

Again:

The work of the snag boat above Liberty is of no benefit, except to prevent further deterioration of the channel and to improve the drainage.

We are apparently spending $20,000,000 to improve the river drainage for Dallas. However that may be, the Chief Engineer has an inspiration when he says in the 1914 report, page 2344:

The appropriations which have been made so far by Congress for the Trinity River seem to indicate an intention to provide locks and dams.

PRAISEWORTHY ENGINEERING PERCEPTION.

After 12 years' work and about $2,000,000 in completing 10 per cent of the work, the chief is beginning to see just what he believes he thought was intended when he recommended $4,550,000 at the outset. Quoting further from this remarkable serial story:

The normal flow of the Trinity River for eight months of the year is so small that open navigation between pools is not feasible and until the river is completely canalized—110 years hence—no practicable navigation will obtain.

Apparently for eight months of the year the bed of the stream might be used for a wagon road. Again, the chief, who is recommending possibly $20,000,000 on this project, first estimated at $4,455,000, has a genuine inspiration when he says:

Attention is called that the project can not be completed within the estimate, and that its cost will be approximately three times the original estimate.

While the belated invitation to note a self-evident fact is not overlooked, he should substitute "five" or "ten" for "three."

To show the reckless abandon of engineers, Senator Burton said, in 1914, as to this project:

Why, the Chief of Engineers came before us and was utterly unable to state whether or not there would be water enough to manage the locks and dams. We are going ahead under a project calling for 37 locks and dams on the Trinity, to cost $170,000 apiece. They may cost three times that amount or twice that amount.

A TRINITY TRAGEDY.

Act 1, September, 1914: The Trinity was exposed and condemned in both Houses.

Act 2, October, 1914: The engineers gave $203,000 to the Trinity.

Act 3, March 2, 1915: Congress demanded a resurvey.

Act 4, April 1, 1915: The Chief of Engineers gave $35,000 more to the Trinity.

It is a matter of record that Col. Riche, an Army engineer, once sarcastically proposed to drill artesian wells in the Trinity to aid navigation. He is a member of the board now, and as such tried to save $1,750,000 to the Government from the Muscle Shoals Treasury raid, but was overruled by the board. The most successful drilling now is that unremitting toil pursued on United States Treasury locks. Is it possible that any chapter in the whole volume of waterway waste and incompetency can exceed this $20,000,000 Trinity travesty, approved by Army engineers who handled $50,000,000 of Uncle Sam's cash last session?

Mr. CALLAWAY, of Texas, said on March 24, 1914:

I ford this river, and time and time again I have seen water standing in holes below the points called the head of navigation. In Dallas for months they could not get enough water to supply the necessities of the city and they hauled water there by rail.

Mr. FREAR. Is not that a case like the Kissimee River, in Florida, that ought to be insured against fire?

Mr. CALLAWAY. Yes. * * * I believe I can show you by the wording of the engineers' report that there is no serious intention of over navigating the Trinity River.

WAR-TAX AFFINITIES FOR ARTESIAN TRINITIES.

Let us hope the poor bleating Trinity will some day be gathered to the fold by its guardians through the agency of a salary-slashing campaign. Superannuated Government clerks, who have been providing a little old-age endowment, will then contribute part of their $1,200 salaries to buy pumps for the Trinity. Haggard Congressmen holding mileage coupons discounted 75 per cent will also help liquidate the Trinity. In fact all Federal officials may begin drilling for preparedness, and for water down on the Trinity.

Sixty thousand dollar public buildings in Hamtown and Porkville will soon loom up on the banks of the nine months dry Trinity. Aye, preparedness is in the air. Latest news from the American seat of war has it that Admiral Stanford, Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, is no longer undecided. Quantanamo and Pensacola were running neck and neck with New Orleans and Puget Sound for the prize, until Stanford heard of the Trinity. Hereafter the Navy will be secure, for our whole fleet of submarines are to be dry-docked in the 37 locks now being constructed down in Texas—one to each lock. No need of pumps to empty the locks. That is the beauty of the arrangement. The docks are guaranteed always dry on the Trinity. It is the first case on record where docks are naturally and perpetually parched with nothing to pump. We will use rollers for entering and skidways for emptying, for all the machinery is generously greased by lard. Then indeed will the tender Trinity lamb be gathered to the fold by its kind keeper.

Is it not funny the way some Democratic statesmen practice economy, scraping up pork rinds for the Trinity out of proceeds of salary slashings from department clerks? To provide 37 dry docks and 37 dry dams on the Trinity.

The shoes of Sam Houston, Regan, and Mills have indeed grown large during the intervening years.

A BRAZOS BUBBLE—DIGGING ALL OVER CREATION, BUT NEVER SHOWING RESULTS.

Another remarkable Texas canalization scheme is from the Brazos mouth to Waco, a distance of 424 miles. (1914 report, p. 830.)

On page 826 the report says that in 1899 improvements at the mouth of the Brazos were estimated to cost $250,000. In 1900 (the following year) estimates were raised $175,000 because of a storm, and an additional $150,000 was spent before the $425,000 project was begun. In 1913 Congress appropriated $200,000 for a dredge to replace one burned the month before (p. 828), and to show mathematical exactness in the engineer's department, we are seriously informed by the 1914 report that the hull of the dredge is 2½ per cent completed and the machinery 7 per cent completed, whatever that may mean. On the other hand, after spending $618,753 at the mouth of the Brazos for a commerce that diminished 80 per cent from 1912 to 1913, because of busted oil-well bubbles, we search in vain to find when the river project is to be completed. Engineers hesitate to give us any limit on essentials, but are busy mathematicians when it comes to careful discrimination between the ratio of completion on the machinery and on the hull of a dredge, while storms and fires and other acts of God, aided by Congress, all unite to prevent Government contractors from starving.

On page 829 of the 1914 report the Chief of Engineers says $377,566 has been spent on the Brazos above the mouth of Old Washington, a distance of 254 miles. From Old Washington to Waco, 170 miles farther up the river or creek, it appears that over a million dollars more has been spent by the Government. The engineer has given an estimate which is elastic, like estimates on Trinity Creek. In his estimate (p. 831) he believes $2,915,000 will be needed for the 170-mile stretch. No estimate of the total probable expense can be found, and we have already learned estimates are absolutely worthless on the Trinity, a few miles distant. But see what has been accomplished after an expenditure of $2,000,000 on the Brazos.

CHIEF KINGMAN PAID $470,000 LAST SESSION TO THIS DRY RUN.

The report says (p. 830):

No advantage has been taken of the improvement above Columbia—

Thirty-five miles from the mouth.

During 1913 one small boat carried 1,080 tons (estimated). Boat trips were made about once in every 10 days during 1913. The little harbor of Ashland, Wis., in 1913 handled 5,623,309 tons (p. 2854), or five thousand times as much commerce as was floated on the Brazos. Ashland was allotted $15,000 for its actual commerce in 1914 and 1915. The Brazos received $470,000 from two allotments by Chief Kingman, or about $470 per ton for the year. We learn, page 830:

No commerce of any note has developed nor can any be expected until the Brazos River is improved from its mouth to Waco—

Four hundred and twenty-four miles and some 50 years or more hence.

On page 832 the Chief of Engineers says that $500,000, exclusive of $277,878 balance available, can be profitably expended during the year ending June 30, 1916. Three-quarters of a million is a tidy sum for one year.

Out of the $20,000,000 substitute bill passed at the 1914 session in September the Chief of Engineers allotted $20,000 to the mouth of the Brazos and $210,000 to the Brazos River, the full amount of the House bill, while Buffalo, with a commerce of about 20,000,000 tons annually, was denied a single dollar in 1914.

GENEROUS GEN. KINGMAN.

On March 2, 1915, Congress passed the $30,000,000 substitute and in unmistakable terms denounced the Brazos, demanding a resurvey. On April 1, 1915, All Fools' Day, mind you, one month thereafter, and six months after the last allotment of $230,000 had been given to this worthless project, Chief Kingman again gave to the Brazos $240,000 more, or nearly a half million dollars within a period of six months in two allotments for a worthless dry run in summer that is as great a joke among river men and Texas residents as the scandalous Trinity Creek, a few miles distant.

Last January Representative TREADWAY, of Massachusetts, an able member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, gave utterance to his disgust over the bill then before the House and said of the vicious Brazos project (RECORD, p. 1633):

Probably there is no Member of this House who has had business experience at all, or who has made any financial investments, who has not made mistakes and reached a point where a decision must be made whether he will continue to expend good money in order to protect that which he has already wasted in some bad venture. That is the question which we, as Congressmen, are now confronted with relative to the Brazos River.

A grievous error was made when any appropriation was ever passed to commence such excuse for a navigable project as this. Let us manfully acknowledge that error now, regard the money expended as lost, and cease appropriating Government money in the hope of artificially constructing a river over a hundred miles or more in length. This item should never have been in a rivers and harbors bill. I might add, it is a significant fact that the other greatly criticized item, namely, the Trinity River, where there actually is some water, was not given an appropriation in this bill, whereas the Brazos River carries an appropriation of $210,000.

Any student of waterway legislation, by turning to page 1635, will find a splendid State project analysis of the defeated $34,000,000 bill in 1915 as it passed the House, which I quote at this point because it is authoritative, coming from this able member of the committee:

Amounts appropriated.

NORTH.
California	$944,000
Connecticut	64,500
Delaware	86,000
District of Columbia	95,000

After an expenditure of $2,000,000, Army engineers report 1,080 tons in 1913 as the total traffic for the Brazos, and on the heels of that report and following a legislative condemnation of the project and a demand for a resurvey the autocrat of the pork-barrel allotment dumped $240,000 more into the lap of needy dredgers and contractors, who are digging for water in a lost river bed. Apparently a sprinkling pot is more needed than a dredge on the Brazos.

WATERWAYS AND BUILDINGS IN TEXAS—COUNTLESS PROJECTS THAT HAVE NO END OR PRACTICAL USE.

Many extravagant and practically worthless Texas waterways and buildings owe their notoriety to an opulent Government Treasury discovered by political pull. A $60,000 postoffice building in a $5,000 Texas town is no worse than Chief Kingman's official gifts to Texas favorites, described, and many others reported in his annual romances.

For illustration, Aransas Pass-Pass Cavallo section, Kingman reports a commerce in 1912 of 384 tons (p. 2265). In 1913 he reports 380 tons (p. 2314), or an average of 1 ton per day. Kingman's 1915 allotment was $30,000, or at the rate of $80 per ton, for use of a 3-foot canal started in 1875, restarted in 1907 as a 5-foot $65,850 project, and discontinued in part in 1912 (p. 822). Another Treasury tragedy follows immediately when Guadalupe River in Victoria, Tex., shows a total 1912 and 1913 commerce limited to sand and gravel, apparently from Government dredging operations, and Kingman's 1915 allotment was $15,000. This project was once started at $62,700, but, due to "underestimates" and other troubles, $247,164 has been expended to June 30, 1914. These two 5-foot useless, deserted Texas "waterways" have received over $443,000 from the Government Treasury and are a fair sample of some other Texas waterways that have absorbed millions of Federal funds.

For fear this statement may be challenged, I again quote from the great expert who has done more for actual waterway improvement than any other man in the country. Speaking of Texas waterway projects generally, he said last year:

I think they are so rank that they smell to heaven, some of them. I really think I could prove to a dispassionate audience that such is the case.

WHAT TEXAS MEMBERS ARE UP AGAINST.

In order to show that other strenuous efforts are being put forth to drain the Federal Treasury for Texas projects, I quote from the Houston Post of November 6:

TO KEEP REPRESENTATIVE IN WASHINGTON.

A fund will be used to keep a representative stationed at Washington during the session of Congress to aid in securing of necessary appropriations. * * * The committee recommended that each city and town and each parish along the line of the inland waterway be urged to send one or more delegates to attend the session of Congress in December and to bring the needs of the waterway to the attention of their Representative, that the president send a personal appeal to each one of the Representatives, and that a representative be stationed at Washington. It was estimated that this would require an expense of $2,000.

PRESENT WATERWAY PLANS WORTHLESS.

Even the waterways "president," Mr. Holland, emphasizes the uselessness of present wasteful expenditures when he said in his annual report:

It is not the appropriations that cause the rivers and harbors bill to be called "pork barrel," but the manner of making the appropriations. For instance, it is no secret that the intercoastal canal at a depth of 5 feet does not meet the demands of the lightest draft navigation for boats and barges—nothing less than 9 feet will make a waterway that will meet the demands of commerce—but we have proceeded on the theory that it is easier to secure the small appropriations and have accepted a minimum of 5 feet with the belief that it could be easily deepened to 9 feet by additional appropriations. However, when the first and second appropriations are added together it will cost the Government more than twice as much as it would have cost had the original appropriation been made on the basis of 9 feet. * * * "Penny-wise and pound-foolish" is what I call it, and until these practices cease we will never have a good Government. * * * The time for decisive action is here; the time for half-hearted pleading is passed. * * * We ask for appropriations for a real waterway of 9 feet minimum depth, not for a makeshift of 5 feet depth.

Then, as an afterthought, he has a genuine inspiration, and says:

The fact is that an inland waterway from Maine to Mexico with a minimum depth of 12 feet is an actual necessity for the protection of the country.

ENGINEERS JUSTLY CONDEMNED BY WATERWAY PRESIDENTS.

No more caustic arraignment of Army engineers has ever been presented to the public. After proving pliable for a concededly worthless 5-foot project, they are advised they have been used as puppets, and a 9-foot project is what Texas now demands and a 12-foot depth on all canals is necessary. The Delaware and Chesapeake wants 24 feet, so why not Texas? Remembering that we have 26 different canal dimensions in this country, according to Army engineers, what more can be said in exposing the incompetency of our engineers and of their plans and estimates? Poor old Mexico, giver of public concessions and political favors to highly civilized American grabbers; may she not point the finger of scorn at public building and waterway projects living in glass houses across the Rio Grande? Political perquisites in democratic forms of government on either side of the border line appear to differ only in minor details.

BIG SANDY COSTS $11 PER TON-MILE.

Actual commerce costs the Government $350 per ton.

Big Sandy "commerce" in 1913 reached 172,403 short tons, but 172,126 tons, or over 99½ per cent, consisted of logs, ties, and lumber that floats. Just 277 tons of miscellaneous commerce floated 33 miles in 1913. Counting interest on $1,717,811 now invested, with depreciation included, at 4 per cent, and a reported annual maintenance of $31,998, the cost to the Government for floating 277 tons of actual commerce 33 miles in 1913 was $100,678.

Engineers quote tables on page 2817, but the following table can be easily understood by those who pay the bills:

Total actual commerce, 1913	tons	277
Average distance floated	miles	33
Actual 1913 cost to Government on investment		$100,678
Actual cost to Government per ton		$350
Actual cost to Government per ton-mile		$11

The Big Sandy was exploited by Army engineers and local interests in order to provide transportation for coal and other "undeveloped resources." It is the same specious argument, supported by the same engineers' estimates, which to-day are given for the Muscle Shoals, the Coosa, Black Warrior, Kentucky, Cumberland, Tennessee, and scores of other worthless canalization projects. The Big Sandy was sure to float millions of tons of coal every year—that was the promise. After 35 years and $1,717,811 spent in development only 12 tons of coal were floated in 1913, and that coal was for "Government" purposes. This is a worse record than is shown by the Hennepin Canal, to which reference will be made. Have I made good the statement that the 10 condemned projects named in the 1915 bill are not the worst that Army engineers recommend?

How engineers have reveled in Treasury millions and how Congress has been duped by men who have furnished a "waterway" that is now floating commerce at a cost to the Government of $11 per ton-mile.

THE COOSA WATERWAY CARICATURE—ANOTHER COUNT IN THE INDICTMENT AGAINST ENGINEERS.

I can not do justice to the Coosa project in the limited time at my disposal. In debate and through the press Senator Burton has repeatedly called attention to this waterway joke, but with the aid of the river and harbor lobby and nursing of Army engineers the Coosa River coos for more—and gets it every year—from a war-tax ridden public.

Page 2175 of the 1914 report shows that $1,982,583 has been expended on the Coosa. In 1915 the appropriations reached $2,482,452. On a project begun in 1876, or 39 years ago, we are informed open-channel work is 27 per cent completed, or in about 100 years more open-channel work ought to be completed. The original estimate of $1,622,190 for this project has long ago gone glimmering and $10,000,000 more will be spent before completion. Even visionary engineers refuse to hazard a guess as to the limit. On pages 674 and 675 the chief says $75,000 for maintenance, $131,000 for improvement in addition to $170,000 then on hand could be spent profitably during the ensuing year. What is the Coosa work for? After deducting floatable timber and stone, sand, and gravel used in Government construction, the actual commerce is too small to measure, for duplications and quadruplications can not aid the Coosa nor the Brazos nor the Trinity "commerce." There must be some tangible traffic on which to build. These waterways do not furnish a beginning, and yet to be an accurate chronicler I must say the insignificant commerce of 1912 fell off 45 per cent, according to the engineer's report, by 1914.

Notwithstanding the Coosa had $97,019 balance on hand January 1, 1915, our generous Chief of Engineers, on April 1, 1915, gave $106,000 more to the Coosa. Remember, this is a project condemned in the last law and is on the list for a resurvey. Why is he so liberal with the people's money? Is it because the Coosa is in Alabama, where the Black Warrior and Muscle Shoals water-power projects, also being financed by the Government, will reach $30,000,000?

THE ALABAMA POWER CO. TRUST.

Before discussing a stupendous private water-power grab perpetrated on the Government under the pretense of aid to navigation, I desire to quote briefly from a gorgeously decorated pamphlet, issued by the Alabama Power Co., to show why the Government should give to the company $18,700,000 for Muscle Shoals in addition to a present expenditure of over $2,000,000 on the Coosa, with unlimited future estimates based on past engineering mistakes.

Quoting from the document, "The Alabama Traction, Light & Power Co. (Ltd.) owns extensive water powers in Alabama and operates at present public-utility properties in six cities."

The company's properties include the following power sites.

	Horsepower.
Coosa River Lock 7	45,000
Coosa River Lock 12	105,000
Coosa River Lock 14	100,000
Coosa River Lock 15	80,000
Coosa River Lock 18	100,000
Tallapoosa River	115,000
Muscle Shoals on Tennessee	400,000
Santty Creek	6,000
Town Creek	7,000
Little River	52,000
Choccolocco Creek	2,000
	1,012,000

It develops that the company also owns pretty nearly everything in Alabama, including 96 per cent of all its water powers. It is also in a fair way to own $18,700,000 of Government funds at Muscle Shoals, apart from a few minor millions of public funds now scattered on smaller projects. The Army engineers have so determined, and the lobby claims to have duped and doped a goodly portion of the Sixty-fourth Congress to consent to the astonishing gift.

Document No. 20, Sixty-third Congress, second session, is devoted to a notorious Alabama water-power project of $18,700,000 on the Tennessee River which Army engineers have approved and to which reference will be made. On pages 83 and 84 of the Chief of Engineers' report is a statement as to the Coosa which is startling in its significance, and from which I quote:

Coosa River system: While it can not be said at this time whether the operation of the proposed plants on the Coosa River will or will not increase the amount of power which can be commercially generated at Muscle Shoals, these plants will be considered here in a general way to show the ultimate relation between the Coosa system and the Muscle Shoals-Tallapoosa system. * * *

What has the Government to do with a Coosa-Muscle Shoals-Tallapoosa power system? What are our Army engineers discussing?

A 150-FOOT DAM FOR "NAVIGATION."

I have been quoting from a report of a private water-power company, set forth with the approval of the Chief of Engineers in a public document. It shows the proposed use of public funds to create water powers and aid private power companies, as will be found on page 84, wherein a private company's plans are quoted with approval in an official document, which says of our own Treasury guardians:

The Army engineers propose to build a dam and reservoir on the Etowah River at Cartersville, Ga., which will add an immense amount to the primary power of the plants on the Coosa. The project will consist of a dam 150 feet high, impounding 30,000,000,000 cubic feet of water. The object of this reservoir is primarily to increase the flow of water in Alabama River below Montgomery, for the aid of navigation, the available draft to be used to amplify the low flow being variously estimated from 4,000 to 5,000 second-feet. The dam site is 3 miles above Cartersville and the entire reservoir is in Georgia. Surveys of reservoir have been made by the Army engineers, and their findings are in a report on the Coosa River prepared by Maj. Ferguson, which has not been published. The dam site is now owned by the Georgia Railway, Light & Power Co., who own a considerable amount of land within the reservoir.

The dam proposed by these people for power purposes is lower and the amount of storage less than that proposed by Army engineers. The height of dam and amount of storage which will ultimately be obtained at this site is of vital interest to this company, and to satisfy the ultimate needs storage should be as great as possible.

It should be remembered this is another water-power company over in Georgia that our Army engineers have taken under their sheltering wings.

Think of this startling proposal found in an Army engineer's report. It quotes with approval a statement issued by a private water-power company that they, our own Army engineers, propose to finance the Georgia Light & Power Co.'s dam by increasing that company's dam to a dizzy height of 150 feet for "navigation purposes"—higher than the Goddess of Liberty statue, that considerately turns its back toward us.

A PRIVATE COMPANY "VITALLY INTERESTED."

The height of dam and amount of storage which will ultimately be obtained at this site is of vital interest to this company, and, to satisfy the ultimate needs, storage should be as great as possible.

In other words, our Army engineers propose to build a 150-foot dam for the Georgia Light & Power Co. at Government expense—not even a dollar recommended by way of contribution. Just a plain Treasury raid recommended by Treasury guardians.

After having already spent $2,000,000 on Coosa water-power projects, I quote Senator BANKHEAD'S remarks before the Fifth National Conservation Congress (p. 79) to show Government rights in money it expends. This champion of the Muscle Shoals, Tennessee River, water-power project is quoted by the official reporter of the conservation congress as follows:

The company undertaking to build the lock and dam on the Coosa River said: "We are willing to put up this construction at our own cost and give you the navigation (joke), and we will take the water power. Beyond that we are not willing to go. * * * The Government of the United States has no more interest in it (the surplus water) and no more control of it than I have. It belongs to the State of Alabama and to the riparian owners of that State, and you can not take it away from them without a big row."

Now we are invited to have another row after a half century of peace. The Georgia Power Co. and the Alabama Water Power Co., for which we are to build great dams and which are reputed to own everything not nailed down in Alabama, serve notice on the United States of their demands, including $18,700,000 for the Muscle Shoals private water-power project, to which I shall briefly refer, and ten million, more or less, for the Coosa private water-power project, for which Army engineers obligingly recommend appropriations and shell out public money.

FINANCING PRIVATE WATER-POWER PROJECTS.

In this connection it is well to inquire why the States of Georgia and Alabama are not asked to give $30,000,000 to Georgia and Alabama water-power companies for dams in aid of a mythical "navigation" hypocritically set forth in the Army engineer's report. The United States could avoid part of its war levy by turning all the navigation on the Tennessee or the Coosa over to the State or to the private water-power companies that have secured unlimited privileges from those States. When submarines or dreadnaughts go down or up that 150-foot Coosa Lock or Muscle Shoals 150-foot dam a thousand years hence, future generations may observe scores of locks and dams with which these modern engineer Pharaohs have immortalized themselves. One hundred and fifty foot dams are as valuable for "navigation" purposes as Egypts' Sphinx, and higher in altitude. The Sphinx proposed riddles to travelers and strangled those who could not solve them. The Coosa "navigation" riddle is analogous and water-power companies now seem to have a strangle hold on Uncle Sam's purse.

The Coosa River project has all the earmarks of a private water-power aid. It is indelibly stamped with the branding iron of the Alabama power company, "Private; keep off." Enough has been disclosed to call for a rigid and thorough investigation by Congress because of many other worthless and indefensible projects which have been saddled on the Federal Treasury by our engineers. A patient public will prefer to believe in their honesty of purpose, but many projects referred to and others that can not be here reviewed carry compelling evidences of private interests that are now served direct or by subterfuge from the Treasury.

WHAT POWER COMPANIES OWN IN ALABAMA.

Before leaving this illuminating project, which with the Black Warrior and Muscle Shoals aggregate some $40,000,000 of Government money for Alabama water powers, I desire to call attention to sections 3627 to 3637 of the Alabama Code, which permit private water-power companies to condemn public highways, lands of all description, from cemeteries to almshouses, and also smaller water-power companies' plants, under a right of eminent domain ordinarily reserved to the State. Sections 6148 and 6149 give power companies authority to flood the State and to condemn lands generally for flooding purposes. All land within 50 feet of the water's edge, together with the blue sky above and the earth beneath, is included. Section 2069 provides that such power plants "shall be exempt from State, county, and municipal property and privilege taxation until 10 years after beginning of construction of any plant." Exempt forever until construction begins and for 10 years thereafter. This law was passed by the Alabama Light, Power & Traction Co. through the Alabama Legislature for its own use. Official power-trust admission of the fact is on record. Apart from the fact that such sections appear to violate provisions of the State constitution and prove the unlimited power of these "power" companies, is it not infamous that we are financing such companies through the connivance of our own autocratic officials, who justify on the pretense that navigation is to be served?

GEORGIA AND ALABAMA COMPANIES.

From a table placed in the RECORD, July 23, 1914, it appears the Georgia Power Co. owns 55 per cent of all commercial power controlled in Georgia; the Alabama Light, Power & Traction Co. owns 96 per cent of all commercial power in Alabama; and the Tennessee Railway, Light & Power Co. and the Chattanooga-Tennessee Power Co. own 90 per cent of all commercial power in Tennessee.

It may be interesting further to remember that while in 1908 13 groups of interests controlled only 1,827,000 horsepower, in 1913, five years later, 10 groups controlled 6,267,000 horsepower, of which 2,711,000 was developed and 3,556,000 was undeveloped.

Will the Government be permitted to finance these companies and be a party to the unconscionable water-power grabs in Alabama and other States because such course is recommended by our Army engineers?

THE MUSCLE SHOALS WATER-POWER PROJECT—ANOTHER COUNT IN THE INDICTMENT AGAINST ARMY ENGINEERS.

I have high regard for Chairman SPARKMAN, of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, but differ radically in my estimate of many waterway ventures which he approves.

Let me again refer to his words in the Star, previously quoted:

The Muscle Shoals project, already recommended by Army engineers and urged by Senator-elect UNDERWOOD, the retiring Democratic leader of the House, and other Members of the southern delegations, contemplates a Federal appropriation of $18,000,000, reimbursable to the Government, with a view to comprehensive development of the water power.

The Muscle Shoals, Tennessee River, private water-power scandal in Alabama was exposed on the floor by several Members at the last session, and after a stubborn fight the project was squarely met and killed by the House in Committee of the Whole. It must be especially notorious, because it is the first worthless scheme ever stricken from any pork barrel in a couple of decades. What are the facts?

Originally the Government gave Alabama 400,000 acres of public land to improve Muscle Shoals and Colbert Shoals.

This Government has already spent over $3,200,000 in cash in developing a mythical commerce of about 5,800 tons annually at the Muscle Shoals on the Tennessee River in Alabama, or $4,555,000, counting maintenance, in addition to 400,000 acres of public land. A new project recommended by Army engineers in Committee Document No. 20 proposes further Government appropriations of $18,700,000 for this same Muscle Shoals, and the estimate may be increased. The engineers propose to spend $8,575,000 more for building locks and dams, ostensibly for "navigation" (less than 6,000 tons). Next, $1,750,000 more is recommended by Army engineers for "flowage easements." In other words, $10,325,000 is to be donated outright to the Alabama Light, Power & Traction Co., that owns all kinds of property, from men and money to exclusive State and Federal legislative grants, in Alabama. After we spend $10,325,000 more of Government funds for dams and easements to aid this company, a further sum of $8,375,000 is recommended by Army engineers to be loaned by the Government to this water-power trust at 3 per cent per annum, to be repaid during 100 years.

A PRESENT GOVERNMENT SUBSIDY OF $41.76 PER TON.

A few words further as to this project. Muscle Shoals are rapids along the headwaters, and about 250 miles or more distant from the mouth, of the Tennessee River, which flows through Alabama and empties into the Ohio River. Railroads appear to run in the vicinity of the river, accommodating legitimate commerce as completely as in other localities, but after an investment of over $4,555,000 of public money at this point, on the recommendation of our Army engineers, and 400,000 acres of land worth many times the money investment, we find the following insignificant "commerce" reported (p. 2587):

	Tons.
1904	10,560
1905	17,796
1906	26,878
1907	21,100
1908	12,537
1909	17,353
1910	8,782
1911	8,962
1912	5,520

About half the tonnage usually carried in a single trip by a small ocean liner is the result of 10 years' work and many million dollars in Government investment on the recommendation of our Army engineers.

Of the 5,887 tons in 1913, 2,150 tons were fertilizer, and the balance of 2,700 tons included logs, coal, and other traffic—less than 4 tons daily each way. It cost the Government for maintenance and interest charges, according to estimates of Senator Burton, last session (RECORD, p. 16988), about $41.76 per ton for all freight floated over the shoals in 1913, including fertilizer, which reached 37 per cent of the total.

What a startling chapter disclosed by past investments made for us through the Engineer Corps.

WHERE IS THE LIMIT?

Far more startling and vicious than anything heretofore put through Congress, however, is the new proposal of our waterway guardians who now ask us to put $10,325,000 more into the same locks and dams, ostensibly for "navigation," and they further recommend a Government loan of $8,375,000 additional to a power company for 100 years at 3 per cent. This would probably result in a cost to the Government for "navigation" of $150 per ton or more, to accommodate a private power company. That is the proposal of Army engineers contained in Committee Document No. 20, Sixty-third Congress, second session. Copies are scarce and every Member of the House should make application early for this remarkable document before the supply is exhausted. When our $8,375,000 loan is delivered over to this private water-power company, doubtless our Army engineers will recommend that all obligations to the Government be canceled. An equally generous Congress under the persuasive influence of the Alabama water-power lobby should then arise to the same generous level. If the Secretary of War of a Democratic administration desires to endear himself to a long-suffering people, he will cause an official investigation of the Muscle Shoals proposal, and providing the facts are as set forth in the Chief Engineer's report, he should summarily deal with those who are responsible for the Treasury raid proposed by Document No. 20.

Chairman SPARKMAN stated to the press on March 12 last that his committee would visit Muscle Shoals water-power project some time last May. It has been widely published that the Alabama water-power lobby footed bills, including all transportation charges, on that occasion. What a strange proposition that a Rivers and Harbors Committee should feel called upon to visit a private water-power project off in the sand hills of northern Alabama and also land-reclamation projects in far-away California. It has been predicted that the Government will be out $50,000,000 by the time the contract is ended, if this pernicious scheme can be put through Congress, and that the Alabama Power Co. lobby is spending a hundred thousand dollars to get their project through Congress. An independent investigation ought to be had to determine the facts.

FIFTY MILLION DOLLARS FOR MUSCLE SHOALS "NAVIGATION"—THE HIGH COST OF GIVING.

Engineering mathematics for "navigation" repayments are marvelous. The engineer's report says the Government must spend in five years $8,575,000 for navigation, $1,750,000 for flowage, and a loan of $8,325,000 for 100 years for power, to be refunded. The Government pays $10,325,000 for "navigation and flowage."

Chairman SPARKMAN says we will be "reimbursed" by a 35-cent rent per horsepower. The engineers, however, say, in substance, page 35 of Document No. 20, that, providing the Alabama Power Co. is a business success and in 20 years finds customers for 200,000 horsepower annually and then keeps doing a profitable business for 80 years more at its plant up in the wilds of Alabama, during the 80 years the company will pay the Government $73,500 annual rent toward "navigation." The engineers hope for more, but that is a promoters' "hope," because the company may never sell 200,000 horsepower annually, has no immediate demands for power, according to the hearings, and it may go bump in five years.

Accepting the engineer's contract proposition as stated, the Government first invests $10,325,000 for navigation (probably more, see p. 20). Interest, maintenance, and depreciation for 20 years at 5 per cent, without compounding, reaches just 100 per cent more, or a total of $20,650,000 for "navigation," at which time a reimbursement of $73,500 annually begins, to continue for 80 years. Instead of properly figuring 5 per cent on the new cost of $20,650,000, we continue on the old basis, with an annual outgo of only $516,000 and an income of $73,500 to meet it, or a net loss to the Government of $440,000 annually for 80 years, during which time the Government loses $35,400,000 and receives $5,880,000 rent for power, or a net deficit of about $30,000,000, which added to the $20,650,000 previous expense for navigation gives a handsome net loss on our "navigation" investment of $50,000,000—just to aid the Alabama company to secure a loan of $8,325,000 for power, not navigation. Any business man would make the loss double $50,000,000 based on a $20,650,000 investment for 80 years, but enough has been disclosed by page 35 of our "contract" to show that while it takes high mathematics to qualify cadets for the Engineering Corps, we will find no higher unbusinesslike mathematics than Chief Kingman and his aids offer on the Muscle Shoals contract.

Be it remembered that this brief analysis of Government rights in a contract made with a water-power company by our duly accredited attorneys, business counselors, Treasury guardians, and engineer managers in no way considers $4,550,000 heretofore spent at this same point on the advice of these same attorneys, counselors, guardians, and managers or of 400,000 acres of valuable public land given to Alabama for Muscle Shoals.

Appended to these remarks will be found extracts from the Huntsville (Ala.) Educator and Birmingham papers indicating the Alabama Water Power Co. has a lobby that knows what it wants and pays liberally for what it gets.

"DEMOCRATIC LEADERS" AND "SOUTHERN DELEGATIONS."

Certain Members have decried sectionalism when many wasteful southern projects were exposed. Is it sectionalism when the chairman (from Florida) of the powerful Rivers and Harbors Committee says:

> The Muscle Shoals project, already recommended by Army engineers and urged by Senator-elect UNDERWOOD, of Alabama, the retiring Democratic leader of the House, and other Members of southern delegations, contemplates a Federal appropriation of $18,000,000, reimbursable to the Government, with a view to comprehensive development of the water power.

Why did not the statement say the Board of Engineers has recommended a straight hand-out of $10,325,000 from the Federal Treasury for this water-power trust? No reimbursement, no haggling, but an outright illegal gift of public funds for rainbow-chasing private schemes. Why not place the full outrageous proposal squarely before the country? Why not have the activities of the powerful lobby, with its gaudy, expensive literature, given wide publicity?

Leader UNDERWOOD, of Alabama, "urged it." I am sorry. Southern delegations favor the gift, too. Two senatorial rivals in the House passed through the tellers last session, both voting for it. Probably $20,000,000 or more will be given to the Muscle Shoals project before it is completed, apart from over $10,000,000 already spent by the Government on the Tennessee, and for a 150-foot dam to accommodate less than 6,000 tons of annual "commerce" at Muscle Shoals. Why should not the Alabama water-power lobby round up southern delegations, including all political rivals in the State? It persuades our Army engineers. How and why? It nearly captured Congress at the last session. A bare defeat by 10 votes, with the "retiring Democratic leader" fighting for it on the floor of the House. And when squarely defeated in the House the same item again appeared in the bill which Senator Burton and his colleagues finally defeated at the other end of the Capitol.

If the committee favors the project, together with good political pull of southern delegations behind it, what is to prevent any other private water-power company from filching $10,325,000, or 10 times the amount, out of the Federal Treasury? Will northern and eastern and western delegations be alarmed over threats to turn down legitimate waterway projects if the Muscle Shoals navigation fraud is again defeated? Why should Congress figuratively crawl on its belly before the Alabama Water Power Co.? Why rob the Treasury of nearly $20,000,000 at the behest of a water-power lobby, even though indorsed by Army engineers? Is that what Northern States are contributing war taxes to finance?

SOUTHERN DELEGATION WITH 27 CHAIRMEN.

The country is confronted with a remarkable spectacle when chairmen from Southern States sit in judgment over the deliberations of 27 of the most important committees of the House, and when a large majority of the Democratic majority controlling national legislation hail from these same Southern States; but when to this astonishing situation the country is further informed by the committee chairman that southern leaders and southern delegations will be lined up behind such scandalous raids on the Treasury, it is a call for sectionalism that will bear fruit in no uncertain manner.

I have been advised that my course in opposing scandals like the $18,700,000 Muscle Shoals, which we defeated in Committee of the Whole last session, is shortsighted; that I am making a grave mistake in opposing influential political powers; that Congress winks at "humbugs and steals," providing they are vouched for by high authority. If it be a mistake to call a spade a spade, then I have no business here. If I am expected to remain mute because political power, however high, demands money from the Federal Government for a private water-power company, then I have not read aright my oath of office as a legislator. The Alabama Water Power Trust, however powerful, is no more sacred than any other private interest that seeks to raid the Treasury.

Congress should not permit this impudent recommendation of Army engineers to become a law without knowledge that the proposed raid is the forerunner of countless similar political grabs, among which Idaho and Montana, or even Wisconsin's 10,000,000 horsepower water powers, may years hence be fighting for a proportionate share of Government swag if this policy is adopted.

With all chairmen of committees located in the southern section of the country, that section is temporarily in control; but Congress can not blindly squander public money on private projects without a day of reckoning; and one of the most scandalous schemes that will arise to haunt the party in power will be a donation of $18,700,000 to the Alabama Water Power Co. Who are the officers and stockholders of the Alabama company? What influences are behind a company that brazenly reaches down onto the floors of Congress to overturn the precept of "special privileges for none," once written into the platforms of a mighty political party now in control of legislation? Why is a $100,000 water-power lobby on the ground trying to put through this conscienceless grab?

Why have Army engineers recommended giving over to the Alabama Water Power Co. $18,700,000 in Government funds? Your Uncle Samuel has been blindfolded and doped by discredited doctors whom he has educated and supported since they first grew long pants. Every disinterested investigating Member will become further convinced of the seriousness of the present conservation situation upon reading House bill 16053, of the Sixty-third session, a general water-power measure, which was reported favorably from the Senate committee.

ANOTHER ETHIOPIAN FROM THE WOODPILE.

The Muscle Shoals project is bad; but what shall be said of that part of section 2 of a general water-power bill which provides that, as between contesting applicants for a water-power permit, preference shall be given by the Secretary of War to that applicant who is "best qualified to expedite and realize the maximum useful development of all the water resources of the region?" The Secretary of War is directed to base his finding on "the report and advice of the Chief of Engineers." Navigation, water powers, coast defenses, Secretaries of War and Navy, Senators, and Representatives, together with all other projects and officials, must circle around the autocratic Chief of Engineers, who gives a soothing lotion here and a hypodermic there while he provides for the Alabama Water Power Co. and other favorites. Apportioning $50,000,000 through mysterious influence, granting astonishing allotments to worthless waterways, handing out invaluable water-power privileges at his own sweet will, is it not high time that a hypnotized public and chloroformed Congress waked to the gross abuse of power assumed by the Chief of Engineers?

I introduced resolutions in the Sixty-third Congress urging an investigation of such infamous schemes as the Alabama Water Power Trust is trying to ram through Congress. Investigations of the influences behind Army engineer recommendations were also urged by resolution. Publicity alone will defeat the Muscle Shoals lobby; publicity alone will halt the rolling pork barrel that moves through the Public Treasury like a car of Juggernaut.

MOTIVES FOR GENEROUS GIVING BY ENGINEERS.

Able statesmen at both ends of the Capitol repeatedly ask for motives for generous giving by Army engineers. With the facts before us each must answer the question to his own satisfaction, and it may be useless to suggest what such statesmen already know, that after scattering $50,000,000 with lavish hand, in addition to approving $250,000,000 in new projects and granting 250 new surveys in 1915, Chief Kingman will easily locate a crowd of pikers if he fails to get all that he asks from Congress.

Top-column publicity notices in a local paper constantly give us first aid to Gen. Kingman's wants which otherwise might remain buried in voluminous reports. In an effort to promote that publicity campaign I quote from a recent issue (Dec. 21):

Gen. Kingman, Chief of Engineers, has submitted to Congress an estimate of construction of stables, a trade-school building, and a fuel shed at the engineer post at Washington Barracks.

For suitable accommodations the article concludes:

It is estimated that it will cost about $337,000 to provide for new buildings called for in the approved plans.

On page 27 of the 1914 report it appears Congress has not entirely overlooked such recommendations, judging from past expenditures of $1,138,409 for an engineering school, and we are further advised there is urgent need of additional funds.

"LIMITED RESTRICTIONS AS TO EXPENDITURES."

On page 25 Chief Kingman says the Philippine engineering department "requires funds of wide applicability and limited restrictions as to expenditure." In other words, Congress is invited to pursue the free-arm movement that characterized a scattering of $50,000,000 nearer home, with "limited restrictions." He also desires mounted battalions of engineers, additional companies to give more graceful proportions to the corps; $600,000 is urgently needed for an adequate reserve supply of engineering equipment, and other modest requests he makes on Congress. We are further asked to give $75,000, or an increase of 90 per cent in one year, for civilian "assistants," "photographers," and so forth. By such means possibly do we secure our highly calendared works of art which are found scattered throughout thousands of musty pages in annual reports.

Other branches of the service may have need of a friend at court, and I am not opposing recommendations, but mentioning them. The official with the largest credit account to present against Congress to-day is the man representing a department which has expended over $850,000,000 of public funds during recent history, two-thirds of which was wasted, unless there is no waste in fastening down personal obligations for local expenditures. Possibly he is not affected by influences which govern ordinary people here below, and in any event, if the system is wrong, we must accept full responsibility for its existence.

MEN WITHOUT KNOWLEDGE OR EXPERIENCE.

Members may not agree with me in all things, but no wise man would trust the management of any small business enterprise to the hands of Army engineers who arbitrarily handle $50,000,000 of public moneys, on the average, annually.

What can more fitly express the growing sentiment against bureaucratic utterances, activities, and powers than the well-chosen words of the ablest Member on this floor, the minority leader, who said last Wednesday on the Ferris water-power bill:

The trouble with an administrative officer here in one of the departments, who never before he came here had any knowledge whatever of general procedure or the precedents in Congress, is that he frequently makes a mistake and slops over. * * * Congress will never be willing to let Mr. Garrison as an administrative officer—which means some engineer which no one could locate perhaps—to determine whether a bridge or a dam shall be constructed across the Mississippi River, or many or most of the other navigable streams of the United States.

And yet the Secretary of War, under the advice of the Chief of Engineers, is given sole power to issue water-power permits on all navigable streams wholly within one State, and Army engineers, without any adequate knowledge of commercial or business conditions, recommend projects on which may hinge a score of millions of public money in an individual case.

What special training, commercial or otherwise, fits an Army engineer or the Secretary of War for such tremendous responsibilities or such important decisions as Congress thrusts upon them? We do not choose a lieutenant colonel of six years ago or a brigadier general of to-day to run a railway or relieve the Interstate Commerce Commission of its responsibilities. And yet we take to our hearts and place a business qualification halo over the heads of our Army engineers in order to show the sublime confidence possessed by Congress—which of course expects them to do the right thing when told to do so by the proper authority, or otherwise.

POWERS AND WATER POWERS.

Under our present unsystematic system of water-power control we retain in Congress the authority to act on interstate navigable rivers; we give the Secretary of the Interior authority to act on unnavigable rivers; we give to the Secretary of Agriculture powers as to rivers on forest reserves; we give the Secretary of War and his Chief of Engineers enormous power to distribute favors on navigable rivers wholly within one State; and then when a suspicious ill-smelling project is to be put over an unsuspecting public, the River and Harbor Committee is asked to do it. As an humble member of that committee I resent the imputation that its members, individually or collectively, do not aspire to the same high standards possessed by any other House committee, but no one can escape the suspicion that in the case of the Muscle Shoals $18,700,000 grab the River and Harbor Committee looked more easy to the Alabama power company lobby than the Committee on Interstate or Foreign Relations, which properly had jurisdiction of the same matter.

Will some vigorous organizing member with little reverence for superannuated customs propose a method that will definitely fix water-power responsibility in Congress where it belongs, and remove from bureaucratic jealousies and astounding powers the present multiplied agencies over invaluable public properties—agencies that are to-day largely subject to the whim, caprice, and judgment of irresponsible subordinate department officials?

CONGRESS DODGES WOLVES TO SHOOT CHIPMUNKS—WASHINGTON'S WATER SUPPLY SIDETRACKED BY THE PORK BARREL.

One of the most interesting spectacles to the average congressional neophyte at each session is the tremendous struggle waged by antihalf-and-half champions in their efforts to protect their home constituents from designing Washingtonians. Days given over to speeches, hundreds of pages in the RECORD, and weeks and weeks of investigating committees are regularly staged by the chief actors every session. Whatever may be the merits of the controversy—and it is possible that a more equitable adjustment of the tax burdens will some day be presented for the Capital City—unprejudiced, dispassionate judgment of the hare-and-hounds spectacle must be that Congress is constantly straining at gnats and swallowing camels. With $20,000,000 for Brazos contractors and $10,000,000 for Trinity dredgers, $12,000,000 for Black Warrior water powers, $64,000,000 for visionary Ohio canalization contractors, $18,700,000 for a private water-power company at Muscle Shoals, $27,000,000 for a Missouri land reclamation, and $275,000,000 to $500,000,000 for another Mississippi land-reclamation scheme, all recommended by Army engineers and all financed by the Government, does it not seem somewhat strained for Congress to indulge in annual half-and-half tax hunts?

The people of Washington, whatever sins of omission or commission may exist, have not received pennies from the Government where Mississippi levee landowners expect to collect dollars. Countless other wasteful projects, a few of which have been briefly mentioned, make the local issue insignificant by comparison. I do not intend to further discuss the half-and-half controversy, excepting to ask why we constantly chase rabbits that have no legal protectors while we dodge gray wolves which openly infest waterway, public-building, Navy, and Army bills. This thought is emphasized by the attitude of Chief Kingman in reference to an important local project.

NO TRIBUTE FOR AIR AND WATER—THE GREAT FALLS OF THE POTOMAC PROJECT WAITS; WHY?

One of the privileges accorded man is the right to breathe without paying tribute to some monopoly. Another is the right to free water to drink, and still another is a right to have municipal control of public utilities for public use. That privilege is sought by wicked half-and-half Washingtonians, yet we have them in chancery so that relief must come through Congress and, strange to relate, on the advice of the ubiquitous Chief Engineer Kingman.

No intelligent man questions the early need of an additional water supply for the city of Washington, of which Congress is the board of aldermen, and all experts agree that this water supply should come from the Potomac River. It is proposed to condemn the Great Falls of the Potomac, owned since 1839 by private corporations, its present owner being the Great Falls Power Co., which is an inactive corporation of Virginia, a majority of whose stock is held by the Washington Railway & Electric Co. This company also controls the Potomac Electric Power Co., which in turn does the public lighting of Washington. These corporations are supposed to be affiliated with the General Electric Co., known in turn as the Electric and Water Power Trust, which in turn is understood to own the Alabama Water Power Co., which wants immediately $18,700,000, recommended in 1914 by Chief Kingman, for Muscle Shoals, down in Alabama.

It has been proposed that Congress take over the Great Falls, real estate, water, water rights, and the falls by an act of Congress containing a provision that the Great Falls Power Co. may sue in the Court of Claims for damages. While this course would be opposed by those who have sat on their rights for three-quarters of a century, including the General Electric, it would result in preventing extravagant damages, estimated by Chief Kingman at double or triple actual values at Muscle Shoals, for which, however, he recommends the Government should pay $1,750,000. The Great Falls rights ought to be secured for less than $100,000, according to Senate Document No. 790, Sixty-first Congress, third session.

I will not discuss the economic side of the proposal or present arguments to show why our Government should own and directly, or through the city, operate a municipal plant that will provide water and power for the Capital City for a century to come. Neither will I offer reasons why this proposal would soon pay for itself and should be acted upon at an early date. These reasons are apparent to every believer in municipal ownership of public utilities.

MUSCLE SHOALS VERSUS GREAT FALLS—WHY THE GREAT FALLS PROJECT IS SIDETRACKED.

Bearing in mind that Great Falls is needed primarily for drinking water for a great municipality, while Muscle Shoals demands an $18,700,000 Government gift for water power for the Alabama Power Co., I desire briefly to present some engineering facts that are significant—first in relation to Muscle Shoals and next the Great Falls project.

Let me quote briefly from Chief Kingman's report on Muscle Shoals, contained in House Committee Document No. 20, Sixty-third Congress. Notwithstanding Col. Riché, on page 57, protests vigorously against the United States paying $1,750,000 for flowage easements for a private water-power company's brazen raid on the Federal Treasury, the Board of Engineers, page 6, overrules Riché because our brass-buttoned autocrats profess to believe—

> It would doubtless lead to considerable delay and would be apt to defeat the present opportunity to make this improvement on favorable terms.

Yet Riché says pointedly:

> I recommend all lands and casements be donated to the United States, and do not fear delay will result in loss to the United States or prevent the improvement of Muscle Shoals.

Chief Kingman approves the gift to a private water-power company of $1,750,000 for flowage and $8,575,000 for "navigation," and a loan to the power company of $8,325,000, or a total of $18,700,000 given to the Alabama Power Co. for work to be completed "in five years." Overruling Riché's courageous protest, Kingman finds imperative haste is demanded as a reason for giving away $1,750,000 for flowage rights, as shown by the report, and he asks that the whole $18,700,000 be paid within five years to furnish an "immediate slack-water navigation." (Pp. 1 and 2, Doc. 20.)

Remembering the Government has spent at this same point $4,555,000 for "navigation," in order to develop 5,800 tons of "commerce" annually, I quote from page 6 the reason given by Chief Kingman for advancing $10,325,000 more for "navigation" and flowage.

> 19. The existing 1913 commerce of the section (5,800 tons annually), as well as the increase which might reasonably be expected, apart from what may be created as a result of the power development, is insufficient to justify so great an expenditure for improvements for navigation alone.

That is to say, Chief Kingman frankly admits 5,800 tons of annual commerce does not justify an expenditure by the Government of $10,325,000 more for navigation in addition to $4,550,000 already spent among the sand hills and 400,000 acres given to Alabama, but he recommends it immediately, because there are forests and agricultural resources that when "fully exploited will add greatly to the general prosperity." More significant, the committee hearings showed that no present demand for power exists at Muscle Shoals—it is prospective.

I wish to make this point clear before commenting on the Great Falls Potomac River project:

First. The Government has spent $3,200,000 at Muscle Shoals, Ala., or $4,555,655, including annual maintenance charges, and has developed a commerce of 5,800 tons annually, nearly one-half of which is fertilizer.

Second. Against the protest of Col. Riché, Mr. Kingman further recommends that the Government give a private power company $1,750,000 at Muscle Shoals for flowage rights immediately.

Third. He further recommends giving $8,575,000 more for 5,800 tons of commerce in aid of "navigation" for the use of the same company, to be paid by the Government within five years. This is in addition to $8,325,000 more to be loaned for power purposes, or $18,700,000 in addition to $3,200,000 already expended.

Fourth. He states specifically no commerce justifies this expenditure until the forests and agricultural resources have been fully "exploited," and the hearing further shows no present demand exists for Muscle Shoals power.

THEN LOOK ON THIS PICTURE.

If the remarkable Muscle Shoals report is clearly understood, attention is invited to a letter written by Chief Kingman to the Secretary of War, about September 19, 1915, in relation to the Potomac Great Falls water supply for the city of Washington and municipal-ownership project. Therein he says:

This project proposes the combination of a power development and an increase of the water supply of the city of Washington at an estimated cost of $15,021,500. It was the view at the time and until recently that work for increasing the water supply should be commenced in the near future. However, in his annual report this year the then District engineer officer reported that on account of the installation of meters and other measures taken to reduce consumption per capita it would appear that the work, so far as the increase of the water supply was concerned, need not commence before 1920, and that experience may then show it safe to postpone commencement for several years more.

WATER-POWER ECONOMIES QUESTIONED.

The economies of the development have been questioned in some quarters, the estimate cited above contemplated the generation of only power to meet the needs of the Federal and District Governments. A later study made in the District office indicates that this partial development of power will not be economical, and that if work is undertaken it should be on the basis of developing the full power. The cost of such development is placed at $12,799,000, independent of any features for increasing the water supply, estimated to cost about $4,472,600 additional, making the total cost of the power plant and increase of water supply $17,271,600. In addition a steam reserve must be maintained, as the flow of the river is occasionally insufficient to generate the average load which the plant should carry.

From the information at hand I am, nevertheless, of the opinion that the undertaking will certainly eventually be wise public policy, and that the power proposition will become more attractive as coal increases in price.

In view, however, of the circumstances recited of the many urgent matters to be financed by the Government in the near future, and of the additional time rendered available for increasing the water supply, I am not yet prepared to recommend the submission of an estimate.

TWO PICTURES OF AN AUTOCRAT.

Chief Kingman, the autocrat of all waterway propositions, determines that although this great city and the District and Federal Government headquarters depend upon Great Falls, the "economies" of the municipal undertaking are doubtful, but in the far-off backwoods of northern Alabama he urges Congress to give $18,700,000 at once to a private water-power project. This is in addition to $3,200,000, or $4,555,655, including maintenance, already wasted to secure 5,800 tons of commerce annually according to his own official report, page 2587.

Although Washington's water supply is an imperative question, Chief Kingman refuses "to recommend the submission of an estimate," because of "many urgent matters to be financed by the Government in the near future."

Have I made the point clear that Mr. Kingman recommends immediate advancement of $18,700,000 for the Alabama Power Co., or General Electric Trust, although the hearings show no present demand exists for power, and he has officially stated no commerce justifies this great expense? Heretofore it has been demonstrated the improvement may cause an eventual loss to the Government of $50,000,000 in order to aid a private water-power company. Yet Kingman recommends delay of the Great Falls municipal project because "economies" are questioned.

NO MILL BY THE DAM SITE—NOT YET.

The Muscle Shoals item was smuggled into the last bill, although a new project. Few Members knew of its existence, but some way it was slipped in. Then it got out—hurriedly, ingloriously. Let me say here that it was defeated by splendid work on the floor of the House by my distinguished friend and colleague [Mr. LENROOT], with the aid of my able colleague Judge STAFFORD, and also the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], and last, but not least, my friend over here on the right, who deserves more credit possibly than anyone else for this fight against waterway waste, my friend from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY]. The Muscle Shoals project was the first item stricken from a bill in many years. We had a roll call on the bill, but it finally was passed and went over to the Senate. Again the Muscle Shoals item mysteriously got back into the bill, but after proper attention from Senators Burton, KENYON, NORRIS, and others it went out again, with every other item—all lost. But it must go back according, to the Board of Army Engineers, immediately, together with reclamation projects, water-power projects, and real-estate projects, and various other projects that to-day masquerade under the head of "waterways."

I do not speak for the Potomac power proposal; it stands on its own merits; but Congress should have and must have proper estimates. Let me again repeat Gen. Kingman's refusal to submit an estimate for the Potomac Falls proposition, intended for Washington and for the Government:

In view, however, of the circumstances recited and the many urgent matters to be financed by the Government in the near future, and of the additional time rendered available for increasing the water supply, I am not yet prepared to recommend the submission of an estimate.

GEN. KINGMAN'S DEFECT IN HEARING.

He refuses to make an estimate because of many urgent demands made by the $18,700,000 Muscle Shoals project, and by the $20,000,000 Missouri River project, and by the $275,000,000 Mississippi River project, and by the Ouichita River, the Red River, and scores of other questionable projects that are shouting for public funds. Yet all of the traffic on the Red River is 240,000 tons, mostly of deadhead and other obstructions removed in 1912 and 1913. That is the commerce on the Red River, and it cost the Government $100 per ton, outside of the driftwood; but that commerce needs be cared for, with the pressing demands of the Ouachita, the Trinity, the Brazos, and other worthless propositions. We have a peculiar situation here. The Chief of Engineers can hear over the telephone all the way from the Missouri River, or from the Muscle Shoals in Alabama; aye, clear down to the Trinity or the Brazos in Texas or to the lower Mississippi. He can hear of necessary appropriations asked for down there, but he can not hear from the city of Washington. The wires are crossed, possibly grounded; and then, too, they do not vote in Washington. Its inhabitants are classed with the criminals and incompetents, and with Jane Addams and several hundred thousand people of like privileges. They are suffrageless here. Poor Washingtonians have no delegate on this floor and the commissioners have no telephone calls that can be reached as easily as calls from the wild—from the South and West. That explains the whole theory of these appropriations. The man with the pull has the inside; strong political power has the advantage, and we all know it. What do you think of that power? If we could utilize it there would be no need of using the Potomac Falls.

WITCHCRAFT IN ARKANSAS—HUNDREDS OF JOBS CONTINUED, NONE EVER FINISHED.

All bills for revenue originate in the House pursuant to the Constitution. Appropriation bills follow the same general practice, but both House and Senate have now been superseded by Chief Kingman. House bill 20189, finally defeated, appropriated $34,000,000 for rivers and harbors last session, of which $43,000 was set apart for Arkansas streams under an economy policy finally reached by Congress.

When Chief Kingman's $30,000,000 horn-of-plenty allotment was tapped some influence caused him to raise the House item of $43,000 and give $320,000 to two rivers alone in Arkansas. He also gave Arkansas about 800 per cent increase over the House bill, although the total bill proposed by the House had been materially reduced before Chief Kingman became congressional umpire. Let us discover from his reports what caused him to be so generous.

THE OUACHITA RAISE—HARBORS OF REFUGE FOR OUR DEADHEAD FLEETS.

According to the 1914 report, page 870, the Government has expended $3,145,385 on the Ouachita or Black River as it is called in places. An estimated expenditure of $4,876,654 is now progressing. Chief Kingman reports that the average tonnage on the river during the past 24 years, including duplications and quadruplications mentioned by Chairman SPARKMAN, was 156,319 tons. Curiously no mention is made of present commerce in volume 1 of his reports, so volume 2, page 2362, was examined to ascertain present conditions. There it is learned that the industrious snag boat Jos. E. Ransdell, flagship of the fleet, hauled 6,436 different pieces of commerce during the year, in the shape of snags, stumps, and leaning trees taken from the river.

U. S. derrick boat No. 2 was a close second, with 5,071 more snags, stumps, deadheads, and leaning trees, while over on page 2372 we learn that a "party of laborers," in circus tents, collected in 3,333 more snags, stumps, deadheads, and so forth, from the river. To be exact, 14,840 snags, deadheads, leaning trees, and so forth, were rescued from the Ouachita in 1913, and of these, Chief Kingman's deforesting of Arkansas reached 6,948 trees. The tale of the lonesome pine will soon reach Arkansas, although its once popular Arkansas traveler has nothing on the flagship Jos. E. Ransdell or other members of the perambulating Ouachita snag fleet, including the circus tent laborers.

AN ENGINEER'S BOOST OF 500 PER CENT.

House bill 20189 gave the Ouichita $25,000, but Chief Kingman generously raised it to $136,000, or over 500 per cent increase, to cover many deadheads of the vegetable and political kingdom. But the tale of waste and fraud is only half told, for the 156,319 mythical ton average, including duplications and quadruplications, had decreased to 64,874 tons when reported in 1913. We also discover that several items of "commerce" are for floatable logs and timber, reaching over 44,000 tons, while a goodly portion of the duplicated balance was of stone, cement, and soft coal. In other words, counting interest on the investment, maintenance charges, and over $20,000 for soft jobs on idle canal locks (p. 2371) the actual commerce, including duplications, costs the Government annually $8 subsidy per ton on the Ouichita River. After giving the startling facts to Congress in his 1914 report, Chief Kingman raised the House bill Ouichita grab from $25,000 to $116,000. Congressional lawmaking, bad as it is, never compared with Kingman legislation. Political pressure may be responsible in part for this distressing waste and fraud upon the Government, but what can be offered in explanation of the Upper Ouichita, which has been under improvement since 1871, on which Kingman's army and navy removed 3,333 deadheads and other obstructions in 1913, and of which he pathetically says in 1914:

There is no commerce reported on this portion of Ouichita River during the fiscal year.

What a travesty on waterway improvement is the history of the Ouichita, and yet the Ouichita River is no exception to the rule. Let me make a stronger statement: Chief Kingman's gift to Ouichita contractors appears to be economy itself, compared to his allotment to some other streams in the good old State of Arkansas and in other States.

A RICH GIFT FOR THE TRAFFICKLESS ARKANSAS RIVER.

The tale of the Red, Arkansas, White, and other streams that flow through Arkansas is a tale of waste and extravagant gifts from engineers who have mulcted the Treasury out of nearly a score of millions for that State with practically nothing to show for the money. Forty-four thousand one hundred and twenty-seven snags and other obstructions were removed in 1913 and 1914, principally around "Poverty Point" (p. 2386). Uncle Sam is a godsend for Poverty Point in Arkansas and other States as well.

The Arkansas River (p. 2390) shows that after expending considerably over $3,000,000 (p. 899), a total commerce, including quadruplicating, but excluding floatable timber, reached less than 10,000 tons annually. Counting interest on past appropriations, the Government is paying all the way from $12 to $20 per ton annual subsidy to float this insignificant commerce, but again Chief Kingman rushes to the rescue with $193,350 taken from the economy 1915 allotment given by Congress. More than four times the entire appropriation provided for all Arkansas rivers by the House bill was given by Chief Kingman in 1915 to a stream that after nearly 50 years' improvement is sans boats, sans commerce, and sans water. Where can you beat it in all the record of waste in Government affairs?

RED RIVER WARNING SIGNALS—A VERITABLE WOOD YARD AFLOAT.

Nobody knows just what Mr. Kingman threw into the raging Red River, but one or two sidelights are offered in the 1914 report on the commercial tragedy of the Red. These should make even the most confirmed political pork-barrel paralytic sit up and take notice. Page 2361 shows $2,805,398 has been appropriated by happy-go-lucky Uncle Samuel on this "project." Chief Kingman says (pp. 2359 and 2360) exactly 79,083 obstructions, including snags, deadheads, snags, and more deadheads, were taken from the Red River last year, which goes to prove that even the speedy Jos. E. Ransdell fleet over on the Ouachita is snail-like by comparison. Deducting floatable logs, timber, and construction material, we learn on page 2362 the total actual lower-river commerce, excluding logs and sand, was 1,442 tons in 1913. That is the return reported for nearly $3,000,000 appropriated during the past quarter of a century. One hundred dollars a ton and over, counting interest, is a fair estimate of the cost to the Government for every ton of actual commerce floated on the Red River. Read the pitiful tale of this river told on page 868 of Kingman's serial publication and it may explain why good men who pay war taxes are driven to drink. Then read the opposite page wherein with $68,603.48 on hand he asks for $100,000 more.

Do not take my word. Read Mr. Kingman's own reports of recommended waste.

SOME WONDERFUL RED RIVER STATISTICS—LITERALLY A MIGHTY LOG-ROLLING PROPOSITION.

In justice to Chief Kingman, we must admit his official reports on the Red River for 1913 show slight improvement over 1912. For instance, the total commerce of 1912 on the Red, above Fulton, exclusive of logs and floatable timber, only reached 236 tons (p. 2308), whereas the same commerce in 1913 (p. 2356) reached 252 tons, or an increase of 16 tons during the year, on part of this $3,000,000 project, for which $100,000 is annually asked by Chief Kingman.

A grateful public will thank our Board of Engineers for discovering 252 tons of real traffic and also to learn that while they removed only 51,492 snags, deadheads, and other obstructions from the upper river in 1912 (p. 2307), the force of men and fleet of boats rivaling the Jos. E. Ransdell fleet's great work removed 51,529 deadheads, snags, and other obstructions the following year, or a net gain of 37 snags, deadheads, and so forth, removed in 1913 over 1912. This substantial increase in deadheads in 1913 over 1912 is also reflected on the lower Red River commerce, where we learn (p. 2362) that although the commerce, excluding floatable timber, only reached 1,227 tons in 1912, a vigorous injection of $100,000 annual Government serum raised the commerce in 1913 to 1,442 tons, as before stated, or a net gain on the lower river of 215 tons during the year, which, added to 37 tons gain on the upper river, makes a grand total gain in tonnage of 252 tons for 1913 commerce on upper and lower Red River, in all reaching 1,694 tons floated, exclusive of floatable timber. After an expenditure of $3,000,000, this remarkable showing of Chief Kingman, who demands $100,000 annually for the Red River, is noteworthy. It should be remembered that the 1,694 tons reported includes duplications and quadruplications in commerce mentioned by Chairman SPARKMAN, but, subject to that qualification, the report may be accepted as correct.

Again Chief Kingman's statistics revel among official and navigation deadheads when he states (pp. 2311, 2312) that in 1912 his fleet and army on the lower Red River removed 58,039 snags, deadheads, and other obstructions, whereas the growing Red River army and Red River navy under his orders removed 78,982 snags, deadheads, and other obstructions in 1913. Adding the snags, deadheads, and other obstructions removed on the Red River in 1912 and 1913 we discover from Chief Kingman's official report that after spending $3,000,000 on this ravenous river our engineering fleet and army removed a grand total of 240,042 obstructions, big and little, within the last two years.

We have paid $3,000,000 for this.

	Obstructions removed.	Commerce.

EUROPEAN WAR-TRENCH ENTANGLEMENT.

Before commenting on this European war-trench entanglement, that interfered with a commerce of 1,694 tons before its removal, a phenomenal increase in passenger business should be mentioned, reaching exactly 400 per cent; no more, no less. More specifically speaking, the 1913 report chronicles 2 lonesome passengers during the year 1912, and their courage in facing the 240,042 marine and submarine obstructions was emulated by a total of 10 passengers in 1913. (See p. 2314 of report of 1913 and p. 2361 of the 1914 report.) All this valuable data relating to deadheads on the Red River has been collected by his official army of the Potomac at Washington and given to Congress in support of Chief Kingman's annual appeals for more office help and $100,000 on a $3,000,000 Red River project that reeks with waste and extravagance. Many other waterway armies besides those on the Potomac and Red Rivers are financed by Congress under the direction of Chief Kingman during these exciting days of "preparedness," and many other rivers like the Red throw out Treasury danger signals.

A STUDY OF DEADHEADS.

What caused Kingman to give $320,000 to the Wichita and Arkansas Rivers? He raised the appropriation 1,000 per cent over the House bill's allowance. What power caused Chief Kingman to urge $100,000 for the Red River when the only tangible commerce consisted in 240,000 deadheads and other obstructions?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FREAR. Yes. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. What does that mean—"deadheads and other obstructions"?

Mr. FREAR. It means deadheads taken out of the river. Of course, political deadheads may also be referred to. I do not know about that. [Laughter.] What influence caused Kingman to recommend $18,700,000 for the Alabama Power Co. to build a 150-foot dam for that power company? And what influenced Army engineers to recommend a 150-foot dam on the Etowah River for the benefit of the Georgia Power Co.?

While the work of exposing the stupidity and waste on this and other rivers has been somewhat laborious and the task of making these miserable disclosures from official records exceedingly distasteful, I feel the country is entitled to know what trashy statistics and wasteful projects are being financed in this enlightened age by a war-taxed, patient public.

ARMY AND NAVY STANDARDS COMPARED.

Personally, I do not know either Chief Kingman or his predecessor, and needless to say have no private grievance against them or the bureau they represent. Presumably they have followed in the footsteps of others, gradually usurping power after the manner of Washington bureaucracy. My purpose in performing what I conceive to be a public duty is to acquaint this body with official documentary admissions of deplorable waste and incompetency, abundantly confirmed by other testimony. If it be improper for a citizen to call attention to diseased conditions which menace public health, then I am at fault in this humble effort to awaken public knowledge as to legislative waterway waste and the instrumentalities behind it.

No unprejudiced man can carefully read the engineer's official reports without realizing that Congress and the country have moved along in an aimless, haphazard, extravagant course with no more definite objective than is possessed by a befuddled drunken man. While in this helpless condition we have been annually plunged deeper in the muck by Government officials on whom we felt compelled to lean.

Secretary Daniels recently called a court-martial to try a rear admiral for improperly inspecting Government vessels. Notwithstanding a jury of his peers found their colleague not guilty, the Secretary publicly condemned the trial and disagreed with the findings.

NAVY AND ARMY INSPECTION METHODS.

What was imperfectly inspected? Did the naval officer give a million dollars of Government funds in 1915, following ten millions previously wasted, to private interests that owned the old, deserted hulk Revetment, of Missouri? Did the rear admiral give $470,000, in 1914 and 1915, to a rotting schooner, called the Brazos, of Texas, which at the present rate of repairs will not be patched up for over a hundred years? During recent years has our indicted seamen generously donated a couple of millions to the Trinity, a consort of the Brazos and equally worthless? Has he been guilty of handing out to an ancient line of Mississippi reclamation barges countless millions of Government funds, given by virtue of his official recommendations? Did this rear admiral inspect the old leaky Muscle Shoals craft, on which he had previously wasted $3,200,000 or $4,500,000 continuing maintenance, for calking never-ending holes; and did he recommend, in 1915, that we put enough more money into these same leaky holes to build a great battleship? If so, did he follow the earnest appeal of a "retiring Democratic leader" and advice of "southern delegations"?

Court-martials are not very serious affairs, according to Secretary Daniels, just a scrap of paper between friends; but even so, is there a different code of official responsibility pervading the War Department than is exercised by the naval branch of our preparedness advisors?

ONLY $26,258,472 ACCOUNTED FOR—WHERE IS $3,241,528 OF RESERVE FUNDS?

In view of the gigantic waste officially confessed by these reports, Congress should now be fully advised of the disposition made by Chief Kingman of $3,241,528 airily reported in April, 1915, as reserved for contingencies. What contingencies were taken care of by this dark-lanterned method? After spending $500,000 on more muddy-creek surveys and millions of dollars on scores of scandalous "projects," what became of the rest of the allotment? Congress ought to know the worst—the limit of extravagance.

THE FEATHER RIVER RECLAMATION—ANOTHER COUNT IN THAT SAME INDICTMENT.

After the congressional committee was entertained, wined, and dined, as indicated at the outset of these remarks, it may have been in a proper frame of mind to pass judicially upon the Muscle Shoals water power and also the Feather River reclamation projects, which latter project is under the shadow of the Panama-Pacific Exposition. Started at $33,000,000, the California project has been reduced materially, according to the engineer's report. The Government was to pay all of the new project—then one-third and now one-half—but before completion the Government will be expected to contribute anywhere from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000 or more, depending upon the unreliability of engineers' usually inaccurate estimates. And our Army engineers who recommended a gift of over $10,000,000 on the Muscle Shoals water-power project for "navigation" are equally certain the Government should give liberally from its public funds to help this land-reclamation project, which is unrelated to navigation. House Document No. 81, Sixty-second Congress, page 3, says:

> The board reports that the execution of this project is not necessary in the interests of navigation.

Senator Burton repeatedly condemned the Feather River project and stood guard at the last session against the Muscle Shoals water-power project, inserted in the Senate after its defeat in the House. Mr. Burton is now gone, and possibly the present opponents of the Feather River and Upper Sacramento reclamation project will only be able to protest, while the twin projects, one for water power, the other for 1,000,000 acres of land reclamation, valued at $200,000,000, will make off with $25,000,000 or more from the public crib. These are projects that Chairman SPARKMAN says may get into the next river and harbor bill. If so, we may be sure the Richmond (Cal.) inner-harbor real-estate project, also approved by Army engineers for many wasted millions yet to come, will get into the Treasury trough with both feet. A distinguished Senator said on July 1 last (RECORD, p. 1246) regarding the Feather River project:

> I challenge any Member of the Senate to get that document (Com. Doc. No. 5, 63d Cong.). At no time has it been available in the document room. It is not a general public document available to Members of the Senate or House.

And yet Congress is asked to appropriate $5,860,000 for the Feather River reclamation project without any official means of ascertaining reasons for so doing—to approve the project when notified officially it is not in the interests of navigation.

RICHMOND INNER HARBOR—TO BE DUG OUT OF A MARSH AT A "PROHIBITIVE" COST.

It seems appropriate at this point to briefly refer to another stupendous real-estate bubble that may be financed by Uncle Sam at anywhere from five to ten million dollars or more before completion. The engineers' reports do not give these figures—they never do until the bills are paid—but people living there so estimate. Jamaica Bay Harbor, Long Island, is a notorious seven to ten million dollar real-estate project now financed by a convenient Uncle. Mattawan Creek and Shoal Harbor are also familiar private jobs; fertilizing factory waterway projects are found from New Jersey to North Carolina; railway terminal harbors from Portland, Me., to the Southern Pacific Co.'s harbors at Oakland and elsewhere, all are recipients of generous Uncle Sam's bounty. Some of these were discussed more in detail last session and no more than a brief reminder is now offered.

From the December, 1915, number of the Army and Navy News, published at San Francisco, I quote, page 7, a pointed editorial, as follows:

> For years the United States Army and Navy have suffered from the niggardliness of pork-barrel Congressmen, who have vigorously opposed proper military expenditures, but have cheerfully poured out millions for a public building in a cross-roads village or for dredging useless streams (or harbors) in their districts. That made them strong with their constituents; it meant pork.

Can we deny this, my brother Congressman? Is the criticism unfounded?

But, turning over to pages 18, 19, and 20, among the patent-medicine ads. of the same preparedness publication, is a description of "ringing resolutions" to Congress read by the postmaster of Berkeley, demanding an inner harbor for Richmond. A handsomely designed map, prepared by Col. Rees, United States Army, is close up to reading matter, while half-page real-estate ads. and smaller ones, at so much per square inch, frame the reading matter, advising gullible nibblers that "anything in, around, or near Richmond will yield a handsome return if bought right." As at Muscle Shoals, members of a former Rivers and Harbors Committee are conveniently grouped for effective coloring.

After Uncle Sam begins dredging his several million dollar project on Richmond flats, bogs, and marshes overlooking the Standard Oil works that surround the flats and bogs, we learn, page 19, "every indication tells the observant visitor that Richmond is the site of one of the largest western cities of the near future." Like a half century ago, the country will unanimously sing, "On to Richmond." Incidentally, Richmond had 6,802 inhabitants last census. But Richmond is being boosted, primarily by Uncle Sam, secondarily by those behind the real-estate project.

"COL. SELLERS" LIKEWISE SAW MILLIONS IN EYE WATER.

On page 20 of the Army and Navy News is a photographic signature of "Thos. A. Rees, Lt. Col.," following paid reading matter, to prove what no one would otherwise believe, that Army engineers have recommended this project. Rear Admiral Pond, United States Navy, is also persuaded to subscribe to a statement, same page, "'At first sight it has appeared to some that the cost of a station thus formed would be prohibitive," but real-estate advocates of a greater Richmond, surrounded by Standard Oil works, think differently, and so forth. Digging a 30-foot harbor on Anacostia Flats is equally feasible and of far greater public value.

Prospective gumps who are looking for Uncle Sam to open up a gold mine in Richmond's bogs, adjoining the Standard Oil works, should take warning from an ex-Congressman's 25,000-acre real-estate project, still watchfully waiting, down on the Kissimmee. Engineers propose, but eventually an overburdened Uncle revolts, following the advice given editorially on page 7 of the Army and Navy News.

Richmond's harbor project is not unknown to fame, and its introduction into any river and harbor bill is sure to invite a flood of interrogations which may strike close to those who have tried to unload the project onto the Government. To use the significant words of Mr. Cutting, "It is a mighty good speculation for Richmond"—and some others.

OTHER HARBORS OF REFUGE FOR HIS PORKSHIP.

If harbor scandals are to be probed, any investigator will find in the Sandy Bay (Mass.) Harbor a situation that demands investigation. During 30 years, $1,950,000 of public funds was dumped into this $5,000,000 project on the recommendation of Army engineers. Then it was abandoned as a useless and worthless venture. Who is to blame? Again, Lookout Harbor was first reported against by Gen. Kingman, but a benevolent Congress overcame his objections and directed a report to be made in favor of either Lookout or Hatteras. Then we began a $3,526,600 refuge harbor, which well-known waterway, experts say, is more valuable to dredgers, contractors, and interested railways than to vessel captains who wisely avoid the coast. A thorough investigation would disclose interesting facts regarding some harbor projects and a first warning signal should be "Lookout."

TRUTH STRANGER THAN FICTION.

A keen writer in the New York Evening Post, speaking of the new slogan "preparedness," pointedly observes:

Pork barrel men have already adopted the motto: "Waterways for defense." Obviously there is no surer way of keeping the Germans from landing at Long Island than by widening Oskaloosa Creek at a cost of $500,000, and damming Musconetcong River at a cost of $2,000,000, it being estimated that the water power generated by damming Musconetcong River will provide sufficient electric current to operate 200 siege guns for a period of two months against an army of 250,000 men.

Substituting a $20,000,000 bankrupt 13-mile canal and a $19,000,000 Muscle Shoals, "cyanamid" power scheme, both of which are being pushed during this session by powerful lobbies, the picture is perfect.

Several modern patriots now point with pride to their thirsty, crooked creeks, and building bounties while exclaiming "Millions for political tribute, but not one cent for defense—without war taxes."

THE CHESAPEAKE & DELAWARE CANAL—A $20,000,000 COUNT IN THE INDICTMENT.

According to Chairman SPARKMAN'S prediction, we may also take over the 13-mile bankrupt Chesapeake & Delaware Canal in order to aid navigation between Philadelphia and Baltimore and, incidentally, help out stockholders now owning the worthless project. Uncle Samuel and several of the surrounding States contributed to this canal stock out of public treasuries when the canal was first started, for real commercial purposes, long before the Civil War and the days of railroads. Army engineers now ask us to again buy a canal we helped to build, and to appropriate $20,000,000 for a 35-foot depth, sufficient for torpedo boats and submarines. On the Delaware, depths have grown and grown until the present river project reaching this canal calls for 35 feet and a total cost of over $25,000,000 on the lower Delaware.

With stock absolutely valueless and bonds quoted at 49 cents on the dollar before this purchase proposal became serious, we are to buy the canal; but, on January 2, 1915, its president wrote the Army engineers:

The board of directors of the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal Co. do not control the stockholders or bondholders of that company, and the question as to what price would be accepted by them for their interest must be one which they alone can answer. The board do not see how they could do anything more than state that they could recommend a price that would pay the par value of the bonds and give a sufficient amount for the stockholders to induce them to consent to a sale.

Study the proposition on which we are asked legislatively to buy this canal—for sale, if at all, when its bond value is doubled from the 49-cent quotation, and when stockholders holding worthless stock ask to realize all they can; in a horse trade which we are to make without knowing the terms demanded by the fellow who owns the blind horse he is trying to sell.

I do not underrate the high standing of gentlemen who defend this proposed purchase, but high-class men are defending every project that I have questioned. They usually view the project from the highly colored surroundings of the community represented, and at the same time demand that those who question the particular project shall view it with unbiased mind; in other words, with the mind of the promoters. I confess to a disposition to oblige every Member of Congress at either end of the Capitol, but I can not perform my own duty as I see it without registering an humble protest against needless extravagance.

MOVING TROOPS BY CANAL BOATS.

One argument advanced for this purchase is that the canal will aid moving troops in time of war. No proposal is too absurd for those who approve the scheme to take over all worthless stock and depreciated bonds on a canal we helped to build originally. A present canal rule prohibits over 4 miles an hour, or a minimum limit of 3 hours and a quarter in which to run troops 13 miles, the length of the canal. Why take a canal for moving troops when two great railway systems will carry the whole United States Army from Baltimore to Philadelphia—94 miles—in a couple of hours and land 500,000 or more troops in either city within 24 hours, whereas the old bankrupt canal route of nearly the same distance would take 10 hours or more for every canal boat and run the risk of dangerous quicksand banks, Chesapeake crabs, and prowling submarines. Surely Noah's ark remains anchored opposite the Philadelphia Navy Yard for just such emergencies. Four miles an hour for the quick movement of troops is an inspiration worthy of Philadelphia. Twenty million dollars would build and equip three or four Government railways from Baltimore to Philadelphia that would be a 1,500 per cent better investment in every way. The railway terminals now monopolizing the city water front of Philadelphia and Baltimore will never permit any lively waterway competition, although Baltimore dredgers, Philadelphia canal stockholders, bondholders, and a few sincere dreamers may believe $20,000,000 should be spent by the Government.

NO SERIOUS COMMERCIAL COMPETITION.

Let me make a stronger statement. No waterway competition exists to-day in the coastwise trade, because practically all boats are owned by railways. On the testimony of a man who carries the relatively small Chesapeake & Delaware Canal commerce, it is a fact that practically every steamship line operating from Gulf ports, south Atlantic ports south of Hatteras, and north Atlantic ports is controlled by the railroads. Based on that remarkable state of affairs, the Government is constantly importuned by powerful lobbies to expend anywhere from one hundred million to three hundred million dollars for an inland waterway—"God-given channel of trade"—that would in like manner be monopolized by railways if the traffic reached any respectable proportions.

To say railroad interests would not control because of legislative acts is to say that unscrambled eggs solve the trust question. The ramifications of waterway craft ownership and control would have the same possibilities. The Government should have power to control rates and that control should be exercised for the protection of the public.

Is it not significant that if the Government offered to put up $15,000,000, providing the two great cities of Philadelphia and Baltimore contributed $5,000,000, or any part of the expense, not one foot of the canal would be bought? Not one taxpayer in a thousand in either city will be benefited, nor will the Government reap a sou from the investment. Yet we are asked to assume an expenditure of $20,000,000 and a maintenance and interest charge of possibly $1,000,000 annually, and a vigorous lobby is on hand to put the vicious, wasteful project through. Neither should it be forgotten that Baltimore is the headquarters of the Dredging Trust, exposed last session, an organization which once managed secret agreements for dividing up Government dredging contracts.

If such projects are to be seriously considered we should insist upon equal contribution from localities that expect to be benefited before a solitary nickel is advanced from the Treasury. It would effectually dispose of the canal project, as Philadelphia and Baltimore are not contributing toward any canal-purchase scheme. However, that is not part of the "pork barrel" system, which, like David Harum, contemplates getting all you can before the other fellow gets his, and always to get it first.

PREPAREDNESS TACTICIANS.

Three months ago it was generally whispered that river, canal, and harbor projects are to be hung on the national-defense program during the coming session. Charleston needs a deeper harbor, possibly to admit friendly naval vessels, but will require submarines and existing sand bars to keep out the enemy. Savannah, Philadelphia, and Narraganset Bay and other inland harbors have similar ambitions. Memphis, St. Louis, and Kansas City pine for a sight of real dreadnaughts to protect the Mississippi and Missouri levees, while Newport and other social centers have aspirations of their own.

Not to be outdone by hungry creeks and rivulets and deserted waterways, our inland-canal enthusiasts demand a share of the preparedness plunder. The Beaufort and Norfolk $5,400,000 canal project of 12 feet is to be finished immediately, in order that 35-foot-draft gunboats may push through the remaining 23 feet of mud to rescue the New York Gun Club's preserves on Currituck Sound from invasion by poachers. Boston to Narragansett Bay's $40,000,000 canal, and on to the Virginia Capes, and again on down to Texas, waterways projected by the canal lobby board of strategy, will be dug in order to make 12-foot and 25-foot ditches for 35-foot dreadnaughts and to eventually provide an annual New-York-to-Narragansett naval-canal fox trot.

THE OPINION OF A GREAT WATERWAY EXPERT.

Last but not least, the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal, worthless stocks and bonds and sliding quicksand and all, has suddenly become a national-defense asset. Statesmen who desire home canals, rain or shine, have given out press interviews on the strategic importance of our old bankrupt canal. Members of waterway lobbies eloquently picture Philadelphia, Baltimore, and even the graft-built capitol at Harrisburg overrun by foreign foes, unless we have that canal. Never has war with all its horrors proven such a godsend to canal promoters. Gunboats are to be sent through the canal instead of by open sea to avoid capture, and yet the Delaware, 5 miles wide at the canal's entrance, permits an enemy to bottle up the canal or Philadelphia with equal certainty.

The same kind of expert engineers who approved Trinity River, Muscle Shoals, Hennepin Canal, and political navy yards now agree that canals must be dug, dug, dug, immediately, while above all the cheering for "preparedness" our old familiar friend, the Chesapeake & Delaware bankrupt canal can be heard shouting for $20,000,000 of Government aid for a 13-mile project.

Worthless stocks, bonds recently selling at 49 cents on the dollar, and Uncle Sam is called upon—not for a loan from Uncle, but to buy another worthless canal. After 20 years' legislative study of waterways the country's ablest expert said less than a year ago of this project:

As this goes forth to the country you would think that $2,250,000 was necessary to acquire the canal; that all the House regarded as necessary was $1,300,000; but right in the body of the report appears the fact that $8,000,000 is necessary—$5,750,000 in addition to the purchase price.

Or $17,500,000 more to secure a 35-foot depth.

This is not a time for bargains in canals; it is a time when the individual citizen of the United States is beginning to recognize that he must economize, and he has a right to demand that the Government of this country should show something of the same disposition to avoid needless and extravagant expenses.

One hundred million dollars for proposed inland-waterway canals has been saddled onto the Government by Army engineers at the instigation of the powerful lobby. Buying up old, worthless canals has been as profitable to the United States as an investment in a hoop skirt of the vintage of 1860. Just why Army engineers have bowed to such discarded relics of pioneer days may be fully discovered when a thorough investigation is held by Congress.

Confirming this opinion are these significant words of Senator Burton:

I wish to say that we never have acquired one of those abandoned or run-down canals or public works but that the expense has been far and away beyond our computations.

ABANDONED CANAL MENDICANTS.

Before the Government rushes headlong into reckless canal buying or canal building on the advice of Army engineers let us judge the future by the past.

Quoting from official statistics, out of 4,468 miles of canals built in the United States, 2,444 miles, or over 50 per cent, were abandoned since 1906; or, like the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal or Chesapeake & Ohio Canal, are worthless business ventures waiting to unload on our gullible Government.

Is it not significant that of 2,444 miles of abandoned canals in the United States in 1906 over one-third of those abandoned canals, reaching 908.74 miles, were in Pennsylvania, abandoned at a loss of $34,750,265? Uncle Sam is, indeed, a promising friend to owners of worthless canals in North Carolina and Pennsylvania.

The Chesapeake & Delaware 13-mile canal was built in part with $450,000 furnished by our Government three-quarters of a century ago. The real investment is $731,250, including $259,875 in dividends that were never paid, but excluding $51,187 Government funds embezzled by an officer. Although the canal company is bankrupt, no dividends declared since 1876 and bonds worth 50 cents on the dollar, we are asked to buy it again. Bondholders living in Pennsylvania and neighboring localities have even refused to fix a price until they can unload at a good figure, but we are assured it is now needed for defense purposes.

WHICH CITY WILL BE CAPTURED FIRST?

Many vulnerable points exist all along our coast, from Portland, Me., to Portland, Oreg. All desire fortifications. If this canal is primarily for submarines to be used for the safety of the country at large, then let us first build submarines to navigate it. We need submarines more than canals. If for the movement of troops, then let us provide a respectable Army instead of a skirmish line. If the canal is primarily for the protection of the City of Brotherly Love, far up a river on which we are expending $25,000,000, then a familiar answer once given by the greatest American to Boston capitalists during the Civil War is well to remember. While contributing $25,000,000 for deepening the Delaware to Philadelphia, is it not time that Philadelphia joins in the good work by a slight contribution toward the purchase of a canal owned in part by Pennsylvanians who refuse to set the price?

When our Government Treasury is overflowing with gold, let us fly to the protection of our weakest lamb; but when heavy war-tax burdens are borne in times of peace, when military and naval plans involving a half billion dollars confront us, can we say it is wise to spend $20,000,000 for this canal? If so, is it not equally necessary to spend $40,000,000 more for another proposed canal from New York to Philadelphia? Two years ago no thought of preparedness was advanced for its purchase, but to-day we sit on the safety valve for fear the exhausted nations of Europe will get us if we don't watch out. Are we not beginning at the wrong end of preparedness in this canal scheme, and is it not wise to provide ships to ride the canal and men to man them before we adopt extravagant canal projects—held without price?

CUMBERLAND RIVER $5,000,000 PROJECT—STILL ANOTHER COUNT IN THE INDICTMENT.

Chairman SPARKMAN's announcement that a project to be urged is the $5,000,000 Cumberland River project has the merit of straightforwardness, if nothing more. This is another project that Senator Burton condemned repeatedly and helped to block, but Burton is now gone. This Cumberland River project will be found in Committee Document No. 10, Sixty-third Congress. It presents an interesting phase of present methods and Army engineers surrendering to "influence." In fact it is a striking chapter that exposes the weakness of our present pork-barrel system and political pull. I addressed the House at some length on this project and also on the Muscle Shoals on December 14, 1914, and present a brief extract from the RECORD of that date (p. 203):

In 1882 an experimental canalization scheme to cost $8,500,000 was authorized. It provides for 28 locks and dams, but after building a few locks and dams and spending about $3,000,000 without aid to traffic the rest of the project was abandoned on recommendation of the Army Board of Engineers in 1906. Persistent hammering by interested parties brought a second adverse report from Maj. Harts in 1910. Again a third refusal was filed by Maj. Burgess on October 29, 1912, in response to persistent local demands. All of these reports disapproved of further expenditures in a bad investment.

THE BOOSTER CLUB OF NASHVILLE.

Then came the "Booster Club" of Nashville, which proceeded to furnish rainbow statistics as glittering in character as the inconsiderable and rapidly decreasing river traffic would permit the booster conscience to present. Whereupon Maj. Burgess cogitated, modified his report, but while defeated in this one-sided battle, he declared $4,500,000 must not be expended by the Government unless local committees contributed one-half of the amount. * * *

TWO SENATORS AND NINE CONGRESSMEN AID.

After following this interesting reversal of action it becomes doubly instructive to watch the siege prosecuted against the Army engineers. Two United States Senators and nine Congressmen, with some lesser lights, joined in an assault to learn why this project so frequently disapproved should not be given an official O. K. and $4,500,000 surrendered unconditionally.

At that hearing Col. Black said, "On the basis of the return by the distribution of fair costs to the whole people of the United States there does not seem to be a return commensurate with an investment of $4,500,000."

That is what Col. Black said on January 28, 1914, according to the official report before the 11 able lawyers, incidentally all United States Senators and Congressmen, who argued to prevent any contribution. On February 4, just one week later, the board and Chief of Engineers saw a new light, pulled down the flag in token of surrender, and the right of the Government to contributions was waived.

Quoting further from the same record is this illuminating suggestion from my friend from Texas:

Mr. CALLAWAY. Do you understand how 9 Congressmen and 2 Senators could furnish an engineer with the technical information that would give him light on a great proposition like that? The information that 9 Congressmen or 90 Congressmen could give would not be worth anything.

Mr. FREAR. That is a question which the gentleman can probably answer as well as I can.

A MEMBER. Might they not give some political information?

That, in brief, is the direct political pressure revealed by Document No. 10, River and Harbor Committee, on a project which was three times rejected and as late at 1914 declared by Col. Black unjust to the Government. The engineers finally surrendered, and Chairman Sparkman says this project is on the program for the next bill.

Many similar instances will be found in the hearings. In fact, the practice is general.

Senator TILLMAN did not know the A, B, C of the game when he gave his comprehensive estimate of river and harbor bills over 10 years ago. Since then questionable projects have doubled in amount and are more worthless than ever in character, while our Treasury guardians, who capitulate before influential statesmen, are saddling on the Treasury in 1915 a hundred or more new projects, through the half million dollars used for new surveys. I refrain from calling attention to the small actual commerce to be served by this extravagant canalization scheme, but the loss in net actual commerce appears to reach nearly 40 per cent during the last two years.

POLITICAL PREPAREDNESS.

Not long ago the country was aroused over a charge made in Congress that the President had attempted to persuade the Interstate Commerce Commission to increase permissive railway tariffs. What would become of judicial bodies if political power used to influence the decision of judges or courts suddenly became a burning question? The charges were controverted, but there can be no dispute that the highest tribunal in the country empowered to determine the technical value of waterway improvements and resulting Treasury burdens is regularly beset by political influence.

Influence is exerted by State delegations and men high in the councils of the nation, all of whom have a voice in determining the size of Army appropriations, the status of the Engineer Corps, and other legislative and political actions that vitally concern the Board of Engineers.

In order to extend gratuities from the Public Treasury to insistent localities this influence shapes waterway legislation and cajoles or browbeats engineers whose duty it is to pass upon waterway projects, freely and untrammeled. If it is improper for the President to express his personal opinion on questions pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission or before the courts, is it not shocking for those who demand local expenditures and who may also influence Army appropriations to bring political pressure upon the board?

We have appointed Army engineers to prevent fraudulent or wasteful waterway payments from the Federal Treasury, to protect public funds, and it is vain to disguise the real purpose when parading political power before that board. The practice is openly embraced by those who indignantly deny any unjust advantage is secured thereby. Membership on committees at either end of the Capitol is likewise sought in order to secure liberal appropriations for the same projects when once they are approved.

"Pork" always goes to the other fellow, and while denouncing those who seek to prevent waste the champions of force and influence defend a practice that puts over wasteful projects without number and is demoralizing and indefensible.

However, it is pursuant to the injunction of Capt. Ellison, secretary of the river lobby, whose celebrated utterance should not be forgotten:

We send Congressmen here to legislate for the Nation, theoretically, but actually to get all they can for us, and if they do not get our share, and then some, we do our best to replace them.

BEAUFORT CANAL AND OTHER PROJECTS—A FEW MORE COUNTS IN THE INDICTMENT.

In any review of wasteful projects it is hard to select any particular waterway without doing injustice through neglect to many other projects that crowd their way into the front rank for dishonorable mention. For that reason I refer briefly to the $5,400,000 Beaufort Canal from Norfolk to Beaufort, bought by the Government to aid the needy. No words of mine can describe the indefensible waste of money now occurring on this project. I have set forth the facts repeatedly in the RECORD, and so have abler and better critics in Congress, but I will again say briefly that the millions now being wasted on this canal forever condemns the judgment of Army engineers who recommend the purchase of bankrupt canals and the extension of projects.

Connecting waterways between Norfolk and Beaufort—all the actual commerce that will ever be handled for 50 years will be inconsiderable and it will remain insignificant for half a century. It is apparently a political proposition, as scandalous as the majority of those briefly described. Two small launches—one owned by the Standard Oil Co. for its own use—are the only through craft running the canal, I am informed.

Army engineers speak of military necessity for the project, but it will never be used for military purposes or commerce because the cost of dredging to any usable depth for large vessels is prohibitive. For years the canal did a nominal business, but it is a relic of days before the war, and any man recommending its use for legitimate commercial or military purposes is a fit subject for delusion experts. If the community supposed to be benefited was compelled to contribute toward the expense, presumably not 2 per cent of the cost could be raised. Although vigorously condemned in the Senate, it received $400,000 in 1915 from our generous Chief of Engineers.

The greatest waterway expert in the country, Senator Burton, denounced this "waste" of public money last year in the following language:

Twenty years ago when channels were shallow, when tolls were imposed, the traffic on these two routes [Beaufort and Dismal Swamp Canals] was more than four times as much as it was in 1912. * * * If the traffic was shifted to the railroads, it was because that was the more convenient and economical way of carrying the freight; and no removal of tolls on canals, no enlargement from 9 or 10 feet to 12 feet in depth, no expenditure of $5,400,000, is ever going to bring back what has been lost to those channels. It is a chimera; it is a waste of public money to attempt it.

ANOTHER STATE'S CLAIM TO WATERWAY FAME.

Among recent river and harbor bills North Carolina appears to be a regular beneficiary, a humble testimonial to the influence of influence.

Starting with the familiar Scuppernong Creek, as juicy as its celebrated namesake, thence on down Deep Creek, that boasts of 2 or 3 feet depth and 2,000 tons (?) of annual commerce, rejected by division engineers, but rescued by Chief Bixby, sailing up past the notable fertilizing project on Northeast Creek until we reach a depth of 1 inch at the head of navigation, according to the Chief of Engineer's 1914 report, page 505, and thence hiking over to Lumber Creek, crooked and tortuous, rejected by division engineers, but again saved by Chief Bixby's hold on Government funds. Bennett Creek, losing 2 feet in depth, or 50 per cent of its volume, when the wind gets to it, according to official reports, and Newbegun Creek, named in honor of its first successful encounter with the Treasury, together with Smith Creek, which is owned by Old Man Smith, according to Representative GOODWIN of Arkansas, and scores of other insignificant creeks, including the Contentnia and the perambulating Peedee.

Onthejob and Getsumore Creeks reappear in every river bill with the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army. Rivers of Doubt and doubtful rivers, all discovered by our military strategists and installed in the bill with convenient pin money. Col. Roosevelt's discoveries were without price, but insignificant creeks have soaked up many millions of Uncle Sam's silver. No noticeable traffic appears on these Rivers of Doubt, but heavy naval guns and artillery from both ends of the Capitol know the exact range of the Nation's strong box. Is it not a striking lesson in preparedness for conquest of the Treasury? Equally true is the fact that strong men of the same delegation oppose the whole scandalous system that now brings discredit to waterway legislation.

KISSIMMEE AND OKLAWAHA—MORE COUNTS IN THE INDICTMENT.

If time permitted, I would willingly mention a score of additional wasteful projects, from Mattawan Creek to the James, including the abandoned Big Sandy and a dozen other inconsequential creeks of North Carolina and South Carolina and Florida, not forgetting St. Lucia Inlet, that has been condemned by members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee and yet patiently knocks at the Treasury door while holding a hundred thousand dollars in its hands. Louisiana, Arkansas, and Texas are not alone possessed of worthless projects, but before concluding I feel sure that the Kissimmee and Oklawaha, of Florida, will again rise up to plague us. Stricken from the bill by the Senate committee in 1914 because of their exposure in the House, they have been defended by champions at both ends of the Capitol. The country has been informed that the official engineer's report is untrue when it says the Kissimmee is dry eight months of the year. What is the difference, provided the engineers approve Kissimmee Creek, wet or dry? The issue of wet or dry on the Kissimmee has become as famous as wet or dry Kansas, and has become a prolific source of argument; but so is the condition of the Trinity, which is dry eight or nine months of the year, according to the same authority. Yet Army engineers recommend an expenditure on the Trinity of twenty millions or thereabouts, although it is reported dry two-thirds of the time.

WHY NOT INSURE AGAINST FIRE?

Meanwhile real-estate ventures along Kissimmee Creek languish and business remains at a standstill waiting for Congress to give employment to idle dredgers and contractors whom our engineers provided for in their recommendations. Florida should take over the Kissimmee Creek bed and turn it into a highway for the use of northern tourists desiring good speedways for their heavy touring cars. Our old friend ex-Congressman Kribbs, whose pathetic letter to the Army engineers concerning Florida land speculations will not soon be forgotten, is presumably still sitting on the banks of the river bed waiting for us to act on his real-estate venture. Settlers "from the North and West" who were waiting to buy "25,339 acres" split up "into 40-acre lots," according to the engineer's report, are still up North on the waiting list, all waiting for the moistening influence of $47,000 of Government currency to aid navigation. No signs of life can be discovered along that famous creek save one lonesome "lame duck" of a speculative turn of mind that sits gazing hopefully into the invisible river filled with imperceptible water.

In harmony with the proposal of Army engineers to encourage water on the Trinity by having Government artesian wells is the advice of the bubbling Tom Moore, written on the town pump in anticipation of a dry Kissimmee:

What is the use for you and me, or both of us, to try
With a pump to pump up water, if the wells run dry?

THE OKLAWAHA $733,000 GIFT—ANOTHER COUNT IN THE INDICTMENT.

It is said of a distinguished statesman interested in this project that he is an enthusiastic sailor, and when he goes forth on the $733,000 creek to row, armed cap-a-pie with paddle and tree clippers for parting waves and foliage he reminds the natives of Father Time, because of a rusty scythe he uses for mowing down the luxuriant water hyacinth that we annually help cut at Government expense.

For all purposes, other than navigation and commerce, the Oklawaha is beautiful to behold, and all it now needs is three-quarters of a million or more to make it an eternal delight for natives and tourists. Nearly two years ago an investigating mind couched the following lines to the Oklawaha:

We have a crooked creek, that has a crooked name,
And grabs a crooked million while in a crooked game;
To make a crooked water power run up a crooked hill,
It crooks your Uncle Samuel through a crooked river bill.

This same project was also inspiration for a letter addressed to the Army engineers, found in House Document No. 514, page 25, which reads in part as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, March 26, 1913.

GENTLEMEN: In connection with your notice of March 11, regarding Maj. Slattery's report on the Oklawaha to Lake Dora, I would like to ask you that you set a date for hearing and arguments in this matter after April 7. I regard this as one of the most important improvements to be considered in Florida. I believe it would be a great mistake and a little short of a calamity to hear Maj. Slattery's report disapproved and this improvement denied. I wish to be heard on it and submit the views of others, etc. * * *

Engineers do not alone build. No such word as "please" appears in this mandatory official notification to set a day for hearing and arguments after April 7. Representatives plead for favor, but influential statesmen may order. "A great mistake" was nearly made and a "great calamity" just avoided because of the alertness of a distinguished statesman who stopped an adverse report in the nick of time. A hearing was held, and after argument the engineers were visibly impressed with the political possibilities of the project, an angle not before considered, and so a statesman's views and Maj. Slattery's views were made the board's views. Funny how a little scientific help from statesmen helps matters.

This creek is without a boat line, according to the official report, but Army engineers recommended $733,000, providing a boat-line service of "twice a week" is "guaranteed." A remarkable service and onerous condition to demand in exchange for a paltry three-quarters of a million from the Federal Treasury, but it was only made after hearing the argument of a gentleman from Florida who knew what he wanted. According to the engineer's reports, it also appears that Kyle and Young are to get benefits through a water-power and land-reclamation project. Yet for some reason not hard to find, the Senate struck the entire item out of the 1914 House bill. It will come up again. Of course, the Oklawaha's commerce is nominal, but $733,000 can make commerce, because it keeps supplies going to dredgers, contractors, and other beneficiaries while it lasts, and is then reported by Army engineers as actual commerce, as I have shown. On this creek there is no need for the admonition, "Vessels large may venture more, but little boats should keep near shore," because there are no boats on the creek. All the boating is done on two railway lines that parallel the creek. Tourists and speculators demand Government money, but commerce will never need it. Is any protection afforded the Government by vacillating engineers who first repudiate such frauds, then swallow them without a grimace?

Incidentally, Florida is hotfoot after North Carolina, for the land of fruit and flowers is well represented, and St. Lucias Inlet, Biscayne Bay, Crystal, Indian Creek, Kissimmee, Choctawatchee, Apalachicola, Oklawaha, and so forth, will get proper recognition in the average annual waterway bill. True, real-estate projects occasionally bob up for recognition, but whenever the engineer's approval has been secured, that ends all worry—the Florida project by some strange necromancy gets into the bill whether big legitimate projects do or not.

A VALUED CONTRIBUTION.

At this point I insert an illuminating contribution alleged to have been thrown overboard by a shipwrecked sailor down on the Trinity River. Most likely it comes from a disgusted Army engineer who is doing experimental work drilling artesian wells for navigation—a man without an army. Possibly it may have been sent by some lonesome young Army officer down on the Coosa or Muscle Shoals who is now engaged in drilling trap rock for 150-foot dam foundations to be built by the Government in aid of the Georgia Power Co. or an $18,700,000 150-foot dam for the Alabama Power Co., as set forth in Document No. 20.

The contribution seems to infringe on the familiar "House that Jack built," and while bearing evidences of hasty, crude attempts at rhyme and meter, it may nevertheless compare favorably in sense and in value with fifty-odd engineering canalization schemes. Goose melodies on goose engineering is necessarily imperfect and impractical, but is frequently valued by childhood memories or scientific pride.

With this brief apology for its appearance, I append, properly acknowledged, a cynical contribution from which I have previously quoted in part as to different waterway projects:

IN THE KEG THE CHIEF BUILT.

Every rank, worthless project that goes in the keg
Engineers have approved, while the money we beg
'Till this waterway barrel gets all our spare chink,
For streams dry and thirsty, with nothing to drink.
The 13-mile bankrupt canal is ambitious
To get twenty millions—in war times propitious,
Which same sum, when given the Waterway Trust,
Will dam Muscle Shoals with war-tax gold dust;
And the dry Brazos—Trinity thirty millions desire
For artesian wells drilled to guard against fire,
While old Mississippi with determination
Grabs three hundred million for land reclamation.
Some small Buckeye ferries join in this cotillion
Thro' war-tax allotments for sixty-four million.
Even Ford limousines, while crossing the river,
Help make freight statistics, more cash to deliver,
While stray pools of water and Missouri sand
Bag twenty more millions for reclaiming land.
Hand in hand with contractors whose junk-laden scow
Makes half of the freight for the pork we allow,
Along with a water power for navigation
To give old St. Anthony a gold coronation.
If political pull distributes this malt,
When will Congress decide to call a sharp halt
In filling up kegs like the chief built?

WASTE IS NOT SECTIONAL.

Existing projects on which millions are annually wasted were criticized in the RECORD of April 10, 1914, and also of January 29, 1915, when the last bill passed the House before its defeat in the Senate. While the great majority of these objectionable projects are in the South, others, past, present, and future are to be found in the North.

A $2,500,000 water power constructed between St. Paul and Minneapolis has been referred to. Others could be pointed out but I will conclude by calling attention to the Hennepin Canal bubble in Illinois, built by our Government on a promise it would save to Iowa farmers $20,000,000 in freight charges annually. The mockery of engineers' promises and pork-barrel methods is completely demonstrated on this 60-mile canal on which $7,576,496 have been spent and on which 11,856 tons of salt, sand, and miscellaneous freight was floated in 1913. Duplications in commerce statistics produced pitiful results, according to the Engineer's Report, after seven years of high finance canal traffic by Army engineers.

HENNEPIN CANAL—A SEVEN AND A HALF MILLION ILLINOIS CANAL—SALT FREIGHT COSTS $36.75 PER TON.

It costs the Government about $36.75 per ton to furnish a canal for 5,360 tons of Illinois salt, soft coal, gravel, rock, shells, sand, and 6,135 tons of grain and 78 tons of merchandise, all hauled various distances, not exceeding 60 miles in any case. If any fourth-grade pupil offered a table of statistics as useless as that found on page 2478 of the Chief Engineer's Report for 1914, he should be reduced to the primary class. Illinois passengers, launches, sand, and salt are hopelessly jumbled together; but, from out of the confusion, engineers assert that, counting all duplications of canal freight, the following tonnage passed through one or more of the 33 locks along this notorious canal.

Commercial tonnage (1913)—Hennepin Canal.

	Tons.
Merchandise	72
Grain	6,135
Rock	90
Salt	4,215
Lumber	283
Coal	630
Gravel	270
Shells	86
Sand	60
Total tonnage	11,850

Total Government expenditures on work (p. 2475)	$7,597,781.09
Total maintenance charge (1913)	132,033.00
Interest and depreciation figured at 4 per cent	303,910.00
Annual expense, about	436,000.00
1913 cost per ton for waterway	36.75

A loss of 35 per cent occurred in tonnage during the year, and is explained by the Engineer's Report, 1914, page 932, as follows:

> The tonnage was about 35 per cent less than that of the previous year, the shrinkage being due to the smaller quantities of rock and earth and gravel carried by Government boats.

After spending seven and a half millions, the "commerce" falls off 35 per cent because a Government dredge is idle forsooth. Who will defend such amazing statistics or a canal that cost the Government $36.75 per ton to furnish a 60-mile waterway for an insignificant Illinois cheap heavy tonnage? Who recommended paying $7,500,000 for this baby's rattle that is found in the pork barrel? The engineers should explain.

Congress has provided a 33-lock, 7-foot canal connecting Chicago with the Mississippi River. The Government paid for this extravagant toy $7,597,781, and it is officially reported to have carried 11,850 tons of cheap freight, including 4,215 tons of salt, at an expense to the Government of about $36.75 per ton for 1913. Does it seem credible that Gov. Dunne and a body of Illinois solons would have the nerve to ask the Government to contribute for another canal?

TABLES CHIEF KINGMAN FORGOT TO GIVE.

No man opposes an intelligent policy of waterway improvement, but wild-eyed lobbyists are constantly urging Congress to dig deeper holes in the Treasury deficit in order to exploit fantastic new projects and in support of many worthless continuing projects.

Statistical hard facts disclose that, while practically all of our river commerce has rapidly vanished from the Mississippi, the Ohio, and the Missouri, we have expended, in round numbers, on these three rivers alone—

	Per mile.
Lower Mississippi, 1,000 miles, at	$100,000
Ohio to Missouri, 200 miles, at	86,000
Upper Mississippi, 600 miles, at	30,000
Ohio River (the Muscle Shoals lobby charges the Ohio River per mile expense at $84,000), 1,000 miles, at	40,000
Lower Missouri (the present project contemplates $75,000 a mile), 400 miles, at	25,000

Without adding one ton of actual commerce to these rivers, by the time the present delirious schemes are finished, as now proposed, we will have more than doubled the above enormous waste of $200,000,000. Some authorities say many times that amount. We have spent enough on these three rivers, without result, to maintain the Government agricultural department for a decade, or enough to construct a dozen Lincoln highways across the country by a Congress that refuses to spend one dollar for local highway aid. Enough money to buy a dozen modern battleships—and we have only begun the job on these three rivers, with a hundred others on the waiting list. Hundreds of millions for dredgers—not one dollar for highways.

Is it not time to take an account of stock to find out just where we have been dragged in our idiotic waterway investments?

APPROPRIATIONS AND COMMERCE.

The field of wasteful projects recommended by Army engineers is large, and as these projects increase, annual maintenance charges grow to huge proportions.

Although criticism may properly be lodged against some harbor projects which are surrounded by privately owned terminals, the commercial value of hundreds of ocean and lake harbors is significant when compared to a deserted river traffic.

The Mississippi, Missouri, and Ohio Rivers were given approximately $17,500,000 under the 1915 sundry civil bill and the 1915 $38,000,000 "economy" waterway bill reported from the Senate committee. Economy is not evidenced by the size of a bill, but by its character.

After deducting ferriage, floatable logs, timber, sand, gravel, levee-construction material, and soft coal that has floated down the Ohio and Mississippi for a half century in rapidly decreasing amounts, the following remarkable statistics appear, based on the 1914 Engineer's report:

HARDENED ARTERIES OF COMMERCE—THREE RIVERS GIVEN $17,500,000 IN 1915 BILLS.

	Tons.
Upper Mississippi (including duplications)	170,000
Lower Mississippi, no definite data, but probably under	200,000
Missouri River (as shown by Engineer's table)	24,000
Ohio River (Kingman's letter), average continuous traffic under	100,000
Total, less than 500,000 tons	494,000

ACTUAL TONNAGE OF FOUR LAKE PORTS GIVEN $499,000 IN 1915 BILLS.

	Tons.
Ashland, excluding 35,000 tons of logs	5,623,309
Milwaukee, average haul over 600 miles	8,647,230
Chicago, both harbors	13,275,000
Superior and Duluth, increase since 1890 is 1,545 per cent	46,875,000
Total	74,420,539

These four lake ports handled 74,420,539 tons. Excluding faked statistics and soft coal that has always floated in barges on a 3 or 4 foot channel, the rapidly diminishing river traffic on our three greatest rivers costs the Government from $10 to $25 per ton or more, annually, depending on basis of estimate; the lake traffic less than 1 cent per ton. The latter is for navigation, the former is for land reclamation and kindred schemes. Can any comparison give a more graphic picture of real waterways—and three deserted rivers on which approximately $200,000,000 have already been expended?

We may shift the blame onto shoulders of incompetent, foolhardy engineers, who have blindly led the blind, or we may denounce all the notorious waterway lobbies that hover around the Nation's Capitol like birds of ill omen, but it is all to little purpose unless we set our faces squarely against a system that is legislatively dishonest and shamefully wasteful.

Several aggressive members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, it has been pointed out on the floor, are living close to one or the other of the three rivers named. Two members hail from the Great Lake region. Is there any inference to be drawn from this remarkable fact, or from the complexion of committees now found in other legislative bodies?

AN INDEPENDENT PRESS.

The press accomplished the defeat of the 1914 and 1915 pork-barrel bills. Members in both houses furnished the ammunition day after day and did what they could to expose the whole rotten system, but the press, magazines and newspapers combined, came to the rescue patriotically and stopped a $92,000,000 Treasury raid. Without that help it could not have been stopped.

Similar bills are promised at this session. All the army of disappointed dredgers, contractors, and lobbyists of every description who only shared in a measly $50,000,000 allotment, are on hand trying to get after their Senators and Representatives, so that the bill may be hurriedly pushed through just as it has always been hurriedly pushed through in the past.

The spot light of publicity placed upon that bill and the agencies behind it will help to secure its material shrinkage in size, or if unregenerated its absolute defeat, and with the help of the press a change in the whole iniquitous system may soon be brought about.

Preparedness and other great questions confront the people to-day, some of which are of vital importance and others of importance primarily to interested lobbies, but one of the greatest issues will be honest legislative action in behalf of our people.

A BRIEF RECAPITULATION.

In order to state a prima facie case I have tried briefly to present a few of many wasteful and questionable waterway projects contained in the last two river and harbor bills. Also a few vicious projects that received generous allotments from the Chief of Engineers in 1914 and 1915. Those allotments are seemingly no worse and no better than the committee bills which were defeated, but a saving of $42,000,000 could easily have been extended to $60,000,000, or more than double the appropriation made for agriculture, without seriously interfering with any legitimate commerce-carrying waterway that received aid from the allotments.

Counting the sundry civil waterway appropriations carried by a separate bill, over $60,000,000 was given by Congress last session for waterway purposes, and half of that amount, in addition to the $42,000,000 saved, I believe it has been demonstrated ought to have been saved, but was wasted. Not one dollar in ten would be contributed locally along the Ohio or Mississippi or Missouri Rivers to aid in projects recklessly undertaken by our Government. That fact I have endeavored to show as a compelling reason why the present prodigious waste should be stopped. Air-castle projects recommended by Army engineers have been financed by the Government until we have lost all sense of economy or proportion. Getting something for nothing from the Government would be unpopular if local contributions were required in a majority of cases by a discriminating, high-class waterway board.

Projects condemned by Congress in express terms have been presented, and it has been disclosed from the record that the Chief of Engineers within 30 days thereafter rode roughshod over legislative protests by allotting millions of dollars for condemned projects which any disinterested investigator must know are wasteful. Only conjecture can say what autocratic power determined the scandalous allotments.

Over a dozen other questionable projects that were given liberal allotments have been also briefly described—projects that have strong political pull but little else to recommend them. A score of other additional projects have been discussed more in detail to show the flimsy justification offered by Chiefs of Engineers for wasting hundreds of millions of dollars before these projects will be finished, and with countless others to follow. This exposition has been intended to supplement other facts regarding many projects presented last session and to put other Members on their own inquiry. With a little patience and labor any Member could have performed the service better than I have done, but heretofore I have encountered much difficulty in securing important information because not a member of the committee.

A COMMITTEE'S THANKLESS TASK.

By the action of those who may approve my humble efforts to reduce waterway waste, I have been placed on the Rivers and Harbors Committee. It is well understood that no committee has a harder or more thankless task to perform or is more beset by Members and constituencies demanding special favors. However much I may have occasion to differ from my colleagues in the committee, they are accorded the same sincerity of purpose which moves me to seek better legislative methods.

Representing in part a State ranking second in waterway commerce, I am thoroughly interested in general waterway development for the public use, but in no especial project there or elsewhere.

Present waterway legislation is inexcusably wasteful, as I have endeavored to show. The hopelessness of an utter lack of system must be recognized before we look for a change, and with that objective I have given facts upon facts, officially vouched for, to prove the country is covered with useless projects and wasteful river canalization schemes, no two of which can be shown to be of any permanent value to commerce or to the country or locality supposed to be benefited.

THE SCOPE OF WATERWAY EXPENDITURES.

Equally certain is the demonstration that Army engineers have been rainbow chasing and squandering hundreds of millions of public funds without any comprehension of the ultimate value of projects or responsibility for such expenditures.

From the standpoint of proper governmental functions and public economy, the problem becomes far more important when we discover that waterway appropriations have doubled within the past dozen years, and will be quadrupled before the conclusion of another decade unless we call a halt in the mad waste that has been disclosed.

Two-thirds of present expenditures are annually made on rivers and creeks which have lost practically all of the commerce possessed long before Uncle Sam began experimenting through engineers with his gold cure. Private reclamation, private water powers, purchases of bankrupt canals, and no end of private promotion schemes having the engineers' approval now pound on Treasury doors demanding their share of funds raised from war taxes and income taxes. Demands are increasing by leaps and bounds, according to the official records, until waste and extravagance in waterway appropriations run wild and have communicated the same atmosphere of irresponsibility to several other appropriation bills.

WASTE AND INCOMPETENCE.

Direct responsibility for much of our extravagant waterway policy has been charged to Army engineers, and particularly to Chief Kingman and his predecessors, who determine the policy of the corps.

Everyone must realize the engineer is a creature of circumstances and can no more withstand political pressure than can subordinate officials in other positions. Those who chant the praises of the engineer and engage in fulsome eulogy are usually among the favored, or hope to be favored elect in the matter of approved projects.

Responsibility for the system is primarily ours, and while it may be presumptuous to point out our own faults and to suggest a remedy, it is unwarrantable for anyone to captiously criticize. I have tried hastily, if imperfectly, to present sufficient facts that will induce investigation on the part of every Member. In the RECORD for September 3, 1914, will be found abundant confirmation of my views as to the blind slough into which we have run our waterway craft. A careful analysis of the unhealthy character of our present waterway intoxication is there presented by Senator Burton, the ablest waterway champion and best waterway expert in the country. For days he placed the facts before us, and by no subterfuge can his condemnation of conditions be avoided.

Of the $850,000,000 spent on waterways, presumably over a half billion dollars has been wasted without adding one ton of commerce or benefiting navigation. The report of the Public Buildings Commission, Document 936, Sixty-third Congress, should convince any Member that of the $163,000,000 spent for public buildings within the past 12 years, over $50,000,000 have been spent largely for local pride rather than necessity or utility. I do not assume to estimate approximately the amount of waste found in these bills or in the military and naval bills during the past two decades. Based on voluntary statements made to me by men who occupy or have filled high positions which command the confidence of the country, I do say that inexcusable waste through locality demands, political pull, and undesirable legislative methods in these four classes of appropriations now reaches over $50,000,000 annually, and possibly the demonstrated waste would be found to reach nearer double that amount.

THE CURE.

In view of the poisonous and rapid growth of waste, it is incredible that present conditions should long continue. Will the reformation come from within? It is doubtful, because the champions of local expenditures for waterways, public buildings, naval and military stations, and munition plants have grown more avaricious and threatening than ever before. The cure may not come from within, but will come from the country, which recognizes that an existing wrong is more important to deal with than anticipated local benefits, for which taxpayers must roundly pay in any event.

To the present administration comes an opportunity rarely afforded. With our people burdened by war taxes and an enormous defense program, the President has it in his hands to enforce retrenchment and economy, to be reached through high-class administrative boards removed from political influence. This is a first step toward a national budget. If he fails to grasp the opportunity, then the candidate in the next campaign who comes nearest to inviting the confidence of the country will be the man who declares war against waste and extravagance. All candidates will find a promising field for such efforts.

I do not underestimate great problems which confront the country and have an influence in determining individual selections, but the public is in a mood to demand a reduction of waste. If we can not cope with the evil ourselves, it must come through leadership by the chosen official for the highest honor within the people's gift. Of the many able men whose names are linked with the honor surely one or more will be found ready to assume the formidable task.

A REAL CAMPAIGN ISSUE.

What an issue with which to go before the American people—paying war taxes in times of peace to keep afloat wasteful pork barrels. With a depleted Treasury and knowledge of specific charges against extravagance, not one Democratic leader, from the President down to the humblest committee chairman, has yet raised his voice in opposition. Public-spirited Representatives, irrespective of party, have opposed legislative waste, but what leader has pointed the way to an honest bill? Democratic legislative tinkering has been charged with business uncertainty and unrest. Political exigency has been alleged to be a controlling motive, but while these experiments have been followed by failure and war taxes, thus far not one word against wasteful appropriations. Will the public demand that a halt be called in this annual waste until a scheme of national defense is provided for? Waste is criminal at this particular time, and preventable waste is destructive at all times.

It is the most logical, forceful, and important issue with which to fasten public attention. Other issues may have their day, but reckless waste in public funds will be suitably punished by those who contribute the funds when they discover official mismanagement. Great expenditures may be justified by governmental conditions, but waste is demoralizing to legislative methods and Treasury balances.

A FIGHT THAT WILL ULTIMATELY WIN.

As an economic issue the fight against the "pork barrel" must ultimately be successful, and I believe river waste ought to be settled outside of political parties or partisanship. Men here are as honest as in any other legislative body in the world, and no man will seriously seek to draw distinctions between the honesty of Republican and Democratic Members; but a vicious system has been fastened upon us by the Army Engineer Corps and partially by congressional yielding to the influence of powerful lobbies and mistaken constituencies.

If we face the issue squarely, we will remove the waterway question from political pull as we have removed the railway question from congressional influence. No plan can be devised that will be perfect, but while the American people demand of Congress genuine comprehensive improvement of legitimate waterways, they also demand the abolishment of a miserable makeship that has its lowest and worst form of development in our annual "pork barrels."

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

I have presented these matters in a hurried way, and now, as promised, I am ready to answer the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SWITZER] and, after him, other gentlemen who may desire to ask questions.

Mr. SWITZER. The gentleman from Wisconsin has criticized the Board of Army Engineers for allotting money to projects which he claims were criticized by some Members in the last session of Congress. I will ask him this question: The Board of Army Engineers have expert knowledge on these matters, and when they recommend certain appropriations to be made, and such confidence is reposed in them by the Members of this House that a majority of the membership vote them full authority to make the allotment, and those propositions are also indorsed by the Senate, does the gentleman believe that the Board of Army Engineers should then disregard their honest expert judgment and disregard the indorsements of a majority of the Members of both Houses, and that they should not expend this money according to their judgment and according to the way a majority of the Members of both Houses have voted, but that they should expend it according to the way a minority desire in their criticisms?

Mr. FREAR. Is that the end of the question?

Mr. SWITZER. Does the gentleman believe they should follow their honest judgment, or does he believe that they should refuse to allot money to projects which have been criticized by a mere handful of the membership of this House?

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman take his seat now and let me answer that question? Let me say, in response to that, the Army engineers have recommended what purports to be $100,000,000 for the Ohio River project, which is one of the most wasteful projects of all, and so declared by a Senator in the Senate last session.

Mr. SWITZER again rose.

Mr. FREAR. I must object to any more such questions. I told the gentleman I would answer his question. I will give him the statistics. If he will read an analysis of the statistics which I will present he will find that there are not 2,000,000 tons of continuous traffic on the Ohio River. You can not get away from the fact. Of course, the Army engineers desire to follow out the wishes of Congress. I wish I could tell you something that was told me in confidence by an Army engineer, but I have no right; but I know this, that under this present law the board is reported to be desirous of rejecting 25 per cent of the projects that are to-day in existence; and I believe that one of the best and most profitable investments of the Government would be to do away with the Ohio River canalization project on a river that has already had $57,000,000 out of a possible $100,000,000 investment.

Mr. SWITZER. I should like to have the gentleman answer the question I was asking about the Board of Army Engineers, not the Ohio River.

Mr. FREAR. I speak of the Board of Army Engineers and the Chief of Engineers and all of them as being only too willing to carry out what they think to be the wishes of Members of Congress. I assume that that is so. That is a weakness of the system.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. FREAR. I do.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman from Wisconsin refers to a resolution which he has introduced calling for an investigation of the so-called waterway lobby. I assume that he has included in that the National River and Harbor Congress?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. And possibly all local bodies. I want to say to him that if he thinks he ought to have an investigation I am not only glad to join him in having it, but that personally I have so much confidence in his fairness after he knows some of the facts that I would be glad to see him on that committee.

Mr. FREAR. That is very generous.

Mr. BORLAND. I would be glad to have him come to Kansas City and find out how much activity there is devoted to navigation and how much is devoted to reclamation. I think perhaps if he would do that he would revise his ideas.

Mr. FREAR. Just a moment to answer that, and then I will answer another question. At this point let me say that I will adopt as a complete answer to the gentleman's statement at this time, of the purpose of the Missouri River work, the fact that the last money recommended by engineers to be used by the Government on the Missouri River for 1915 was $1,400,000 for revetment purposes, which is necessary for reclamation, but only an incident to navigation.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Everybody who has any knowledge whatever on the subject knows that it will be impossible ever to make the Missouri River navigable, and insure a 6-foot channel from Kansas City to St. Louis, without revetting the banks. That stream runs through an alluvial country. The channel is shifting from time to time, and its channel never can be made permanent unless it is fixed by revetment. The people will do the leveeing and they will reclaim the land if the channel of that stream is once fixed, which can only be done by revetment. That has been demonstrated by 40 miles of work that was done more than 25 years ago.

Mr. FREAR. In reply to the gentleman, let me say that the best authority on river navigation who has faith, Mr. Barnhart, has built experimental barges on the Mississippi River, and he says he can run on that river to-day with 8 feet, which is an abundant depth for all purposes, but he says he can not get the commerce. It will not be given to him by shippers, because the railroads take all the business in spite of his offer. You have the railroads on both sides of the Missouri River, and you do not send any commerce down the river to St. Louis. Why? The question of terminals, of convenience, of transfers, and many other causes have entered into the loss of traffic on the Missouri, the Mississippi, and practically every other river in the country.

Mr. BORLAND, Mr. POU, and Mr. TREADWAY rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. FREAR. I yield first to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman's argument is based on the knowledge he has on the subject?

Mr. FREAR. I may have more knowledge than appears in the record—from those familiar with river traffic, from the official records, and from the judgment of many able men.

Mr. BORLAND. If the gentleman's knowledge appears to be imperfect, then we will have to judge of his argument on that basis.

Mr. FREAR. I will reply to any question. I do not care to have an argument.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman referred to 19,000 tons on the Missouri River in 1914. Where did the gentleman get those figures?

Mr. FREAR. By deducting from the report of the 1914 commerce on the river the sand and gravel and floatable wood.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the gentleman know that he is at least 50 per cent out of the way?

Mr. FREAR. I know that I am absolutely accurate, because I have made the calculation from tables I have submitted.

Mr. BORLAND. Has the gentleman ever read the engineers' report that he referred to, in which it is stated that it was 37,000 tons in 1913, and not 19,000 tons?

Mr. FREAR. I took the figures of the items that I have referred to from the last 1915 report. The only engineers' report submitted to Congress.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman is willing to stake his argument on the accuracy of that statement, is he?

Mr. FREAR. Unquestionably so.

Mr. BORLAND. All right. I want to get that in the RECORD.

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman has had it three or four times.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman divides the cost per ton into the construction charges of that river, does he?

Mr. FREAR. When you get $35,800,000 into the river, and then figure on 19,000 tons floated, you will have over $80 per ton annual charge.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman divides the construction charges per year by the amount of tonnage handled on a river in the course of construction.

Mr. FREAR. Oh, no.

Mr. BORLAND. Is that the method the gentleman would follow in building a railroad? If he had a railroad that was 9 per cent completed, according to the engineers' report, would he estimate the tonnage carried on the basis of the 9 per cent completed and divide it into the total cost of the railroad?

Mr. FREAR. When commerce was on the river before a dollar was ever spent on the Missouri, you had 295 boats, while to-day you have two boats of the steamboat line of Kansas City that have been referred to here, and that is practically all, as I understand it. Can anything be more significant? We have spent over $20,000,000 and now have 19,000 tons of freight annually to show for it. In all we will have spent $35,800,000, and for what?

Mr. BORLAND. One more question. Col. Deakyne's report shows——

Mr. FREAR. I have not seen it. It is not published.

Mr. BORLAND. He shows on the present project on the Missouri River there has been expended $3,577,000 between Kansas City and the mouth. Of this amount $300,000 was for maintenance and $600,000 for the construction of the plant, leaving $2,600,000, instead of $15,000,000, that the gentleman has been talking about. Did you not see that in the engineer's report?

Mr. FREAR. I have taken the Missouri River as a whole. That is all we have got to go by. You have practically no commerce on the river except a little at your particular point. I can not divide up the Missouri River commerce in sections, as to what goes over this part and what over that.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; you can.

Mr. FREAR. I have taken the information known to every member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and that is the basis of making a calculation which covers all funds and all commerce. The lower river recives 95 per cent of all funds.

Mr. POU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. POU. The gentleman stated that $853,000,000 had been appropriated, and that probably one-half of that had been wasted.

Mr. FREAR. I believe so.

Mr. POU. I would like to have the gentleman tell us how much of that enormous sum was appropriated and wasted while his party was in power and while the distinguished gentleman that he speaks of was at the head of the Rivers and Harbors Committee.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I have endeavored to avoid partisanship or politics in my remarks; but I will say this, that if your party—the Democratic Party—has the courage of its convictions, considering that the people of the North contribute 95 per cent of Federal taxes and are paying war taxes to-day, your party will pass in its caucus a resolution that there shall be no wasteful river and harbor bill in this Congress. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. PLATT. Did not the gentleman think it possible that the railroad rates could be so raised as to make these expensive river improvements——

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman asked that once before, last session, but that is merely speculative, as I understand the question.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman says that approximately $853,000,000 has been expended on river and harbor improvements in this country. Can the gentleman tell how much France has expended?

Mr. FREAR. No; but I trust France can make a better showing than we have.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It has expended several hundred millions. How much has Germany expended?

Mr. FREAR. I do not know exactly, but in the gentleman's own town, with less than a million dollars appropriation, there were 247,000 tons handled last year and only 19,000 on the Missouri River, after an expenditure of $21,000,000. I do not care what Russia or Africa or any other country expends, because this is an enormous accumulation of wasted money, which we condemn.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Certainly.

Mr. TREADWAY. I would like to ask if I understood the gentleman correctly that he would favor harbor improvements rather than river improvements?

Mr. FREAR. No; I favor harbor improvements where they are legitimate and river improvements where they are legitimate.

Mr. TREADWAY. Did I not understand the gentleman to say that only $135,000 had been given to Boston Harbor out of this late appropriation?

Mr. FREAR. You did.

Mr. TREADWAY. Is not the gentleman aware that the 35-foot project in Boston Harbor is practically completed and that this allotment of $135,000 is principally for maintenance?

Mr. FREAR. I understand so.

Mr. TREADWAY. Further than that, I would like to ask the gentleman if he considers Boston Harbor one which it is justifiable to spend money upon?

Mr. FREAR. Of course I do.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman join me in a well-directed effort to dredge a 40-foot project in Boston Harbor?

Mr. FREAR. I will consider the matter carefully, but I understand a Boston paper had a communication last year that the improvement was not necessary at this time.

Mr. TREADWAY. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks this matter is to be tried before the press of this country or by Congress here upon its merits?

Mr. FREAR. Oh, no; we will examine it and pass upon it after we hear the proposition.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. I am a new man, and I would like to have my mind clarified a little——

Mr. FREAR. I do not know that I could help to do that. [Laughter.] I know the fault would be mine if I failed.

Mr. DAVIS of Texas. Does not the gentleman feel that if the streams of this country are not kept as navigable streams, the great transportation monopoly of this country would absolutely absorb the country and throw it into distress?

Mr. FREAR. I say no; not for a moment. The intelligence of the American people has been such that they have passed an interstate-commerce law for the absolute control of interstate-railway rates. In the State of Texas you have one of the best State railway commissions in the country. It regulates freight rates, and if you attempt to lower the tariff below reasonable rates at waterway points, some one in the interior has to make up the difference, because railroads are entitled, under the Constitution, as every man knows, to reasonable rates.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to ask the gentleman if there is not a 9-foot channel in the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Ohio?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; there is.

Mr. CULLOP. And has been for years, which large boats could use at all times of the year. Now, has the commerce on that river been increased or decreased since that stage has been maintained?

Mr. FREAR. It has decreased about 95 per cent, and we have less than 200,000 tons of actual commerce annually, deducting the coal which floats down the Ohio, which has been previously counted on the Monongahela and on the Ohio at different locks.

Mr. CULLOP. Can the gentleman give the percentage of decrease?

Mr. FREAR. I will say that the general decrease is estimated at about 95 per cent on the upper Mississippi and the lower Mississippi is almost as much.

Mr. CULLOP. Has the number of craft using the river decreased yearly?

Mr. FREAR. In proportion to the commerce; yes. In other words, there is not a through boat from St. Louis to New Orleans to-day, or was not last year, whereas there were hundreds of them in the past.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Certainly.

Mr. SANFORD. Will the gentleman make clear to me what the nature of the remedy is that he proposes?

Mr. FREAR. I think a high-class commission of the character of the Interstate Commerce Commission, calling before it the best experts they could get, would take it away largely from the political influence now exerted. We are all human. I understand that. I do not discount for a moment the influences brought to bear here, or the integrity of every Member on the floor, but such a commission, like the Interstate Commerce Commission, would take away the actual pulling and hauling in the committee or on this floor, as we see it session after session.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask another question in regard to the charge that the railroads are opposing the improvement of the rivers because they will have a monopoly of the freight-carrying business in the event of failure to improve the rivers. Are not their transportation charges regulated now by the Interstate Commerce Commission in order that they may not charge anything they please, so far as interstate traffic is concerned?

Mr. BORLAND rose.

Mr. FREAR. Entirely so. I anticipated that that would bring up my friend from Missouri on the same argument that he made before, which was a very good argument, in which I was interested, but the law is unquestioned and the commission's authority is being constantly exercised.

Mr. BORLAND. Does not the gentleman know that the waterways are greater regulators than the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. CULLOP. And do not the States in their individual capacity pass laws regulating the traffic intrastate so as to avoid any monopoly there?

Mr. FREAR. They have done so in practically every State in the country, as I have suggested, and as I stated to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DAVIS], his State has one of the best commissions in the country.

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman is familiar with the fact that the 951-mile rail haul from Chicago or Milwaukee to New York is made for about the same price, having water competition, as three to four hundred miles in the Southwest.

Mr. FREAR. Oh, I wish I could enter into that, for I should be glad to furnish an answer to the gentleman.

Mr. BORLAND. Has not the gentleman enough information to state that?

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman from Missouri knows, of course, that ocean freight rates are lower from our country to Europe than proportionately on railroads for the same distance. But it is an entirely different proposition. Every man who has made a study of the transportation question knows the condition that exists on the rivers is entirely different from that which exists on the Great Lakes or the ocean, where you can use large boats and where the conditions are entirely different. The best authority in the country is agreed on the subject.

Mr. BORLAND. So that the gentleman's country has water competition and gets low freight rates?

Mr. FREAR. In cases like that, which are very exceptional, certain communities may have advantages through deep-water traffic, but it can not be stimulated on rivers under present conditions, either in the judgment of experts or in the light of past experience.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

A FEW ATTACHED EXHIBITS.

Defeat of a single project like the private water power Muscle Shoals $18,700,000 expenditure will pay for printing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD indefinitely, taking into consideration maintenance charges and interest. A defeat of several equally worthless projects now hammering at the Treasury doors will save many additional printing bills for a century to come. For this reason I am induced to present several significant exhibits and to attach a short proposed bill. I also desire to call attention to a discussion of financial problems confronting Congress which appeared in the December North American Review from the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, Mr. FITZGERALD. Therein he significantly says, "Probably the simplest work of public officials is devising popular ways to deplete the Treasury." He further suggests that the example of public officials is followed by private organizations and special interests now undertaking to finance countless projects, involving enormous appropriations at Government expense. His words invite the serious consideration of every legislator, for certainly a speaking acquaintance will never be established between Government expenditures and Government revenues until a control of the former is placed in the hands of some responsible body. With a budget system in mind, controlled by one committee, I have suggested a rough draft for a national waterway commission. The bill briefly refers to the commission all waterway projects in order to secure an overhauling of present unscientific and wasteful plans and to further work intelligently toward genuine waterway development. It also provides that at the beginning of each session all proposed expenditures shall be submitted to the Appropriations Committee for examination and approval.

A bill (H. R. 6821) creating a national waterway commission.

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the national waterway commission, hereafter referred to as the commission, which shall be composed of five commissioners, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than three of the commissioners shall be members of the same political party. The first commissioners appointed shall continue in office for terms of three, four, five, six, and seven years, respectively, from the date of the taking effect of this act, the term of each to be designated by the President, but their successors shall be appointed for terms of seven years, except that any person chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the commissioner whom he shall succeed. The commission shall choose a chairman from its own membership. No commissioner shall engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. Any commissioner may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office. A vacancy in the commission shall not impair the right of the remaining commissioners to exercise all the powers of the commission.

SEC. 2. That each commissioner shall receive an annual salary of $10,000, payable in the same manner as the judges of the courts of the United States. The commission shall appoint a secretary, who shall receive an annual salary of $5,000, payable in like manner. The commission shall have the authority to employ and fix the compensation of civil engineers, clerks, and other employees as it may from time to time find necessary for the proper performance of its duties and as may be from time to time appropriated by Congress, and in making appointments for continuous service the commission, so far as practicable, shall select its employees from the classified service.

All property of the United States in the hands or under the control of Army engineers or other officials or of private individuals or public contractors, including dredges, steamboats, barges, yards, and other property used in the improvement of public waterways, shall be placed under the jurisdiction and authority of the commission.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War may, if practicable, detail such Army engineers as are requested by the commission to assist in organizing and establishing a comprehensive system of waterway improvement, providing that such details of engineers shall not be made to the detriment of their military duties.

SEC. 4. That the commission shall have the authority and it shall be its duty to make an investigation of all waterway projects now constructed in whole or in part by Federal aid. The commission shall prepare a complete and succinct statement, by years, of the amount heretofore appropriated for each project, the estimated amount required to complete such project, a report of the commerce now served and to be served, the character of such commerce given by separate items so far as can be furnished, the source of information, the interests to be served, the kind of water craft used, and such other information as may be useful in determining the public use and value of the project. The commission shall also furnish Congress, at the earliest practicable date, information concerning all harbors and waterways now improved or being improved in whole or in part by Government aid, showing the amount of commerce, character of terminals or landings, ownership thereof, and, so far as practicable, ownership of regular lines of craft used thereon; and the commission shall also report its recommendations for the finishing of the projects now being constructed or modification of existing plans or abandonment of work on any project, together with findings upon which such recommendations are based.

The commission shall further ascertain and report what projects are now being improved for purposes other than navigation, and if for power development, a full statement of interests concerned, officers and stockholders, public use to be served, if any, private or public contribution toward expense of construction, and the commission's recommendations thereon. Said commission shall further ascertain and report what projects are now being carried on in whole or in part for land-reclamation purposes, the character of such project, amount of lands to be recovered, estimated value of such lands, ownership thereof, and contributions now being made by beneficiaries toward such expenditures, together with the commission's recommendations.

The commission shall make a full investigation into all work now being performed by the Mississippi River Commission, the amount of money heretofore expended on such river, character and permanency of work performed, and reclamation interests now being served, if there be any, a full statement of contributions by public or private interests toward said work, together with a comprehensive and intelligible report of the probable cost of the present plans of levee construction or other river improvement now being undertaken, the percentage of project completed, and this commission's recommendation thereon. Such Mississippi River report shall be separate and distinct from reports on other projects now under improvement by the Federal Government.

All of such data and all other available information of a pertinent character affecting particular projects or entire waterway improvements now being conducted by the Federal Government shall be collected in convenient form and presented to Congress in installments at the earliest practicable date.

When the commission shall have reason to believe at any time that the proposed project is not for general use of the public or will not warrant further expenditures, or if contributions shall be required to be furnished before further appropriations are made or further expenditures authorized, such commission shall immediately report to Congress, with a preliminary recommendation thereon, and shall furnish a copy thereof to the United States Treasurer. That thereupon, when so recommended, the Treasurer shall withhold all funds theretofore appropriated not specifically obligated under existing contracts and shall refuse further payments until subsequent and specific action shall be had thereon by Congress.

SEC. 5. That prior to the presentation of any new waterway project appropriations the commission shall cause a careful survey of the proposed improvement, and if it shall appear such project is to serve a public use and is feasible, the commission shall thereupon collate data showing the estimated cost thereof, commerce to be served, water craft to be used, public terminals furnished, and contributions recommended to be made by public or private interests, together with such additional data as has heretofore been specifically required to be furnished on existing projects. The commission shall thereupon transmit to the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives a full report concerning such new project or projects, its recommendations thereon, and, if requested so to do, all other and further information that may be required by the Committee on Appropriations.

Whenever the commission shall determine that any waterway project is primarily for power or land-reclamation purposes or to serve special interests, the commission may recommend Government aid for such project, notwithstanding the special interests to be served, and shall prepare data showing the proportionate amount of Federal aid recommended, together with suitable restrictions as to audit and payment of funds from the Public Treasury. Such recommendation shall be presented as a proposed separate bill to the Committee on Appropriations of the House and shall not be embodied in any general waterway appropriation bill by such committee.

Whenever any new survey shall be proposed for any waterway project the commission, prior to such survey, may require data to be furnished showing the public use and prospective commerce to be served and such other information as may be desired, and a brief synopsis of such information shall be furnished to Congress by the commission to accompany any recommendations made for new surveys.

All existing waterways, new projects, and new surveys shall be classified, so far as practicable, prior to each regular session of Congress, together with estimates of appropriations required for maintenance and improvement for the ensuing two-year period, and a brief report as to each project considered shall be separately prepared and, with the commission's recommendation thereon, shall be placed in the hands of the Committee on Appropriations of the House at the beginning of each session.

Whenever the Appropriations Committee so requires, the commission shall furnish additional data concerning any project, and shall further aid the Committee on Appropriations when requested so to do in the preparation of the regular river and harbor bill, which shall be prepared and presented by the Committee on Appropriations of the House.

The commission shall further compile and cause to be published at the earliest practicable date for the use of Congress an intelligent, concise statement of past waterway expenditures by the Government and of amounts needed to complete all continuing projects, and shall further give estimates of future obligations to be incurred by new projects recommended for construction. The commission shall give preference in its recommendations to Congress of appropriations needed to complete the more important projects, and, so far as practicable, shall enter upon a program looking toward the early completion of such projects.

The commission shall make a thorough investigation of reasons for loss of river traffic and shall make recommendations for the reestablishment of such traffic. It shall ascertain and determine the most available craft for river use, and, as soon as practicable, shall prepare plans and build experimental craft for such purpose.

Whenever reason therefor shall appear the commission may fix reasonable freight rates on all interstate water-borne traffic by common carrier and upon all such traffic on navigable waters wholly within the State, subject, however, to the jurisdiction now conferred by law on the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix maximum joint rates between and over rail and water lines.

The commission shall determine the reasonableness of wharfage or water-terminal charges, whether such terminals are owned by private persons or municipalities, and all river and harbor improvements, including terminal facilities, shall be under the supervision and control of the commission.

Whenever the commission shall determine that unprofitable railway freight tariffs are maintained in any given case in order to prevent waterway competition, it shall be the duty of the commission to make a report thereon in duplicate to the Interstate Commerce Commission and to Congress, with recommendations that Congress give power, if need be, to the Interstate Commerce Commission for fixing minimum railway rates.

The commission shall at the earliest practicable date adopt an intelligent system of natural waterway improvement and shall perform such other and further duties as may present themselves from time to time.

Whenever it shall be desirable to secure sworn testimony from any witness or witnesses relating to any project or to navigation generally, or whenever the commission shall have reason to believe that private interests are secretly or improperly seeking to influence the commission or to force the passage of any private or public waterway measure through Congress, the commission may cause a hearing or summary investigation to be held, and for that purpose may issue summons, subpœnas, or other writs in the same manner and under the same procedure as is more specifically set forth in the act to regulate commerce approved February 4, 1887, and the amendments thereto, which portions of such act relating to procedure, so far as applicable, are made a part of this act, and may bring before such commission all parties believed to be informed concerning the facts or interested in the passage of such measure. A complete record shall be preserved of the testimony taken at such hearing and a certified transcript thereof shall be transmitted immediately to the Committee on Appropriations.

SEC. 6. That all unexpended balances to the credit of any project not specifically obligated under existing contracts shall, from the date of the passage of this act, be transferred by the Treasurer to the general fund, and all vouchers thereafter paid by the Treasurer shall be upon order of the national waterway commission.

SEC. 7. That the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury, to carry out the provisions of this act.

EXHIBIT No. 3.

A GREAT ECONOMIC PROBLEM.

Practically $150,000,000 has been spent on the entire Mississippi River by the Government. During that same period the loss to actual river commerce has reached approximately 95 per cent. Every waterway bill gives from five to ten million dollars or more for the Mississippi, and about 80 per cent of this amount goes to the lower portion of the river, due to the potent influence of the levee lobby.

The great State of Illinois with its 600-mile Mississippi River border extends along one-third of the river's navigable length, and I quote from one of the world's greatest newspapers, the Chicago Tribune, November 26, 1915, an editorial which gives wholesome advice and warning as to this waterway:

A FORCE THAT GREETS A HALF MILLION DAILY READERS—PORK AND THE LOWER MISSISSIPPI.

It is reported that Representatives of the States along the lower Mississippi, headed, of course, by Senator RANSDELL, of Louisiana, hitherto one of the mainstays of the rivers and harbors pork barrel system, will attempt to segregate appropriations for the Mississippi from other rivers and harbors appropriations.

The proponents of the plan feel that the claims of the Mississippi for Federal aid are discredited by association with such projects as digging out the Kissimmee or Coosa for mythical fleets to navigate.

Senator RANSDELL and his associates are tardily arrived at this conclusion, which in a broader form has been pressed upon them by enemies of the log-rolling system. Legitimate river and harbor improvement can not be injured by the attack upon the monstrous outrage which the rivers and harbors lobby and shortsighted or wrong-headed Congressmen have defended and are defending so stubbornly. That is perfectly clear, but it has been one of the sinister aspects of the fight that responsible Members of Congress as well as the organized lobby have tried to make the assault upon a vicious system and its wholesale waste appear to be an attack upon great beneficient public works. The inevitable inference from this is that the innocent were inextricably allied with the guilty, the builders with the wasters.

The sooner this folly is ended the better for those who have legitimate demands to press, and we hope the report referred to above is a sign of approaching candor and public spirit.

So far Senator RANSDELL and his associates have moved forward. But they have not gone far enough. Let us have a little more plain talking.

What the States of the lower Mississippi littoral are after is not navigation, but flood protection. So far as navigation is concerned there will be no more if the channel is dug a mile deep. There is channel enough now. What is needed for its utilization is a development of terminals and an enforced coordination of rail and water facilities, including rate arrangements. Appropriating millions for dredging and levee making will not accomplish this, though it may be profitable as congressional pork and a relief of the local pocketbook.

The reluctance of representatives of the littoral States to admit this is easily enough understood, because the case for Government aid for levee work is not as strong as it might be. The denizens of the river country have no more right to ask the Nation to preserve them from the normal incidents or processes of nature in their region than denizens of mountain country have to call upon the Nation to protect them from avalanches and landslides, or of prairie regions to save them from high winds or droughts.

That is, they would have no better claim if conditions were left as normal. But the conditions confronting the lower Mississippi States are not altogether normal. Undoubtedly there always have been floods and overflown bottom lands in that region, and to that extent, if it could be measured, the floods would be a condition for local agencies to deal with. But the Mississippi floods in our day are in some measure the result of the artificial drainage developed in the upper valley States, where lands are drained and swamps and lakes reclaimed and forests cut down, with the result that the tributary waters of the Mississippi system are not released as gradually as they were under primitive conditions, but are poured into the main channel in overwhelming quantity in the spring.

There is, therefore, an unescapable justice in the claim that the States affected by these abnormal floods should be assisted from the general funds in a fair proportion as between local and national responsibilities.

But if this reasoning supports reasonable claims for Government aid to the lower Mississippi, it also presents the controlling fact that the Mississippi problem is one which can not be solved in detail and should not be dealt with in sections as at present. Under the present wasteful system the Southern States are given money to spend on local expedients which mitigate the flood evil but do not affect it permanently. This system, or want of system, should be done away with, and if Senator RANSDELL and his associates are farseeing they will work against log rolling and the pork-barrel evil which discredit all rivers and harbors appropriation in the minds of a rapidly growing number of Americans, and they will work openly, sincerely, and vigorously for a commission of the highest character to study the total problem of the Mississippi drainage.

Until such a commission has been created, has made an exhaustive study of the many-sided problem, and reported, no more money should be spent upon the Mississippi or its confluents than is necessary for urgent needs.

The problem of the Mississippi is one of the greatest constructive physical problems of the Nation, past, present, and future. Have we not intelligence enough to free its solution from petty local selfishness and greed and approach it now in a broad and fundamental way?

EXHIBIT No. 4.

[From Collier's National Weekly, Jan. 8, 1916.]

A VOICE HEARD AROUND THE WORLD—SMASH THE RIVER BARREL.

To Senator RANSDELL, of Louisiana, and his fellow backers of the new $46,000,000 waterway bill, "pork barrel" is one of the ugliest terms ever spoken or printed. Nearly all of the 20 or more speeches delivered at Washington at this winter's meeting of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, of which Senator RANSDELL is president, were vehement denials that the annual bill is a wasteful, log-rolled measure. The Louisiana Senator, in an interview, characterized the charge that the old system is a pork barrel as "a slanderous accusation as false as Satan himself." Yet the Senator, being somewhat of a specialist in river legislation, can hardly fail to remember the Hennepin Canal project. After being told that this canal, which gives Chicago, on the Great Lakes, connection with the Mississippi, would surely save shippers from fifteen to twenty million dollars a year, the Government dug it at a cost of $7,401,100. The work was completed in 1909, and in 1914, the last year of which we have an official record, the traffic, hauled an average of 50 miles, was 26,856 tons, only 12,222 tons of which was commercial freight. Interest on the investment and maintenance amounted to $512,520, so for every ton of commerce shipped on the canal the people were out $41.93—40 times the corresponding rate charged by Middle Western railroads. Here are the facts about one waterway failure. We could tell of scores of equally wasteful projects—jobs that never could have been shoved through Congress as separate measures. There are about 250 items in the new river pork barrel, and probably less than 30 of them would have a ghost of a chance if submitted singly. The pork system is pretty near the most insidious force in our National Government. Its wastage on waterways has been nearly $500,000,000—and that is a modest beginning. Congress must abolish the barrel and place the problem of river and harbor improvements in the hands of an appointive commission, as far removed as possible from log-rolling influences.

EXHIBIT No. 5.

FIVE BILLION DOLLARS WANTED BY THOMPSON.

Inspired articles are furnished the press throughout the year by the "mutual-bribery" river lobby, but discriminating newsgatherers are rarely misled. I quote from a recent clipping that advocates a bulwark of public defense built out of pork barrels:

[By John Edwin Nevin, staff correspondent of the I. N. S.]

WASHINGTON, November 20.

Advocates of continued expenditures for river and harbor work do not intend to permit their projects to be sidetracked by the administration's preparedness program in Congress. They made it very plain to-day that they will fight hard to continue all projects now in progress. To do this they will endeavor to couple this improvement work with the preparedness plans. The "pork barrel," according to its friends who now are gathering here, instead of being a medium of waste of public funds in reality is a "bulwark of defense."

S. A. Thompson, secretary of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress, who is here arranging for the meetings of the organization next month, issued a statement to-day designed to show that Germany's extraordinary efficiency in present world war is due as much to her ability to move troops quickly by her elaborate system of waterways as to her railways.

So important is the waterways improvement work considered, Thompson said, that the German Emperor has not permitted this work to slacken, despite the stress of the war.

The National Rivers and Harbors Congress will approve for presentation to Congress when it meets figures which it is claimed will show that should this Government provide a "pork barrel" of $5,000,000,000 to be expended on waterways improvements and the deepening of important harbors it would then hardly be abreast of Prussia in comparison to the relative size of the countries.

According to Thompson the congress plans a spirited fight to prevent the Nation-wide movement for military and naval preparedness forestalling liberal river and harbor appropriations. The slogan is to be that the improvements suggested are a part and parcel of any national preparedness program. Meanwhile, it already is certain that the diversified interests which will demand appropriations will be the chief danger to the administration defense plans.

"DAM MUSCLE SHOALS."

A large and vigorous lobby is expected to remain in Washington to put through this particular project, which was stricken from the last House bill, but reinserted before the bill was reported to the Senate for its deserved slaughter.

With $18,700,000 of public money at stake to aid the Alabama Power Co.'s private water-power scheme, it is not surprising that the lobby is here and expects to remain here. A congressional investigation of its methods and widespread influence would put to blush the insignificant record of a certain distinguished Col. Mulhall, whose efforts were amateurish in comparison. Practically four pages of news items in the Huntsville Times of May 12 last are devoted to the Rivers and Harbors Committee's visit to this water-power project. Over every page in striking black leaded headlines appears the sentiment, "Dam Muscle Shoals."

Patient taxpayers who have been contributing $4,550,000 in Government money during the past few years to stimulate "navigation" for 6,000 tons annually at Muscle Shoals, will be inclined to join in the sentiment, so imperfectly spelled, particularly upon learning that nearly $19,000,000 more, recommended by engineers, is now demanded by the lobby.

A HUMAN DICTOGRAPH WITH MOVIE ATTACHMENT.

During last summer the Alabama Water Power Co., with its associated membership, was host to thousands of visitors, including a few congressional guests.

After the latter had become reasonably inspired by their surroundings, and roast ox, all legislators, together with prominent railway officials, while yet in a grateful and joyous mood, were urged to express themselves before the multitude.

Glancing over an elegant publication recently put out by the power-company lobby, an observing wag said:

Isn't it a system? All caught in the act. First urged to speak and then photographed in the act with nine different stars all speaking on the same page and platform. Then the human dictograph, the Huntsville Times, overhears admissions of its guests and duly records the same for future use. Photographed and dictographed in one act; what a system.

The Tennessee River Improvement Association is the name under which the lobby sent out invitations and financed traveling expenses and entertainment on the occasion of the visit. I quote literally a few headlines and utterances which were considerately sent me:

EXHIBIT No. 6.

COL. PATTEN'S GREAT ADDRESS.

Preferring to confine himself to statistical facts, Col. John A. Patten, of Chattanooga, and president of the Tennessee River Improvement Association, read his address, which dealt mainly with the great transportation system to be brought about by the development of Muscle Shoals. Mr. Patten's address was a masterpiece and will prove of great value in convincing Congress of the worthiness of the Muscle Shoals proposition.

With the crowd in good swing and Warrior's water powers literally "damned," a distinguished speaker promises to put through the Muscle Shoals $18,700,000 water-power grab. It is easy after one knows how. Again quoting:

SENATOR ——— SPEAKS.

Capt. Ashcraft already had the big crowd in good swing and happy mood for the speaking hours, and presented Senator ——— for the next speech. Senator ——— spoke of his long and untiring friendship for the waterways of Alabama, and now that he had damned the Warrior he is ready to take hold of the Tennessee and put it through. Much applause followed this declaration. Concluding his speech, Senator ——— was requested to present the other speakers of the evening, which he did in the following order:

SPARKMAN SPEAKS.

The first of the visitors to be presented was Representative SPARKMAN, of Florida, chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. Mr. SPARKMAN declared that he was openly in favor of the project, which, he said, is worthy of the consideration of the best thought of America. He stated further that the companion project, that of the manufacture of water power, should also appeal to Congress with considerable force. He concluded by paying compliments to Senator BANKHEAD, and said that the fuller improvement and development of the Tennessee was the only task which confronted the Senator 20 years ago which is now completed.

A vigorous champion of the Kissimmee River, eight months dry during the year, according to Engineer's report, was also eloquently impressed.

FAVORS PROJECT.

Senator ———, of Florida, acting chairman of the Committee on Commerce, expressed himself as an advocate of the project. "I am in favor," he said, "of unchaining the power which lies latent in the shoals and which is capable of making additions to your wealth and power undreamed of and transforming this section into the greatest manufacturing area in America. The only obstacle is more ways and means, and we hope that this will ultimately be removed."

FAVORED UNDERWOOD.

Representative GALLAGHER, of Illinois, declared that the enthusiasm of the people of the Tennessee Valley was equal to that of his own exerted two years ago in the presidential aspirations of OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD. He spoke in favor of the project and expressed the hope that the people would convince all the members of the committees of Congress.

Railroads are not scared. A score of officials join in the barbecue and laugh at competition. Again quoting:

SOUTHERN'S PRESIDENT WITH US.

Fairfax Harrison, president of the Southern Railway Co., related the fact that the Southern was started by Alabamians in a determined effort to obviate the impossibility of getting a boat beyond Muscle Shoals. He declared that it was not his policy to beat down possible competition before it got on its feet; that he welcomed the prospective competition of the Tennessee River; and that he was sportsman enough to cooperate in the completion of the plans.

The "competition" reached 5,800 tons in 1913, after an expenditure of $4,500,000 at Muscle Shoals.

OHIO CONGRESSMAN O. K.

Representative SWITZER, of Ohio, declared that, inasmuch as the Government had been liberal enough to appropriate $77,000,000 in the interest of the Ohio River, that he would of necessity favor the project of the people of the Tennessee Valley. Representative BOOHER, of Missouri, declared that his position regarding the improvement of the Tennessee was recorded in his vote.

SENATOR ——— ENTHUSIASTIC.

Senator ———, of Louisiana, declared that, while his investigation had given him new instruction, it had not converted him. "For," he naively added, "I was already converted. As a matter of fact, I have followed Senator BANKHEAD'S lead so long that I have come to consider my action in that respect as a matter of course."

President Wilson is quoted by able authority:

ADAMSON, OF GEORGIA, SPEAKS.

Representative ADAMSON, of Georgia, chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, urged that the people of all the State rise up and destroy the obstructionist. He declared that there were Members of Congress who protested against the Government doing its own work, against the Government permitting a State to do the work, and against the Government joining hands with an individual or a corporation and doing the work. He declared, however, that President Wilson, whom he declared to be the biggest man who ever sat in the President's chair, would lend his influence, and that as a result a bill would be passed permitting the conservative cooperation of the Government and an individual company.

TEXAS CONGRESSMAN TALKS.

Representative BURGESS, of Texas, declared that he was an advocate of the elimination of Muscle Shoals prior to his coming to Alabama.

"What I have seen," he said, "has only served to strengthen my convictions. Our engineers compose the ablest body of engineers in the world, and in their enthusiastic recommendation of this project and in the enthusiastic campaign of the people of Alabama I join most heartily."

Representative BURGESS, continuing his speech, declared that the one great problem before the American people was not war or tariff or finance, but transportation. He added that it was his purpose to do everything which would cause the South to blossom like the rose, and that in his dream he beheld this section the most prosperous section of a prosperous Nation, and that the solution of the problem of waterway transportation would be the cause of that dream being realized.

WE "SHOWED" THE MISSOURIAN.

Congressman BOOHER, of Savannah, Mo., said he was one of the fellows that had to be shown, but having been convinced before he got here, he was quick to see the wonderful possibilities of Muscle Shoals and would support and work for it henceforth.

SENATOR ——— SPEAKS.

The Senator from Alabama made a favorable speech and was greeted by liberal applause. The Senator, of course, reaffirmed his loyalty to Alabama and how it is possible to carry great projects like this through to success. A great friend of the Tennessee is the Senator, who concluded by saying enough cyanamid could be produced at Muscle Shoals within one year to pay for its entire development.

SOUTHERN RAILWAY PARTY.

The Southern Railway Co. operated a special train to the occasion bearing the following executive officers, all of whom have avowed their cordial and hearty cooperation and sympathy with this great project. * * *

Then follows a long list of prominent railway officials who fervently desire to increase "navigation" and "competition" on the Tennessee and so join in the celebration of proposed railway competition.

TALKS OF BOND ISSUE.

What! Vote for a bond issue to pay debts of the State brought about in a great degree by extravagance and graft? Not with us, if our heads keep level. What could it do but put us in debt and cause our taxes to increase more and more. Our plans rather should be to do away with those unnecessary offices now leaches in the public crib and stop so much leakage by way of graft and embezzlement. (Enterprise Ledger.)

This last article sounds disjointed, but it is copied from the editorial page of the same issue of the Huntsville paper. It is here inserted because apparently a ray of economic sunshine has penetrated into the sanctum of the Enterprise publication, but possibly getting money from the Government is not entitled to the same reasoning as that so graphically set forth by the Enterprise editor and quoted apparently with approval by the Huntsville paper.

MORE INFORMATION FROM THE SAME PAPER.

A few suggestions from the same issue occur on the duty of the Federal Congress toward the Alabama Power Co. No mention is made of the fact that a defective tariff producer, bearing the name of a distinguished Alabama statesman, makes larger war taxes necessary if we are to continue water-power missionary work in that State.

Again quoting:

TENNESSEE RIVER IMPROVEMENT AND A FEW FACTS.

The Federal Government assumed the work of improving the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals in 1828, relieving the State of Alabama of the work which had been undertaken in a small way. * * *

Senator Burton estimates the Government's expenditures on Muscle Shoals at $4,555,655.

There has been expended on this project by the Federal Government nearly $3,200,000. Had it been completed in 1835, istead of 1890, some good might have been derived from this large outlay of money, but the plan was proved obsolete before the project was completed. * * *

This criticism can be lodged against scores of engineering projects.

$84,000 PER MILE FOR THE OHIO.

The Government has expended for improvements on the Ohio River and headwater tributaries $81,141,719. For the Tennessee, $110,603,337. An average per mile, for the Ohio, of $84,000, and for the Tennessee less than $15,000. * * *

ENGINEERS RECOMMEND PROPOSITION.

The chief engineers of the United States Army, the greatest and most competent in the world, have said the project is practical, feasible, and good. They are the captains, the final judges to make the decision. This has been done and this people call upon Congress to say amen to it.

The enthusiastic invitation for this visitation was accepted and in good faith all are happy. The Committee of Commerce of the United States Senate was there; the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the National House lent their presence; prominent Representatives in Congress from Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee, and other States were on hand to lend their cooperation, as were members of the legislatures of these States; various other public officials and the public came and made the occasion memorable for future posterity.

The Muscle Shoals project having been recommended for congressional adoption by the United States engineers, it was very appropriate, of course, for the keynote of the occasion to be "dam Muscle Shoals and dam it now."

NINE STATES ACTIVELY INTERESTED.

The Tennessee River Improvement Association made it known to its guests that the citizens of nine States within the vast drainage area of the Tennessee River earnestly desire the early completion and permanent improvement of the river's navigation.

Pledges of support from the visitors, as far as proper, were secured to the adoption of the project recommended by the Rivers and Harbors Committee in document No. 20, Sixty-third Congress, second session, and transmitted by the Chief of Engineers under date of May 18, 1914.

The visitors made a thorough examination of the merits of possibilities to commerce on the Tennessee River when that river's navigation is permanently improved and are now as enthusiastic boosters for the success of this great proposition as are people along the whole stretch of this great river.

Visitors appreciated the fact that the Tennessee River Improvement Association was not seeking to find the cause for discrimination in congressional appropriation in favor of the Ohio as against the Tennessee River and between the Tennessee and the Warrior, but whatever the discrimination they are not due to respective capacities of these rivers. The Tennessee wins in future.

WILL ADOPT REPORT.

With many of the members of the Senate Committee on Commerce and the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors making a personal inspection of the Tennessee River, they feel confident that they will create sufficient interest to secure the adoption of the engineer's report providing for the development of the Tennessee River, which calls for the opening of this river to navigation and the opening and development of the Muscle Shoals project, which has for the past half century been the dream of the people of the Tennessee Valley section of the State.

These people believe that at last their dream is about to come true. In every way they are showing their interest in this great project.

Will their dream come true? Will the public purse give $18,700,000 to this Alabama water-power company? The people of the Tennessee Valley are not dreaming, but a few interested parties are hypnotizing the press, the public, and possibly Congress with a scandalous proposition that will become a nightmare to the party in power if once adopted.

EXHIBIT NO. 7.

A STRAW AS TO THE NEXT BILL.

From a press clipping widely copied throughout the country I quote with headlines appearing in the conservative Washington Star, of December 23, 1915, omitting many additional projects mentioned in the article that only serve to help make up a "staggering" aggregate:

[From the Washington Star, Dec. 23, 1915.]

DEMAND IN HOUSE FOR "PORK" BILLS—COMMITTEE HEADS PLAN BOTH WATERWAYS AND PUBLIC BUILDING MEASURES—ARMY ENGINEERS FAVOR $120,000,000 PROJECTS—TENDENCY ON PART OF MEMBERS TO INSIST ON LIBERAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Despite prospects of a fight in Congress over revenue legislation and the pleas of party leaders for economies, Chairman SPARKMAN, of the House Rivers and Harbors Committee, is planning to report a general waterways bill, and there was talk to-day of the intention of the House Public Buildings Committee, headed by Representative CLARK of Florida, to report an omnibus building bill.

It developed to-day that when the Rivers and Harbors Committee meets after the holidays to determine its course there will be up for consideration favorable reports of the Army engineers on new projects aggregating about $120,000,000.

REQUESTS FLOOD COMMITTEE.

The committee is being flooded with requests of Members that projects in their States be taken care of, and these, together with other data and favorable reports of the War Department, will be filed away for consideration. The committee may decide to restrict the bill to continuation of projects already authorized; and if so, a contest likely will develop in the House on this issue. There is already evidence of an intention on the part of many Members to insist upon more liberal waterway appropriations.

There are numerous big projects on file, favorably reported on by the War Department. Some of these larger ones are:

CALL FOR MANY MILLIONS.

New York-Delaware Bay waterway, $20,000,000; Tennessee River, at Muscle Shoals, $18,701,000; East River and Hell Gate, N. Y., $13,400,000; waterway, Beaufort-St. Johns River, Fla., $14,400,000; Chesapeake and Delaware Canal, purchase and improvement, $8,000,000; Cumberland River, above Nashville, $4,500,000; Red River, La. and Ark., $6,020,000; Sacramento and San Joaquin Rivers, Cal., $5,860,000; waterway, St. George Sound to the Rio Grande River, $3,632,910.

Plans as to the most of these projects are for comparatively small initial appropriations, which, however, would commit the Government, in principle, to their ultimate completion.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I object to any unanimous consent being given at this time for that purpose. I desire to proceed with the business of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes and the gentleman from Oklahoma objects.

COAL AND OIL LEASES.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 406) to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium, and move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman calls up the bill (H. R. 406), and moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for its consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CULLOP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington, Mr. HUMPHREY.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the speech of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] and have no desire to take part in that controversy, except that there are certain statements he made in reference to the Government engineers that were not made clear, at least to me. I tried to understand the situation. I will ask the gentleman a question or two, because I think as a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee and a Member of this House there ought not to be any misunderstanding about these charges against the engineers. I do not think the gentleman intended there should be.

Mr. FREAR. Certainly not.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The first question I want to ask the gentleman is this: I understood him to say there was a report in regard to the Missouri River that he was unable to secure.

Mr. FREAR. That is right; I went to the Rivers and Harbors Committee and asked for it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Who did the gentleman ask?

Mr. FREAR. I asked the secretary.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The Chief of Engineers?

Mr. FREAR. No.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Did the gentleman ask a member of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors?

Mr. FREAR. No. I asked the secretary of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and he said it had been mislaid, and——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to ask the gentleman——

Mr. FREAR. He said it was to be sent in later on.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman stated something about the Chief of Engineers in relation to the Falls Power Co.

Mr. FREAR. I read his statement to the Secretary of War.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. What was the gentleman's criticism there, that he had refused to pass on the development of the power?

Mr. FREAR. That he had refused to submit an estimate when requested to do so; that it was because of the urgency of improving other projects that ought to be cared for, and I made a comparison between Muscle Shoals and Great Falls.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Submitted an estimate for what?

Mr. FREAR. Of the expense of obtaining power or for developing the project.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Who asked him to make this?

Mr. FREAR. I think the Secretary of War. A letter was sent by him to the Secretary of War—I am not sure for whom the request came, but he refused to do it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It was not a matter of navigation?

Mr. FREAR. No; it was a matter of power production.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to get who was it that made the request.

Mr. FREAR. I think the District Commissioners. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] now says the commissioners made the request.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If it be true it was simply a power proposition, while these others were for the purpose of river and harbor improvements, I do not think any criticism would lie against the engineers for failure to go out and investigate for power purposes while these other improvements were under consideration. The question of water power is not the question with which Congress and the Government engineers have to do primarily.

Mr. FREAR. That is a matter of consideration. There is practically no navigation at Muscle Shoals, and never will be; yet $18,700,000 is demanded from the Government at that point.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I understood the gentleman to condemn in very striking terms the improvement upon the Ohio River——

Mr. FREAR. I did not enter fully upon it, as I did not have time.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I understood the gentleman to quote Mr. Burton upon the proposition. I would like to know whether Mr. Burton agrees with the gentleman as to the inadvisability of improving the Ohio River.

Mr. FREAR. I did not quote Senator Burton on the Ohio project. I would not want to say as to that, but I will say other Senators declared, on the floor of the Senate, it was the worst project in the bill, and I could give the gentlemen their names.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman is not prepared to say that Senator Burton, who has condemned so many of these projects——

Mr. FREAR. I do not condemn them——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman does not know whether or not Senator Burton condemned the Ohio River project, although he has condemned many others?

Mr. FREAR. I could not say.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. This is all I want to ask the gentleman.

Mr. FREAR. I did not want to be misunderstood, and I thank the gentleman for the opportunity to reply.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to say in regard to another criticism the gentleman made in reference to the engineers, he said that they had expended $2,000,000 upon projects which he claimed had been condemned by certain Members of the Senate.

Mr. FREAR. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I said they had allotted that money, two million five hundred thousand and some odd dollars.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I hardly think the gentleman's statement in that respect is a fair criticism, and I will tell him why. He does not point out or show what the $2,000,000 was for. Very likely a good portion of that $2,000,000 was expended in the preservation of work that was already under way. Probably a great deal of it was expended to prevent loss to the Government upon projects that were already constructed, and the fact that they requested the expenditure of $2,000,000 upon projects that some one might criticize upon the floor of Congress it seems to me is an unjust insinuation against the engineers. Now, the gentleman made another insinuation against the engineers that seems to me is without justification. He pointed out they had expended a great deal of money upon a certain river or project where the traffic was small, and, on the other hand, they had expended very few dollars upon the harbor of New York where the traffic was very great. Now, I do not think the gentleman ought to make that kind of a statement. He said he wanted to be fair, and I hope he did want to be fair; but that insinuation was wholly unfair. Why, you take the two great ports upon the Pacific—the port of San Francisco and the port of Seattle, the two greatest ports upon the Pacific Ocean—and not a single dollar was expended upon either one of them because it was not necessary. They did not ask that any money should be expended. You take some of the greatest harbors of the country, and not a single penny was expended upon them because it was not necessary. Now, because the engineers give money to some project that carries less tonnage than the New York project or the San Francisco project or the Seattle project is not any reason for criticism. I have been surprised——

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. Did the gentleman hear Mr. Hurlburt, of New York City, when he said how much money was needed for New York Harbor, and they could not get it because Congress refused, and the gentleman knows New York has been urging——

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I did not, but I am calling the attention of the gentleman directly along this line, that he points out an isolated fact and says there is one condition over here where there is a harbor that has a great traffic and has only a few dollars, and here is another that has less traffic and has so many dollars, and from these two disconnected facts wishes the House to believe that the engineers have done something wrong. Such argument is unwarranted and hardly conforms to the gentleman's oft-repeated statement that he wanted to be fair. Now there is one other statement which the gentleman constantly referred to. As a member of the committee, I will notice it for a moment.

He seems to be greatly distressed about some lobby. Now, I think there has been more demagogy about this question of lobby before Congress than any other one question, perhaps, that we have had. As a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, I want to get all the information I can from everybody about these projects, and I do not know where we are going to get the information about them except from people who know about them. I do not think that any man who wants to do exact justice by these projects and by the country objects to getting all the information he can from any source; and I think any man who is so weak that he is afraid he will be coerced by some lobby to vote money out of the Treasury unjustly is unfit to be a Member of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand it, the district engineers are appointed to furnish to the committees and to Congress reliable information as to the respective projects. Will the gentleman point out what is the need of any outside source of information, such as these congresses and others which he has referred to, if there are individual engineers to furnish Congress reliable information?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; I could point out strongly, I think, and satisfactorily to any reasonable mind, why it is necessary. We do not need any additional advice as far as the engineering problems are concerned. We are willing to follow the engineers, and we usually do. But when it comes to the other part of it, to the traffic, to the advantage it will be to the locality commercially and to the general conditions surrounding, I do not think that the Government engineer has any better judgment than some other intelligent citizens who live in that community and who know the conditions better than it is possible for him to know. The Government engineers go from place to place. They do not always stay in the same locality. And we want the people who live in the neighborhood of these improvements to come here and give us all the information they can as to the value from a commercial standpoint of these improvements.

Mr. Chairman, if I have any time left I will yield it back.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for one hour.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration (H. R. 406) is, with a few minor amendments, identical with the bill that passed this House September 23, 1914. It relates to coal. The first eight sections are devoted to coal, the next five sections to oil and gas, the next four sections to phosphates, and the next three sections to sodium and potassium, in the order mentioned. Fifty-three million acres of coal land have been withdrawn in the West and held under present withdrawals as the coal areas in the public ownership in the United States. Twenty-five million of the fifty-three million have been tested out, examined, and classified by the Geological Survey, and have been found to be definitely valuable for coal. A rough estimate of the amount of coal yet in public ownership in the United States, as made by the Geological Survey, is 10,000,000,000 tons of bituminous coal, 30,000,000,000 tons of semibituminous coal, 50,000,000,000 tons of lignite coal, making a total of about 450,000,000,000 tons of coal in the public-land States still owned by the Federal Government and about 150,000,000,000 tons, or one-fourth, in private ownership.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reading the gentleman's report I notice the figures he has just given, but found no reference as to the amount of anthracite coal that is now on the public domain and not appropriated.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not have that. I think there is a very little amount of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is, of course, some anthracite to be found in the Matanuska and Bering Sea coal fields.

Mr. FERRIS. This bill does not apply to Alaska on coal.

Mr. STAFFORD. It does not apply to Alaska, yet his report does give the total amount of coal not only in the United States but also in Alaska.

Mr. FERRIS. No. This is exclusive of Alaska. As the gentleman from Wisconsin will recall, we passed an Alaskan coal bill that became a law.

Mr. STAFFORD. I remember that.

Mr. FERRIS. So far as coal figures are concerned, this bill has no application to Alaska at all, and the tonnage I have quoted is exclusive of Alaska.

Prior to 1873 there was no coal law on the subject at all. Coal land went to patent as part of homesteads, different forms of homesteads, and went into private ownership, and have been sold and resold, and peddled about here and there, until 150,000,000,000 tons have gone into private ownership in that way. To show how some of the coal lands went, I will say that some of it went as part of railroad grants. Congress has in the past, under different grants, granted to railroads 159,125,734 acres of the public domain. Some of this has been proven valuable for coal, and some of it is being mined by the railroad companies, and in some cases the railroad owns both the mines and the transportation facilities, and it makes it extremely oppressive for those who burn coal to buy coal when the transportation lines own the production.

From March 3, 1873, to June 20, 1913, only 458 coal entries, aggregating 586,000 acres, have been made. As stated a moment ago, Alaska figures are not included at all, and the bill, so far as coal is concerned, has no application to Alaska.

Some of the objects of the bill, we think, are these: First, we believe it will open coal lands and bring some competition to the coal trusts and for the benefits of the public. Second, we attempt to, and we think we accomplish it, to divorce production from transportation, and I think that is a necessity that is recognized by all parties here in the House. Third, we think we bring about development of the millions of acres of coal land that are lying idle, at least some of them, and thereby reduce the price of coal to consumers, and thereby bring about development of the dormant mineral products of the earth, and thereby practice conservation and other uses.

We think we have a provision here that will bring about the better treatment of labor and that will improve labor conditions. Only last winter gentlemen will recall that out in Colorado and in other coal-mining sections we had a lot of labor troubles, and the militia were called out several times. We think we have placed some helpful provisions in the bill in that regard.

We believe that the bill will give an area large enough in the lease to enable a coal company to put up a plant and properly mine coal in an economical way, and we think it will be beneficial to practical development.

Mr. MADDEN. What area does the bill give for any one plant?

Mr. FERRIS. It allows a maximum of 2,560 acres. One of the great complaints against the present coal law is that under it they can not get an area large enough to justify the putting up of a plant that will produce coal economically.

We have a provision in the bill providing for the minimum royalty of 2 cents a ton. That, to one who had not thought of the subject, would seem an extremely low royalty. Of course, that is a minimum royalty, but even that will bring an enormous revenue into the Treasury, if it were applied to the General Treasury, or to the reclamation fund, to which the proceeds go in this instance. But the bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to go beyond 2 cents a ton when it is feasible and when the conditions warrant it.

The bill is not hatched up, of course, by the committee or by myself, but it was drawn and drafted by Secretary Lane, in the Department of the Interior, aided by the Geological Survey and by the Bureau of Mines, after consulting with coal people and going into the proposition in a far-reaching way; and the bill that we bring to you is the result of their labors and the result of our labors and of such investigations as we could make on it.

The bill is distinctively a leasing bill. It does not authorize the sale of the coal lands, although it does not repeal the existing law. For those who think the existing coal law is adequate, we do not repeal it, but leave it intact. But for those who believe in new and improved methods of development, we have prepared the bill to meet their view.

Members from the far West in good faith, I know, have asserted that this leasing makes Federal provinces out of the far Western States, and they speak of bureaucracy and all that sort of thing. I can not agree with them in their opposition, as to minerals. I do not agree now, and have not in the past agreed, to the leasing of agricultural lands of any sort. I believe the homestead laws ought to be extremely liberal, so that men can acquire lands for agricultural purposes, so that they can own them in fee as their own. But I do not think that rule ought to prevail as to minerals.

Is this proposition of leasing coal lands a new thing? Not at all. Nearly every civilized country in the world except our country has the leasing system. Let me name some countries that have it. They are Australia, New Zealand, Canada, and all the Provinces of Canada. These countries are very near to us; that is, close by. We have copies of their forms of lease, and statements of the methods followed in leasing. We do not have to go outside of our country to find ample precedent for the leasing of coal lands. For instance, the State of Colorado has a leasing law. That State leases its own coal lands. We have copies of their leases here. The genial gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] is the ranking member of my committee. Although I think he is opposed to a leasing law for the Federal Government, yet his own State administration, in his own State, leases its coal lands. Of course he has a perfect right to hold his view, but this is only a case of the Federal Government doing precisely what his own State is doing within the limits of the State.

As to the genial gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], whose face I do not for the moment see, but whose voice we often hear, this bill only does for the lands owned by the United States precisely what his State does for the lands owned by that State. They have a leasing law in Wyoming. I have copies of the leases which show that this law is more liberal than his State law is in that regard. But his hand is raised in protest here against the Government doing the very thing they do in his own State.

Then again, from the State of Idaho, we have on our committee the genial gentleman [Mr. SMITH] who does not agree with us on the leasing, yet in his own State, with the party, his own party, in power, there is a leasing law, and everybody stands by it and is for it.

Then again, from the State of Montana, we have a member on our committee and I believe he does agree with us, and his State has a leasing law. The State of New Mexico also has a leasing law, and the State of North Dakota has a leasing law; and the State from which the distinguished gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] comes has a leasing law, and that State leases its coal lands.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. But it is not a long-distance leasing law. You do not have to go 4,000 miles to confer with the officials having charge of the matter.

Mr. FERRIS. I know that is true, but nevertheless the State of Oregon is doing with respect to its own coal lands precisely what the Federal Government proposes to do with its coal lands, namely, to lease them and get a royalty from them and pay it into the reclamation fund to develop the West. We hear things said here with earnestness and apparent good faith which nevertheless, when analyzed and brought down to particular facts, do not pan out.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes, I will, in just a moment. The other day we had the water-power bill up, and the most vigorous and almost the only protest made against that bill was made by the genial gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. At the close of the debate, when the bill had passed almost by unanimous consent, the gentleman from Wyoming made his motion to recommit it and substitute his bill for ours. His bill contained a proposition—and I want the House to hear me on this, just to show what this condition is—the bill he offered in his motion fixes a minimum price of $1.25 an acre and a maximum price of $20 an acre, and directs the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of those lands at the best price. Now I do not believe that the gentleman from Wyoming can be sustained in Wyoming on the practice of selling water powers at a maximum of $20 an acre.

Let me quote from his bill; it is section 5 of the Mondell substitution:

That such right of way, occupation, and use as is in this act authorized is granted upon the condition that the grantee, its successors, or assigns shall pay to the United States Government the market value of all timber or wood cut or removed from any such right of way or reservoir site or adjacent lands at the time of cutting and before the removal thereof and as fixed by the Secretary of the Interior; also for all lands included within such areas or rights of way or reservoir sites, not less than $1.25 per acre nor more than $20 per acre, to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and paid at the time the map or maps provided in section 2 hereof are filed: Provided, That for rights of way exclusively for purposes of irrigation there shall be no charge imposed for material, earth, stone, or timber, or lands used.

I do not think anyone can defend such a bill. If any committee should ever report such a bill, it would be shot to pieces on this floor so even the author would not know or recognize it. The House will never agree to such a proposition. I do not believe there is a man anywhere who can sustain himself in his own State, where the people understand what he is doing, who is here, who will take a position of that sort. As between an intelligent leasing law and the sale of all the power sites in the United States at a maximum price of $20 an acre, as provided by the bill of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], I think the people of his State will take their choice on the right side if they have a chance to do it. So much is said to blind them and so little said to enlighten them. I do not fear the results of a just leasing law for coal and oil lands if the people can ever be made to understand it. It is to help them and benefit them. Members speak here as if some great wrong was to be ushered in on them. No such thing is either intended or accomplished.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I yield to the gentleman now.

Mr. MADDEN. How much will this coal land yield an acre at 2 cents an acre royalty?

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, no one knows. I gave the gentleman the figures—about 450,000,000,000 tons, all told, in public ownership. That is a rough estimate. No one knows how fast it will be mined. No one knows just what a single acre will produce.

Mr. MADDEN. You must know how many tons there are to an acre.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, no; no one knows that. Of course, there are estimates.

Mr. MADDEN. If you know the depth of the vein——

Mr. FERRIS. It varies. A vein might have 50,000 tons under one acre and there might be 2,000 tons of lignite under another acre, and another acre might have none at all. I do not pretend to know. My figures are in the aggregate, and are the best available figures.

Mr. MADDEN. It seems to me that these geologists in the Department of the Interior ought to be able to calculate with some accuracy about what the yield to the Government per acre is going to be under this leasing law.

Mr. FERRIS. They have classified about 25,000,000 acres. There are 53,000,000 acres withdrawn, and of that 53,000,000 acres some will not yield any coal at all. The coal is down under the ground. They have made rough estimates from borings as to the total amount of coal, and their estimate is that there are about 450,000,000,000 tons in Government ownership and about 150,000,000,000 tons in private ownership.

Mr. MADDEN. So the conclusion has been reached that 2 cents a ton would be a fair royalty?

Mr. FERRIS. No; that is the minimum. It may be more, but can not be less.

Mr. MADDEN. What would be the maximum?

Mr. FERRIS. There is no maximum. They can go above that as far as the conditions in each case warrant.

Mr. MADDEN. Some time ago, when these conservation bills were before the House, it was argued by some gentlemen that a dollar a ton royalty for this coal up in Alaska would be a very small royalty, and that it would yield a very large income to the Government. I am glad to see that gentlemen have come down from the clouds to the earth and to a place where they now believe that a reasonable royalty is what ought to be received.

Mr. CULLOP. Will the gentleman permit me to answer his question, or rather make a suggestion at this point?

Mr. FERRIS. Let me answer it first. No member of the committee who has given any attention to the subject, and no other gentleman who has given attention to it at all, has advocated a royalty of $1 a ton on coal. That would be preposterous. That is as much as the coal is worth all told at the mine.

Mr. MADDEN. And more, too.

Mr. CULLOP. The rule for ascertaining the amount of coal is 1,000 tons to the acre for each foot of thickness of the vein, so that a vein 5 feet thick would produce 5,000 tons of coal as you work the mine out from the shaft.

Mr. MADDEN. That would be $100 an acre, at 2 cents a ton.

Mr. CULLOP. Yes; and as you work it back, 800 tons more, which would make 1,800 tons in all to the acre for each foot of thickness. As you work a mine from the shaft out you leave nearly one-half of the coal, and when it is worked out to the limit of the lease or holding then it is worked back, or all taken out, and in this process of cleaning up it produces, as a rule, 800 tons more to each foot of thickness per acre, so that under that rule of measurement, which is regarded as a good one, there are 1,800 tons per acre to each foot of thickness, and a vein 5 feet thick would produce 9,000 tons, which, at 2 cents a ton royalty, would make $180 an acre; so that 2 cents a ton is a good royalty. Operators would hesitate to lease at that price per ton in producing fields. Such a royalty would be regarded high, and in developed fields if such a price could be secured it would be a splendid bargain. I should think if the Government can lease its coal lands at 2 cents a ton royalty it will be making a splendid bargain, and if it has the amount which the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] has just stated, it would in such event derive an enormous income from such a deal.

Mr. FERRIS. I am obliged to the gentleman for his statement. He has had more practical experience in coal than I have had, and I appreciate his answer and his helpful statement.

Mr. TILSON. Before the gentleman proceeds, will he allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. I notice that the words "qualified applicant" are frequently used in the bill. While I do not contemplate applying for any of this coal land, I should like to have the gentleman explain who are qualified to become applicants.

Mr. FERRIS. The first section states that plainly. If the gentleman will look at House bill 406, it lays down the qualifications "Any citizen of the United States or association of such persons, or any corporation organized under the laws of the United States."

Mr. TILSON. Is that all that is meant by "qualified applicant"?

Mr. FERRIS. That is all. We do not want to lease to foreigners. We do not want to leave the way open for some foreign concern to come in and lease our fuel supply, because at any time we may need our oil. For instance, our battleships use oil as a fuel, and we thought it well to require the application to be made by a home association, or by a citizen of the United States, rather than by some one outside.

Before I was interrupted I was giving some examples of countries that had a law like this and of States that had a law like this. Now I want to call attention to some leasing that is actually done by our own Government, where it is a success; and when I have shown cases where an absolute test is being made, where it has been proven to be workable by other countries and by States, and in this country by our own Government, it seems to me we have proven at least that the principle of the bill is correct.

All over my State they are leasing Indian oil lands. The Federal Government is doing it. The Federal Government is leasing Indian coal lands in my State—not all over the State, because the coal does not extend all over the State; but the Federal Government is leasing coal lands in my State and leasing oil lands in my State, and doing it successfully, and getting royalties for the Indians, and helping to make the Indian self-supporting. It is a success. It helps our State. It is not bureaucracy. It is not making a Federal province out of us. It is the thing to do. To be sure, the oil operators would like to have it without royalty. To be sure, they would like to be free from regulation. To be sure, they would like to own it free and get it without paying anything for it, but any sane man knows they can not get it, and neither can you Members from the West get all the "water powers," all the coal, all the oil, for nothing, and it is right that it is so.

It is said here that no one will develop under it, but that statement is not true. They do develop it, and the development has been so great under this law in my own State that we have a population as great as Kansas and greater than Arkansas, and we have not been a State but eight years.

Not only that, but the development has been so great that we have produced more oil than any State in the Union, and pretty nearly all of it is on leased land. I know that my good friends living in the sparsely settled States, like the gentleman from Colorado, our honored and trusted Member, Mr. TAYLOR, and others, think that they are right about it. I did feel disappointed the other day when the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who is the grand exalted bowwow of this whole movement out there, should offer a motion to recommit and put in $1.25 an acre as a minimum and $20 an acre as a maximum. Is that the program they offer? And why is it they think they have any reason to expect that anyone will support them? Tell me, what man in Wyoming wants a maximum price of $20 an acre? Tell me, who?

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. I would like to get the gentleman's notion of the advantage of the proposition of leasing over selling.

Mr. FERRIS. I will give it to the gentleman. If we sell the lands outright, as we did prior to 1873, they get into the hands of monopoly, the hands of the railroads who control the transportation, so that both production and transportation are in the hands of one corporation, and the corporation too often under this condition of affairs practices extortion on the consumer. They pay the Government nothing and they pay nothing toward irrigation or building up the State or the West. They only enrich their own pocketbooks, and so I say that the West is a greater loser under the proposition to sell than they would be to lease, and still a lot are protesting. I know that there has been some unintelligent administration of affairs in the West. Men through one cause and another have been sent out there who could not get along with the western people and the western conditions. They did not know how to handle matters out there, so that the people have decided that the Government employees are a lot of tenderfeet who do not know what they are doing.

I think the best thing that could be done, what the boys from the West ought to do, and I am a westerner myself, is to go to the heads of the departments and have them take or cull out the impracticable men in the service, in the Forestry Service, who are administering the forest and mineral lands illogically and not properly, and transfer them or put them into some work that they know something about. They should do that and then appoint some practical men who know how to handle the conditions in the West. I believe it would remove a lot of this protest by western people against the Government. The gentlemen from the West can never accomplish anything for the West or for their constituencies by teaching the people to hate their own Government. They will succeed in teaching them a lesson that they will have to reteach in later years. It is a mistake, and I hope the heads of the departments will help these Western States to that extent.

The legislation which we have prepared has the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, the head of the Interior Department; it bears the approval of Dr. George Otis Smith, the head of the Geological Survey, who has been in the department a long time; it bears the indorsement of the head of the Bureau of Mines and Mining, all of whom have sat with us and helped to write the different paragraphs, and they stand behind every line of it. We are bringing the project here with the support of the best men who have given a long, faithful, and earnest attention to it. It has been so carefully prepared and carefully considered. It is a well-considered bill and it will fill a long-felt want.

We have a provision in the bill that the railroads can only mine coal enough for their own use and none whatever for commercial purposes. We are undoubtedly right on that. It gives the railroads no control whatever over transportation. It does not give them control over the consuming public, nor allow them to control, first, the production, and second, transportation. As it is now, when they are allowed to control first the production and second transportation, it gives them both ends of the string, and the consuming public must suffer, must bare its own back, and take what comes if that condition prevails.

I have spent a little more time on the coal provisions than I intended to. I did not intend to make a speech this afternoon at all, but I have given a good deal of work to this matter this year and last year. We worked on this through the holidays. I will hurry along and present the committee's views on oil and gas.

There are approximately 5,000,000 acres of oil land in the United States that have been withdrawn by the Government which this bill will affect. No one knows how much there may be. There are 330,000,000 acres of unentered Government land out there. Of course you can not see oil on top of the ground. Nobody can see under the ground, and nobody knows how much more there may be; but the Geological Survey, which has made borings and tests and observations, say they have withdrawn 5,000,000 acres, and there are 5,000,000 acres of oil land out there. Oil and gas are now mined under the placer law where it is being mined at all. The placer law was intended to be applicable, in my opinion, to the mining of precious metals, such as the mining of gold and silver. It really has no application to the mining of oil and gas at all. It is totally out of place, totally nonworkable, and never should have been made applicable to oil. These are not my words; these are not alone my thoughts; but these are the thoughts of every department and of every man who has given earnest attention to it. Let me give you in a word how it works under the placer law. Eight men can associate themselves together and call themselves an oil company and take up 160 acres of land. That looks harmless on its face; and immediately thereafter they can take up another 160 acres, and another 160 acres, and so on indefinitely. Under that procedure we drew a system of dummy entries, we drew stool pigeons, we drew fraud, we drew every sort of procedure other than honorable, straightforward, understandable procedure, and the oil interests of the country and the people of the country and the Interior Department and all are asking Congress to pass a law that is applicable to the oil situation and remove the placer law, which every one admits is inequitable, inadequate, and no good. We have brought in a bill that we think accomplishes that. We have brought in a bill that authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to lease these lands and retain for the Government a royalty on the part of the thing produced. There is nothing harsh about that, nothing wrong about that, nothing new about that. It is precisely what a sensible man would do if he owned the land himself, precisely what the States are doing that do own the lands, and precisely what every civilized country that has oil land is doing, save our own. Then why all this furore and commotion against a law that has precedent on every hand and is practical to do this identical thing?

The States have it for their land; other countries have it for their land. We are proceeding in my own State of Oklahoma by the Federal Government issuing oil leases and developing oil under such a proposition as this, only the royalty goes to the Indian, it being Indian land. There are people who object to it. Of course oil men want the oil lands for nothing. I do not fall out with them personally, but some one must have the sturdiness, some one must have the earnestness to stand on the side of the Federal Government and see to it that the oil men and the people who are wanting more than they are entitled to do not always get it. Many of the oil operators in my State said when they first began to lease Indian lands, "Oh, this is a joke; it will not produce anything"; but nowhere has there been so much development as in my State under it. We have passed California; we have passed West Virginia; we have passed Pennsylvania, and all this under a leasing law. I merely mention this in anticipation of what the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], genial, earnest, logical speaker that he is, and my genial friend from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] will say to-morrow amidst great splendor. They will begin to talk about Federal provinces, bureaucracy, bureau control, long-range government. This is the best Government I ever lived under, and I am not going to teach my people to hate the Government. I am afraid these gentlemen, genial and lovable as they are, and our friends, are teaching a lesson to their people which they will have to unteach before they get through.

Some things we claim for this bill and which we think it will accomplish are, first, we think it will aid, by the strong arm of the Government, to prevent monopoly—not to abolish it. I wish we could abolish it, but I think we can not; but I think the strong arm of the Federal Government, through the Department of Justice and through the Interior Department and through holding on to leases, will in a measure hold up and work to control the monopoly that prevails in oil. The Supreme Court helped us a little last winter when it decided that pipe lines are common carriers.

This bill provides that no one can have a right of way over any public land until they submit to the proposition of being a common carrier. Because when the Standard Oil Co. owns both the production and the pipe lines, you and I have pretty difficult sledding to produce oil by their side. Second, we think it will insure competition. We have inducements in this bill that will cause prospecting by which we would get some competition in the oil business. We think we have provisions in here that will prevent speculation, from the fact that we issue a prospector's permit; and if they do not do their duty, or "tote fair," to use a slang expression, we can give it to another man who is acting in good faith. We have given ample protection to the prospector. We believe if we give him one-fourth of the area of the land and he discovers oil upon it, that is sufficient remuneration to him for the discovery. We do another thing. We believe that by retaining three-fourths of all the oil land and giving one-fourth to the prospector we will be able to control a sufficient supply for our Navy, which burns oil, and we may be able to take into our hands and into our own control a fuel supply that may or may not be necessary at any moment. I know of no reason why we ought to let our fuel supply get into the hands of a monopoly who can charge the Navy and our own Government an exorbitant price in buying it back from them when we have it in our own hand and can get hold of it at a reduced price or through royalties on our own property. We lease the oil lands for a term of 20 years. At the end of that time the Secretary can fix new conditions and new royalties and give a permanent right for 10 years more if it is so desired. We grant rights of way for pipe lines only in the event they become common carriers.

We think the bill is feasible; we think it is workable. We take the proceeds from these leases and put them in the reclamation fund, which is going to wither and die if something does not come to the rescue of it, because it has dwindled down so that last year we got only $3,000,000 from the sale of public lands to keep irrigation going. It had already dwindled down until the irrigators had to come in and borrow from the Federal Government $20,000,000, which the Government loaned them and which I think was right; and why the western people will come in here and fight a law that is trying to come to their rescue is more than I can understand. I know they say they want this land to go into private ownership. They say, "We want the taxes." I do not blame them for it. I live in a State where a great deal of the land is not paying taxes, because the Indians hold nontaxable trust patents for them. We are in a much worse shape in that way than these gentlemen; but the Indians were there first and they have some rights. The Government land was there first before these western people went there. Those States were admitted and an enabling act passed, and the constitution of every one of them accepted the terms of the enabling act, which reserved control and ownership of these lands, until the Federal Government decided to do something else with them.

I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma reserves the balance of his time, and the gentleman from California is recognized.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve my time so I may discuss a matter that is still before the committee before the matter is closed.

Mr. FERRIS. Debate is not closed.

Mr. RAKER. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not have to reserve it.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. FLOOD having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CULLOP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 406) to authorize exploration for and disposition of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, potassium, or sodium, and had directed him to report that it had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, it was not my purpose to trespass on the time and patience of the House in the discussion of the foreign war, but the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] the other day cast a reflection on our German citizens as a class, and I therefore feel impelled to resent his imputations against them. His criticism, I take it, was unjust and unmerited. Some few, because of their zeal, may merit his attack; but as a class it was uncalled for and unjustifiable, and the country will so consider it.

In the district which I have the honor to represent in Congress we have a large citizenship of German extraction, and I know of no more loyal, law-abiding, industrious people anywhere than they. They have done much for the upbuilding and progress of the country; they are law-abiding, industrious, and progressive. In their communities, I am proud to say, the very best conditions of local self-government prevail; their domestic facilities are models and their educational and religious opportunities are unsurpassed. They deserve credit for the high attainments they have secured and the splendid conditions they have brought about. They are loyal to the Government; they are Americans first and above all else and freely respond to every requirement imposed upon them as such. They have materially contributed to the advancement of our civilization, to the uplift of humanity, and to the development of the cause of liberty, and I do not hesitate to say here in their defense, if any is needed, that they are as loyal to the institutions of this country, as obedient to its laws, as liberal to maintain its honor and dignity as any class of people who live under its flag and profess allegiance to it.

Many of these people came from over the sea; came to make their homes here, to cast their fortunes with us, and I assert that when they took upon themselves the renouncement of their allegiance to the country of their nativity they fully understood the gravity of the obligation, and have fully kept the same, both in spirit and letter. I challenge the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], who has made the serious imputation of disloyalty, to make proof of his charge to the country. It is unfair to these people, who have done so much for the upbuilding of this country, for the promotion of the cause of liberty, of education, of religion, and its material welfare that it should go unchallenged. Doubtless with many of these people, as their minds go back to the fatherland, sweet memories of their childhood and relatives left behind are recalled, and these reflections arouse in them a warmth of feeling and ardor for their welfare, which is most natural. How could they divest themselves as human beings of such interest and affection? It would be unnatural if they did and reflect on the warmth of their disposition and want of affection.

No class of citizens who have taken up their abode in this country, who have cast their fortunes with it, who have sworn their allegiance to it, have been more faithful, loyal, and obedient than they, for which they deserve praise instead of censure. If some have not proven so, that fact furnishes no ground for attacking them as a class, and any such attack the people of the country will resent, and rebuke all who make it with the punishment it deserves.

The world is passing through a great crisis, the like of which history fails to record. This country is passing through a crisis which strains every undertaking of human endeavor and taxes the patience of the most heroic to maintain peace and sustain our commercial supremacy, to reconcile divergent opinions and conflicting interests. Duty demands that we appease passions and allay fears in order that harmony may prevail and all classes increase their loyal devotion to the institutions of our country and promote the common cause for which they were founded. Improper motives should not be attributed to good, loyal citizens which might tend to alienate their loyalty.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], if he will recur to the history of the German citizens in this country, will find that they have always responded to every demand made by this country from the time of the first settlement to the present hour, have contributed their means and manhood to its support, have defended it in time of war and assisted in its upbuilding in time of peace. Their contributions furnish a rich legacy to their people and an enduring monument to their patriotism. I commend their loyalty to the State and Nation and acknowledge their fealty for the upholding of our institutions and the upbuilding of the grandeur of the Republic. There was no foundation, in my judgment, for the attack made on this class of our citizens as a class; no proof has been furnished by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] to sustain his charge; and in behalf of those who live in my district and in my State, I resent it as an unfair imputation on their good name and fame and their unquestioned loyalty to the institutions of our Government, of which we are all justly proud.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Tuesday, January 11, 1916, at noon.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 11, 1916.

Rev. Boyd V. Switzer, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee with a grateful sense of appreciation for Thy wondrous providence over us throughout all the years of our national life. Do Thou, we beseech Thee, guide us still in the solution of the difficult problems of the present day, fraught with such tremendous issues for all the world. Give to Thy servants whom Thou hast called to such high positions of responsibility and trust wisdom, discernment, and courage, that they may be indeed servants of the Lord God Almighty, in the highest, truest, divinest sense colaborers together with Thee in the fulfillment of Thine own eternal plans for the human race. We ask it in Jesus' name. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Mr. BORAH. Out of order, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is going to make the statement that there is a rule of the Senate that no Senator while on the floor shall be interrupted for the purpose of introducing a bill or making a report. The Chair having made that statement, the bill will be received and referred.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I was going to say that I think that is a wise rule, and I withdraw the bill. I think the suggestion of the Vice President is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. But it is never obeyed. The bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 3404) for the relief of Gertrude Kelley Gilbert was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I offer an amendment to the pending Philippine government bill, which I send to the desk. I ask that the Secretary may read it and that it be printed and lie on the table until it can be reached for consideration in regular order.

The amendment was read and ordered to be printed and to lie on the table, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas to the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands, and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands, viz: Insert at the end of the bill the following:

"SEC. —. The President is hereby authorized and directed to withdraw and surrender all the supervision, jurisdiction, control, or sovereignty now possessed or exercised by the United States in or over the people and territory of the said Philippines, and he shall on behalf of the United States fully recognize the independence thereof as a separate and self-governing nation and the sovereignty and control over the same of the government instituted by the people thereof. This transfer of possession, sovereignty, and governmental control shall be completed and become absolute within two years from the date of the approval of this act, under the terms and in the manner hereinafter prescribed. For the purpose of a complete and prompt compliance with this direction, the President is hereby invested with full power and authority to make such orders and regulations and to enter into such negotiations with the authorities of said Philippines or others as may be necessary to finally settle and adjust all property rights and other relations as between the United States and the said Philippines, and to cause to be acknowledged, respected, and safeguarded all of the personal and property rights of citizens or corporations of the United States resident or engaged in business in said Philippines or having property interests therein. In any such settlement or adjustment so made in respect to the rights and property of the United States as against the said Philippines the President shall reserve or acquire such lands and rights and privileges appurtenant thereto as may, in his judgment, be required by the United States for naval bases and coaling stations within the territory of said Philippines.

"Immediately upon the passage of the act, the President shall invite the cooperation of the principal nations interested in the affairs of that part of the world in which the Philippines are located, in the form of a treaty or other character of binding agreement, whereby the cooperating nations shall mutually pledge themselves to recognize and respect the sovereignty and independence of the said Philippines, and likewise mutually obligating themselves, equally and not one primarily nor to any greater extent than another, to maintain as against external force the sovereignty of said Philippines for the period of five years from the taking effect of such treaty or agreement. If any of the nations so invited to join in such undertaking shall decline to do so, then the President shall include as parties to such convention or agreement such nations as may be willing to join therein and to assume such obligations; and if none are willing to so unite therein, then, the President is authorized to give such guaranty on behalf of the United States alone."

Mr. LEWIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands, which was read and ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

Amend Senate bill 381 by adding as a new section at the end of the bill the following:

"SEC. —. That there shall be vested in the President and by this act he is authorized to enter into any convention or agreement with the administration in power in the government of the Philippines for payment to the United States of such sum of money, and by such method of installment as may return to the United States the sums of money heretofore paid for and for the purposes and government of the Philippine Islands or such part of said sum expended by the Government of the United States as to the President of the United States shall under all the circumstances appear equitable."

FEDERAL JUDGES.

Mr. CUMMINS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 66), which was read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee of the Senate be directed to make inquiry and report: First, as to the number of Federal judges now holding office who are unable to discharge substantially the duties of a judge; second, whether, under the Constitution, such judges, if any, can be removed from office; third, if they can be so removed, what is the proper procedure.

COMMERCIAL FERTILIZERS AND COTTON PRODUCTION.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I submit a resolution which I ask may be read, and I will ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 65) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to ascertain as nearly as possible, and to report to the Senate as soon as practicable, the following: The amount of commercial potash, nitrogen, and phosphoric acid available for fertilizer purposes, and the price of each of these articles as compared with the prices for 1913; and to furnish any suggestions as to relieving the situation in case the amount of any or all of these is insufficient or the price prohibitive.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I think that my colleagues from a portion of the cotton-growing States at least will agree with me that the situation which confronts the cotton outlook for this year is perhaps the most serious that has been known since the Civil War. The extraordinary yield per acre and the amount that we have been producing have been almost entirely dependent upon the use of commercial fertilizers. That is particularly true of all the coastal plains of the South Atlantic States. Some investigation on my part has revealed a situation which shows not only in my opinion but in the opinion of those to whom I sent communications that, regardless of an increase in yield, the yield per acre next year will possibly be reduced one-half.

I have before me now telegrams in response to a telegram sent by me to bankers, merchants, farmers, and millmen, asking what, in their opinion, would be the effect upon the yield per acre if the present fertilizer situation is not relieved. In response to that telegram I have a few here that I desire to read and place in the RECORD. Here is a telegram from one of the largest cotton producers in my State:

WEDGEFIELD, S. C., January 10, 1916.

Senator E. D. SMITH,
Washington, D. C.:

Lack of potash will have disastrous effect on yield of cotton in this State following a year of depletion like last year. Conservative estimate of loss in productiveness will be 25 to 33⅓ per cent.

EUGENE E. AYCOCK.

I also have one from the secretary of the Commission of Agriculture of North Carolina. He estimates that without relief from this situation the yield per acre in North Carolina will be reduced to 250 pounds per acre.

From Alabama the ex-commissioner of agriculture telegraphs:

MONTGOMERY, ALA., January 8.

Senator E. D. SMITH,
Washington, D. C.:

Situation here gloomy on account boll weevil; fertilizers high; little credit; farmers demoralized. These conditions greater factor, in my judgment, than price of potash.

W. H. SEYMOUR.

Here is one from a banker in North Carolina:

CHADBOURNE, N. C., January 8, 1916.

Hon. E. D. SMITH,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Your wire this date. Unless potash is used in growing cotton I think yield will be reduced 20 per cent in this State. In addition to this, the high prices of phosphoric acid and ammoniates will largely reduce by use, and probably another 20 per cent reduction in yield will result.

J. A. BROWN.

I ask that the remainder of the telegrams which I have received may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

The telegrams are as follows:

NORFOLK, VA., January 11, 1916.

Senator E. D. SMITH,
Washington, D. C.:

Your telegram to our Columbia, S. C., office referred to us here. Due to uncertainty in getting nitrate soda from west coast of South America, we are not quoting. We quote muriate potash containing 50 units at $475 per ton. Our price for muriate in 1913 was $42 at port. Our price on 8–2–2 goods in 1913 was $20; our present price, $32. Sixteen per cent acid phosphate in 1913, price $13.25; 1916, price $18. These prices are delivered to interior railroad stations. Advance in ammoniated goods, due to increased price of potash to extent of $9.20 and increased cost of manufacturing sulphuric acid incident to very high freight rates on pyrites. If we were to charge for potash on the basis of present market price, the 2 per cent or potash alone would be $19. We are not quoting goods containing more than 1 per cent potash, except in bright tobacco belt. Entire stock of potash in this country is not sufficient to supply even 1 per cent to all the cotton territory, and our investigations would indicate it exceedingly doubtful if planters can afford to use potash at prevailing prices. We are advocating the use for cotton of fertilizer without potash.

F. S. ROYSTER GUANO CO.

CHARLESTON, S. C., January 10, 1916.

E. D. SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Telegram received. Can not quote nitrate of soda nor potash, as we have none to offer and, having no potash, can not offer complete fertilizers mentioned. Quote to-day acid phosphate, 16 per cent bulk, at $13.25 cash f. o. b. our factory. Have already sold at both higher and lower price than this during 1913. Our price averaged about $8.50.

ETIWAN FERTILIZER CO.

CHARLESTON, S. C., January 10, 1916.

Hon. E. D. SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

Telegram received. If present fertilizer situation, especially as to potash, is not improved, the yield of cotton in 1916 should be below normal.

H. H. FICKEN.

COLUMBIA, S. C., January 10, 1916.

Hon. ELLISON D. SMITH,
Washington, D. C.:

Your wire. Lack of potash will materially reduce yield of cotton on all lands in South Carolina except the red-clay soils. To state percentage would be a guess, but with normal season advance of potash would reduce yield probably 15 per cent, in my judgment.

RICHARD I. MANNING, Governor.

COLUMBIA, S. C., January 10, 1916.

E. D. SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

Replying to yours of 8th, lack of potash will not seriously affect production on red lands of Piedmont and foothill country. On lighter soils in that section will probably affect yield per acre 15 per cent. Average reduction and yield per acre without potash for rest of State might, perhaps, be 25 to 30 per cent. If potash is not secured, in my opinion, there would be a reduction of 20 per cent for whole State, or falling off of 300,000 bales from an acreage normally producing 1,600,000 bales.

E. J. WATSON, Commissioner.

SUMTER, S. C., January 10, 1916.

E. D. SMITH,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Wire received. My opinion is that on account of present potash-kainit situation cotton yield will be reduced 50 per cent.

W. B. BOYLE.

SUMTER, S. C., January 8, 1916.

Senator E. D. SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

Answering yours, would say yield would be cut 50 per cent.

NEILL O'DONNELL.

GREENVILLE, S. C., January 9, 1916.

Senator E. D. SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

The present fertilizer situation looks very bad for cotton. The yield will be forced 35 per cent per acre in this State.

H. B. TINDAL.

GREENVILLE, S. C., January 8, 1916.

Hon. E. D. SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

Your telegram received. The yield of cotton will be greatly reduced if the fertilizer situation is not improved.

JOHN T. WOODSIDE.

LYNCHBURG, S. C., January 8, 1916.

Senator E. D. SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

Without potash our crop will be 40 per cent short.

T. N. GRIFFIN.

BENNETTSVILLE, S. C., January 8, 1916.

Senator E. D. SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

Our opinion is impossible to make anything like average crop without potash. Possible production, two-thirds average crop.

C. E. BREEDEN.

RALEIGH, N. C., January 8, 1916.

Senator E. D. SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

Two hundred and fifty per acre.

W. A. GRAHAM.

ATLANTA, GA., January 10, 1916.

Senator E. D. SMITH, Washington, D. C.:

Scarcity of high-grade ingredients for fertilizers, in my opinion, will affect materially production of cotton in Georgia in 1916.

J. D. PRICE,
Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. These telegrams are all of the same tenor, Mr. President. I consider that the situation which confronts not only the South in the production of cotton but the world at large in the use of it demands that the present Congress shall take some action looking to the relief of the situation which promises to seriously cripple one of the great, if not the greatest, agricultural industries from the export standpoint and from the standpoint of our supremacy in the textile world.

I hope that the resolution will be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

STATISTICS RELATING TO WAGE EARNERS.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 67), which was read and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Labor be, and he is hereby, directed to investigate and report, as far as it is practicable, upon the mortality and the disability by accident or by disease incident to or resulting from the various occupations in which the wage earners of the United States are engaged.

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD—BANK CLERKS' PAY.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I ask for the consideration of two resolutions heretofore submitted by me. The first resolution for which I ask consideration is resolution No. 62, which is addressed to the Federal Reserve Board.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution for which consideration is asked by the Senator from Illinois. The resolution will be read.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 62) submitted by Mr. LEWIS on the 8th instant, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Reserve Board of the United States be requested to enter upon investigation of the amounts paid as salaries to the employees and subordinate officers of all such banks of the United States as are under the jurisdiction of the board, with the object of suggesting an increase of compensation to the employees consistent with the service done and the increased cost of living expenses.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the resolution requests that the Federal Reserve Board shall examine into the question of the compensation of the bank clerks under the jurisdiction of that board and ascertain whether they are being paid in proportion to the work they are doing and consistent with the cost of their living.

I desire to inform the Senate that I have received very many complaints—and I dare say many of my colleagues in the Senate have received the same—from many bank clerks from Illinois and throughout the country employed in banks that are within the general Federal reserve system, complaining of the compensation they are obtaining, the long hours of work, the increased burdens that are put upon them by the new conditions, and further complaining that their compensation is so small and the increased cost of living is so great that they can not with dignity or comfort exist.

I merely ask by this resolution that we request the Federal Reserve Board to make an examination into the subject for themselves, with a view of ascertaining what would be just respecting such employees to make appropriate suggestions to the employers, confident as I am that these employers will do full justice to such employees. I respectfully ask that the resolution be put upon its passage.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I should like to say for myself that I shall vote for a measure of the kind proposed by the Senator from Illinois with all the heart and earnestness that I have. It might, however, be extended to almost every department of our service. I feel that this is a proposition against which none will contend, that the average clerk or Government employee is paid a most miserable stipend, and, with the expenses that surround the average clerk, his situation is quite as bad as is that of the bank clerk. I would broaden the scope of such a proposition to include all the departments of our Government.

Mr. LEWIS. Of course, Mr. President, this particular resolution being addressed to the single object of the bank employees, and being directed to the Federal Reserve Board, could hardly cover the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I understand that.

Mr. LEWIS. But an amendment on his part, of course, can not be avoided, and would be supported by me. I submit the resolution, and ask unanimous consent that it be adopted.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator what is the exact purport of this resolution? Is it sought by the action of the Senate to compel the banks to increase the pay of their clerks? Do I understand that to be the proposition?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, there is no object whatever on the part of the resolution for the Senate to interfere with the banks. It is to request the Federal Reserve Board to have examinations made of the banks under their jurisdiction, so far as they can consistent with their official duties, respecting the salaries and compensation of bank employees, and then to make such recommendations to the different banks which are members of the Federal Reserve System as would appear to be just under the circumstances. I confide in the spirit of fairness and justice of the bank officials and proprietors to feel that they would cooperate in the suggestions.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, Mr. President, I see no harm in that, but I can not see what earthly good the resolution will do.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Illinois if this resolution is so broad in its scope—I have not read it—as to include in the examination the employees of all banks or only those of national banks?

Mr. LEWIS. I answer the Senator that the object of the resolution is to comprehend any banks that are within the system of the Federal reserve, any bank that is either part of the system now or may under the law come within the system.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, a question only of the Senator from Illinois: What authority has the United States to determine the compensation of employees in either the Federal reserve banks or in the national banks?

Mr. LEWIS. I answer the Senator from Iowa by saying: No more than the Industrial Commission had power to investigate and ascertain the facts of wages and pay of industrial institutions and make recommendations concerning the wages and conditions of labor of these industrial employees. The public sentiment of justice would have to be relied upon, and that has invariably operated with success; for we have no power, answering the Senator from Iowa, to enforce upon any bank what wages it shall pay, and we would have no way of executing by any form of process either the figures that might be arrived at by this examination or the suggestions which might be made as a result of it. It must be left to the sense of justice on the part of the banks themselves after the suggestions have been made by the Federal Reserve Board, which has jurisdiction of the banks.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then, Mr. President, may I ask one more question? Ought not the resolution be broad enough so that the Federal Reserve Board could report the comparative compensation paid to these employees, taking into account the compensation paid to other people who work just as hard?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, there is a great deal to be said in favor of the suggestion of the Senator; but this was in my mind, and I submit it to him, that it was not as wise nor just to tender a resolution that authorized publicity as to the compensation which men were obtaining, or as to private matters touching their relation with their employers, or of the private business of the banks and their aids. I felt it would be better to leave the matter in the hands of the board, to use their own judgment as to the method they would employ and the suggestions they would make to the banks; but I will consider any amendment which the Senator from Iowa desires to tender upon that subject after I see its purport.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I desire to inquire whether the Senator has made any investigation as to the authority of the Federal Reserve Board to inquire of the banks as to the compensation they pay their clerks. Have they that authority? I am not familiar with any provision of law which gives it to them. I understand that they have certain powers with reference to the banks, but whether they have power to ask them what is the compensation or salaries of their employees I am not informed.

Mr. LEWIS. I will say to the Senator from New Jersey that the suggestion made by him does raise one of the doubtful questions in connection with this resolution or any other of its nature. I invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Federal Reserve Board assumed the right to suggest the rates of interest for borrowers when they are too high or when they are too low. Under this power the board lately came to the rescue of the cotton people of the South and the grain farmers of the West. Upon the assumption that the board has complete jurisdiction to suggest, and in some degree direct, the rates to be paid to the bank by borrowers, or the rates to be asked by the bank—under that general supervisory clause, I assume, I answer the Senator from New Jersey, that the Federal Reserve Board has a right to investigate the compensation the employees of the institutions are receiving from that same profit obtained by the banks from their borrowers. I assume, I also may say, that they would probably report the fact if they found a legal obstruction. Assuming that that power is with them under the general law, I tender the resolution with a view of reaching the desired result without embarrassment to banks or the employers.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Illinois whether he would not be satisfied to have this resolution referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, in view of the fact there is some doubt as to the power of the Federal Reserve Board, and also in view of the fact that the board is already overburdened with new duties?

The Committee on Banking and Currency will meet this week, and I can promise the Senator an early report.

Mr. LEWIS. I will not object to that, if it is desired by the Banking and Currency Committee to have the resolution go there, so that any Senator might present any views connected with it. Therefore, if it is desired by the Committee on Banking and Currency that this resolution go before it, so that anyone who so desires may be heard, I move that it be sent to the Committee on Banking and Currency for a speedy hearing on its merits.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What action does the Senator desire to have taken in regard to Senate resolution 61, which the Secretary will read?

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 61) submitted by Mr. LEWIS on January 8, as follows:

Resolved, That the Board of Federal Trade Commission report at its earliest convenience to the Senate whether the duties of the commission imposed upon it by the law and demand of the provisions of the act creating the said commission render inconvenient or embarrassing the assuming the duties and offices of a tariff board, as provided in the terms of that certain tariff-board authorization of Congress of the period of 1909 and 1910 contained in appropriation bills of the Congress of 1910 and 1911.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, upon the request of a brother Senator, I have consented to have that resolution go over for a while. I ask that it may lie over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over. Morning business is closed.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2409) to authorize the Ohio-West Virginia Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across the Ohio River at the city of Steubenville, Jefferson County, Ohio, which were, on page 1, line 5, after "Virginia," to insert "its successors and assigns," and, on page 1, line 7, after "River," to insert ", at a point suitable to the interests of navigation."

Mr. CHILTON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMISSION ON INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution (No. 9) of the House of Representatives, which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the final report of the Commission on Industrial Relations be printed as a House document and that 100,000 additional copies be printed and bound in cloth, of which 70,000 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives and 30,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have just observed the reading of the House concurrent resolution providing for the printing of the final report of the Commission on Industrial Relations as a House document; also 100,000 additional copies to be printed for distribution to the public, 70,000 of which shall be for the use of the House and 30,000 for the Senate. On December 7, 1915, I introduced a resolution similar to the one which has passed the House, and on the same day the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] introduced a resolution somewhat similar, but his resolution provided for the printing of the testimony also.

Mr. President, during the past month and a half I have received several hundred requests for copies of the final report of the Commission on Industrial Relations. A large number of these requests have come from the State of Arizona, but many have come from other States. I urge at this time upon the Committee on Printing that they give the concurrent resolution which has been passed by the House prompt, speedy, and careful consideration, with a view of reporting it back favorably, so that the public in general may have a sufficient number of these reports to satisfy the demand. I am anxious to see the report and testimony printed, so that the information contained therein may be available to the general public.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 320. An act to authorize the county of Bonner, Idaho, to construct a bridge across Pend Oreille River; and

H. R. 775. An act granting the consent of Congress to J. P. Jones and others to construct one or more bridges across the Chattahoochee River between the counties of Coweta and Carroll, in the State of Georgia.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. NEWLANDS obtained the floor.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nevada will yield to me, I should like to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Philippine bill; and then, under that order, the Senator from Nevada can take the floor and address the Senate on the subject he has in mind.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That will be perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 381.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 381) to declare the purpose of the people of the United States as to the future political status of the people of the Philippine Islands and to provide a more autonomous government for those islands.

A DEMOCRATIC LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the Democratic Party, after nearly three years of power, is about to enter upon a presidential campaign, in which its acts of legislation and administration will be up for criticism or commendation. The Democratic Party is within a year of an election which will determine whether its lease of power shall continue or end. We have the time and the power before the next election to do every beneficial thing we ought to do and to undo every mistaken thing we ought not to have done. It is a time for mutual candor and counsel and for efficiency of methods in devising and carrying out a definite legislative program.

Prior to the last presidential election I wrote for The Independent an article entitled "Possibilities of a Democratic Administration," in which, after stating that the Democratic Party was opposed to radical readjustments and would feel its way gradually and prudently toward needed reforms, I expressed myself as follows:

By pursuing this policy we will avoid the hysterical outcry against needed economic changes, which has so often beaten us; we will pacify labor, the manufacturer, and law-abiding wealth, and we will steer clear of business depression and panic, than which nothing could be more prejudicial to our success either at the election or in subsequent control and administration of the Government. We must break up the habit of swinging like a pendulum from reform to reaction through the intermediate process of panic.

My purpose in this article was to do what I could to diminish the apprehension, which a political and congressional experience of many years convinced me existed among those engaged in manufacture, trade, banking, transportation, and enterprise generally, that somehow Democratic success meant such radical action regarding so-called business interests as to produce industrial paralysis and accompanying unemployment and want.

I believed that the divisions in the adversary party offered an opportunity for success and I was desirous that we should not only by our campaign utterances allay unreasonable apprehension, but also by our subsequent legislation and administration proceed to our ultimate goal by such reasonable and moderate stages as would command the confidence of the business interests generally of the country and insure a renewal of power.

The wisdom of this policy seemed all the more apparent in contemplation of the historical fact that since the commencement of the Civil War, a period of 55 years, the Democratic Party has been in power nationally only 11 years, and of that period only 4 years consecutively, in every instance losing power as the result of the fear or the resentment of the business classes with their accompanying conditions of unemployment, which made most potent with the workingman "the full-dinner-pail" argument and caused them to reluctantly yield to the persuasion and coercion of our opponents.

THE RECENT ELECTIONS.

We were in similar danger at the congressional election of 1914; a danger only averted by the European war, which brought into sudden contrast the President's policy of watchful waiting regarding Mexico with the mad haste of the European nations as they rushed into war, and which made that policy as popular as it had theretofore been unpopular. The realization that similar prudence would keep us out of European complications saved the Democratic Party at the last election from the defeat which would have surely come as the result of the general prostration of business, popularly attributed to our economic legislation.

It is true that the "intervening process of panic" alluded to in my article has not been experienced, but an industrial and commercial depression has been experienced and has been coterminous with Democratic control of legislation. It would not do to charge this to the European war, first, because that war though injurious to our production and trade in its inception has since become a stimulant to production and export, and, second, because the commencement of this depression antedates the European war and was contemporaneous with our legislation regarding the tariff, banking, and trade.

The recent elections indicate that we will be in similar danger at the coming presidential election, unless the European war continues, and makes the President's sagacious and firm handling of our foreign affairs the overshadowing issue. But if that war soon comes to a close, and the manufacture of munitions ends, and added to this source of unemployment our markets now protected by the war from invasion are overwhelmed by the cheap products of the nations just emerging from war and eager to get back their gold, we may have not only an aggravated industrial depression to meet, but a financial condition fruitful of paralyzing caution. Such conditions may make the election turn not upon our foreign policy, but upon domestic economic conditions, and the "Full-dinner-pail" argument may again be potential.

We are about to face a united Republican Party, chastened by adversity and eager to persuade, and the question is whether the Democratic Party, having done much under this administration in the interest of genuine reform, is again to be thrown out of power and deprived of the opportunity of continued usefulness, simply because an intervening period of depression subjects us again to the charge of "Democratic hard times," with its accompanying loss of votes.

All this is possible, although the general trend of Democratic legislation has been most commendable. We have revised the tariff downward, and have lopped off its excesses. We have given the country a better financial system, one which in time will do much to correct the spasmodic expansions and contractions which in the past have drifted us to unemployment and distress. We have taken hold of the trusts and through a Trade Commission have opened the way for the peaceful correction of abuses by investigation, publicity, and regulation, thus making the commission a friendly guide to business instead of a relentless prosecutor. And yet the course of this legislation has seriously alarmed the interests affected, and has caused them to exercise caution in enterprise restrictive of employment and productive of want and suffering. It is safe to say that the manufacturing, the banking, and the large corporate interests are hostile to the Democratic Party, and that their employees are also preparing to throw their weight against it simply because its administration has not brought good times, but on the contrary has, in their judgment, brought bad times.

ANALYSIS OF DEMOCRATIC LEGISLATION.

It seems to me that it will be profitable, therefore, to analyze our legislation and the causes of this depression before we proceed to consider what can be done to relieve it.

And here let me say that little criticism can be made of the general character of our action. It was distinctively in the line of needed reforms. Much of it probably fell somewhat short of the goal we should ultimately reach, but it may be that in the limited period we went too far and too fast and thus endangered the vehicle which carried these reforms. There was no necessity for this, for the opposing party was not willing to go a tithe of the distance we contemplated and could never reproach us with not going far enough.

A considerable experience in public life covering a period of 23 years, and commencing with the second Cleveland administration, has convinced me that no political party can hope to remain in power which adopts radical instead of evolutionary methods of reform. This is due to the fact that radical methods involve the alarm of the beneficiaries of existing abuses, and their consequent caution and timidity so arrest activity in industry as to produce unemployment and the attendant dissatisfaction of the workers. Thus their vote finally falling in line with the vote of the employing interests, overthrows all plans for needed reforms and puts reaction again in power.

This experience has impelled me, not only in Congress by the presentation of various legislative programs but in the national conventions by platform declarations, to endeavor to secure assurance from the Democratic Party that while it had in view the ultimate triumph of correct principles in production, trade, banking, and transportation, and had its goal clearly in view, it would approach that goal by a gradual process which would not prove unduly disturbing.

THE TARIFF.

Regarding the tariff, my view was that our undertaking was not to immediately adopt a theoretically correct tariff system, but simply to climb gradually down from the protective heights upon which the Republican Party had placed the manufacturing interests of the country; not to jump down at the risk of destruction, but to climb down slowly and laboriously with a view to preserving, as far as practicable, every American industry and injuring none.

In the Denver platform, after a long struggle in the committee on platform, my amendment inserting the word "gradual" before "reduction" was put in the platform on the tariff, and at Baltimore this action was put in different phrase by declaring that in making tariff reductions the Democratic Party would not injure or destroy any legitimate American industry. I felt that in these two planks we were giving peace bonds to the country which would assure the interests affected that the process of reform would be so gradual as to avoid sudden reversals.

When we came to a practical realization of what we had promised by legislation, we were inclined, I thought, to go too fast and too far. It is not necessary to allude to our action regarding sugar, the basic agricultural product of all our insular possessions as well as the arid and semiarid States. It is conceded, I believe, that the need of revenue necessitates the repeal of the further reduction determined upon. Nor will I refer to other special reductions. My general view was that the reduction on dutiable articles from an average of over 42 per cent to an average of less than 25 per cent was too great, taking away possibly the entire margin of profit and even more. I also felt that whatever might be our view as to the reductions ultimately attainable under a perfect tariff system, we should not seek to make them completely operative immediately; that as we had been a hundred years in creating tariff abuses we could safely take 10 or 20 years in correcting them, and so I proposed that the reductions called for by our bill should be apportioned over a period of years instead of putting them into immediate effect. I held out upon this issue until the very day of the final vote and only surrendered to the party judgment as the result of action in caucus, which put upon me a responsibility I was unwilling to assume, of making the party will ineffective.

The effect of the tariff legislation was what I feared it would be. The tying up of production in this country was the result not of a malicious effort of the manufacturers to teach the country a lesson, but of the caution and timidity which can in many cases be proved to be without reason, but which nevertheless always exist under like conditions.

While I accept my full share of responsibility for the tariff bill, which I with apprehension of immediate ill effect voted for, candor will not permit me to assert, as many of its supporters do, that world-wide causes were at the bottom of the general contraction of production following its agitation and passage. It is an indisputable fact that the paralysis came before the European war was inaugurated, and that its causes were mainly domestic.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM.

So also with banking legislation. Instead of providing some simple method for mobilizing the banking reserves of State and National banks under the control of a nonpartisan board or commission resembling the Interstate Commerce Commission, which would gradually through powers of investigation, publicity, correction, and recommendations to Congress, work out further reforms, we were intent upon legislation which alarmed the banks by the largeness of our proposals. Hence the immediate effect of the movement which had in view the loosening of credit, with a view to aiding our manufacturing institutions in an economic crisis resulting from tariff reductions, was a restriction of credit, prejudicial to the entire business of the country, both manufacturing and commercial. I believe that a more moderate course would have secured the cooperation and support of the banks instead of their hostility. The essentials required were mobilization under Federal direction of a part of the reserves of both National and State banks for use at the point of financial danger or stringency, and the creation of a Federal board for such direction. As persuasion (not force under the interstate-commerce power) was to be applied to the State banks, it was necessary to make the scheme of legislation simple and attractive.

The State and National banks being once unionized under such a scheme, it would have been easy later on to enlarge and perfect such legislation under the guidance of experience. The State banks would have been willing, in consideration of the advantages of such a protective union, to allow a part of their capital in the shape of reserves lying in their vaults to be mobilized under Federal direction, but they were unwilling to subscribe more capital and turn it over to Federal direction and control. They also hesitated to turn themselves over to the inquisitorial and correctional powers of the comptroller's office,

As it was we failed to make the Reserve Board nonpartisan, tied it to an executive department through the membership of the Secretary of the Treasury and the comptroller, subjected the member banks to the investigating and correctional powers of a single partisan comptroller instead of the composite judgment of a quasi judicial nonpartisan board, and exacted additional and unnecessary capital from member banks, thus organizing the reserve associations into profit-making institutions, a purpose entirely foreign to their nature as protective organizations. The result is that the union of banks is incomplete, the State half being outside and the National half inside the reserve organization, with the prospect that those outside will remain so unless the law is modified.

Had we simply provided for the union and membership of State and National banks in Federal reserve associations without exacting further contributions of capital than a certain percentage of their existing reserves and then federalized all these associations under the direction of an independent, nonpartisan Federal Reserve Board with power of investigation and correction similar to those of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Trade Commission, and had we merged in this board the comptroller and all his powers, functions, and employees, as we did with the Bureau of Corporations and the Trade Commission, and provided for the gradual adaptation of the State banks to Federal requirements and practices, thus avoiding radical and immediate changes in conditions, little opposition would, I believe, have been encountered in the State banks. I think it would be wise to shape the way for legislation on the above lines during this session by making the Reserve Board nonpartisan, merging the comptroller's office with all the powers and duties in the Reserve Board, and doing away with all capital requirements beyond the percentage of reserves of member banks now required.

THE TRUSTS.

So also with the trusts. I have believed for years that we should proceed in trade as we have in transportation to correct abuses through a regulating trade commission with limited powers at first, which could be gradually extended through the experience of the commission itself and as a result of their recommendations regarding needed legislation. Had we confined our legislation to this we would not have experienced the alarm and apprehension created in commercial and productive business generally by the Clayton bill, which even if entirely defensible in its principles, was regarded as producing changes in business innocently conducted and not subject to the charge of abuse as were many of the large interests aimed at.

We have this in production, in banking, and in trade, brought about changes in legislation which have had a restrictive effect upon the production and commerce of the country, an effect clearly experienced before the European war broke out and not at all chargeable to it.

It is unnecessary to demonstrate that any of these changes were in essence of principle wrong. All I contend is that ignorance, timidity, and alarm should always be taken into consideration in framing reform legislation, and that the party that does not take them into consideration is likely to be swept out of power before the full benefits of its policies, radical perhaps at the start, but containing the seed of a proper evolution, are realized, and this I fear will be our situation at the next election unless meanwhile we apply ourselves to conciliatory measures that will abate and diminish this apprehension.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSES.

What, then, are the problems before us? First, preparedness, the problem which the President wisely presents first for our consideration. Without taking up minutely his proposals, I will say that there is no need of hysteria upon this subject. Force, both civil and military, is needed for the maintenance of public peace and order, whether domestic or international. Whether this force shall be employed for aggression or defense, for conquest or the maintenance of the public peace and order, is a mere matter of training, and I have no doubt our legislation will be in the latter direction.

We must of course provide a rational scheme of national defense. I do not see why this should involve a very large increase in the total expenditure. The difficulty with us has been not so much the extent of our preparations as the inefficiency of our administration. The national defense is a unit. The Army and Navy should be brought into coordination through some governing board or council of national defense which will bring them into teamwork instead of encouraging competition between the War and the Navy Departments as to which shall get the larger appropriations. The experience of other countries, such as Australia and Switzerland, points the way toward both efficient and economical administration. The cooperation of sovereignties should be secured, both national and State, in this work, and a system should be devised under which more officers shall be trained, for each officer in time of emergency will become the organizing force of a hundred men, whereas the single private soldier becomes only individually useful in time of war. Our military system should not involve the maintenance of a large standing army, but the training of our youth in everything that relates to military discipline and the use of arms, such training to be developed under a system of education which will instill in the mind of every boy soldier that he is being trained not for conquest but for national defense and the maintenance of order and peace under laws and tribunals, both domestic and international, created for that purpose. Thus the military instinct will develop not upon the lines of aggression and conquest but upon the lines of the maintenance of civil order.

AN AUXILIARY NAVY.

Next comes the question of an auxiliary navy. It is indisputable that if war comes our fighting ships would be derelict in the ocean without the carrying and supply ships necessary to support them. Thirty or forty million dollars should be immediately provided for this purpose, as we have no adequate merchant marine. While I supported the administration shipping bill which failed at the last session owing to Democratic defection, I felt that it would have been wiser to shape the legislation on the lines which I have been urging for years, and which would have passed almost unanimously if substituted for that measure. It provided for the construction of auxiliary ships of the Navy, to be used in time of war to support the fighting ships, and in time of peace manned in part by the Naval Reserves for opening up new routes of commerce and mail service, under lease to operating companies upon terms fixed by a commission consisting of the Secretaries of the Navy and Commerce and the Postmaster General. Such a proposal would have had the support of Democrats who were devoted to the traditional individualism of the Democratic Party and who had not yielded to the doctrine of collectivism supported by many Democrats but not yet adopted as a party tenet. I think it unwise to put such men under condemnation by the party and believe it would be wiser to shape the legislation in such a way as to make it meet directly the demands of the Navy and only incidentally the requirements of foreign commerce. Later on, the needed ships having been acquired, the scheme could be enlarged if deemed advisable, so as to cover the purpose of the administration bill.

A TARIFF BOARD.

The newspapers state that the administration is considering the danger arising from a dumping process which is likely to be used by foreign nations after the war. It is possible that our fears in this respect may be exaggerated, but it is clear that the warring countries will make an immense effort to get back some of the gold which has drifted to this country, and the best method of doing so will be to sell us their goods at low prices. Their wage level will be probably lower than ever, and this country may feel the effects of a flood of merchandise which will not only displace the products of domestic labor but also, by withdrawal of a large portion of our stock of gold, create alarm. The effect of this can be imagined, particularly when the large force now employed in munition making is released from work. It is doubtful whether such a process of cheap sales unaccompanied by proof of conspiracy to depress and control our markets can be antagonized by the exercise of the powers of the Trade Commission regarding fair competition. It possibly can be met by slowing down the entry of such goods, either by taxation or by limited exclusion. A tariff board could be organized with power to act in either way under a definite rule fixed by Congress or the Trade Commission could be authorized to exercise such power. I believe in a tariff board and have for years advocated its creation, but it will be difficult to harmonize such legislation with the traditions of the Democratic Party or the phrases which it has canonized, such as "Protection is robbery," although the Democrats of the Senate united with the Progressive-Republicans to provide a tariff board in the Payne-Aldrich bill. So far as I am concerned, I decline to yield to the tyranny of a phrase and am willing to restrict invading forces, whether of goods or men, if the interests of the country require, but much counsel within the party will have to be taken on this subject.

PUBLIC WORKS AND RIVER DEVELOPMENT.

We should not in my judgment halt in the constructive work of the country. On the contrary, having thus far devoted ourselves to correctional legislation which, however necessary, has been disturbing to business and the employment of labor, we should press vigorously constructive work employing labor. We are not doing enough constructive work. We should do more. We should not cut off our public building, but we should see to it that the public buildings are apportioned, not under the present spoils system, which gives an individual post office as spoils to a Congressman or Senator who devotes himself to the job of securing it, but under a broad and comprehensive system, which, through a board or commission composed of experts in construction engineering and architecture, and with the aid of the National Arts Commission, will take in view the requirements of the entire country and every part of it and adapt the buildings to the special uses and requirements of every locality, uniting art with utility in such a way as to make these buildings a perpetual memorial of the intelligence and culture of the time. We are spending many million dollars in a sporadic way in this direction. We should spend more in a scientific, accurate, and comprehensive way under the new plan.

We should take hold of our rivers, not under the spoils bill called the river and harbor bill, as at present, but by separating them entirely from harbor improvements, planning for the complete development of every watershed with its main rivers and their tributaries from source to mouth, having in view the complete regulation of the rivers with all their branches in such a way as to prevent every destructive use and to promote every beneficial use. We are now engaged in dredging channels and in building levees along the lower reaches of our great rivers, to protect both the channels and the adjoining lands from the destructive floods precipitated upon them from the regions above. We should not only maintain this needed work, but we should also control these waters before they reach the period of flood by taking hold of them as soon as they fall from the heavens throughout the country, leading them over the arid lands through storage works and canals, impounding them in large reservoirs for the development of water power, and for use in intensive cultivation, increasing the natural storage capacity of the soil by the development of forests and the promotion of cultivation, which will absorb instead of shedding the waters, thus gradually slowing their progress from our mountains and valleys toward the gulfs, bays, and oceans in such a way as to mass them for beneficial use and to prevent their massing for destructive use, thus stabilizing the flow of the streams themselves, so that instead of being torrential in certain seasons and dry in others they will afford at all times a sufficient flow to maintain their use for water carriage, the cheapest in the world, a carriage which should be coordinated with rail transportation and ocean transportation in such a way as to make them all dovetail to the advantage of commerce.

We are now expending many millions annually in ineffective river regulation. We should expend $60,000,000 annually for a period of 10 years in effective river regulation, which will involve the cooperation of the Engineering Corps of the Army, the Reclamation, Forest, and Drainage Services, the Geological and Coast and Geodetic Surveys, and other scientific services in team work under common plans, and which will also unite the Nation and the States by a system of cooperation, each within their jurisdiction, in the advancement of works which will secure the full conservation of the water resources of the country for every useful purpose. There is, in my judgment, no work so all-inclusive as this, for it involves the promotion of commerce, the reclamation of waste lands suffering either from want of or too much water, the development of forests, the promotion of scientific cultivation of the soil through intensive cultivation, and the development of water power. There is no subject of legislation which presents so many beneficial aspects. And as these rivers are under the jurisdiction of two sovereignties, the national and the State, some method should be found of uniting their powers instead of encouraging them in constant conflicts as to jurisdiction. It would not be impracticable to organize a great industrial army employed in the forests, the rivers, and public works generally, into a reserve force as a part of the national defense.

THE FINANCES.

But where is the money to come from? My answer is additional taxation. This country is not bankrupt—it will readily respond to intelligent taxation which will be spent in a general way for the welfare of the country, and particularly if a large part of the additional taxation is for public works, which will secure employment during a period of depression. Regarding taxation, I am glad to observe that the administration favors the continuance of the existing sugar tax. The duty on sugar has always been a revenue duty. There has never been a period in the history of the Republic that a sugar duty has not existed, except during McKinley's administration, when a bounty was substituted for a tax. This will prevent our revenues from being depleted to the extent of $30,000,000 more, as is threatened by existing legislation.

The second method of increasing our revenue is to extend the area of our income tax. All incomes below $3,000 are now exempt. The limit should be reduced to $2,000 or $1,500, and from this source $50,000,000 or $60,000,000 more annually can be derived.

If more is required it could be obtained under an inheritance tax. It is true the States have largely taken hold of the inheritance tax. It would have been much better had the United States Government inaugurated this tax, for then it would have been uniform throughout the entire country and the individual States could not, as some do, offer asylum to the rich by exempting wealth from this tax. In view of the fact that many of the States have already levied inheritance taxes and an additional tax might be an unjust burden, I would suggest that whatever inheritance tax is imposed should provide that wherever a State has imposed such a tax it should be deducted from the national tax, to the extent, however, of only one-half of the national tax. Thus, under such a system no State now exempting inheritance from taxation would be encouraged in maintaining the present system, for its citizens would have to pay the entire tax imposed by the National Government. The adoption of such legislation by the United States would gradually result in a system under which inheritance taxes would be imposed by every State throughout the country as well as by the National Government; one-half of the total tax imposed upon inheritances, both national and State, would thus go to the respective States and one-half to the National Government. I would deem it advisable to so adjust these additional taxes upon income and inheritances as to do away with the existing war-revenue taxes, many of which are vexatious burdens upon business, leading to evasion, either conscious or unconscious, for my observation is that few people realize how unconsciously they fail to respond to the numerous requirements of the war-revenue tax regarding stamp duties, etc.

There are, of course, other matters of legislation and administration which should be taken up, such as the settlement of the conservation question in aid of the development of our national resources, but I do not refer to them in detail, lest too extended a discussion may involve a confusion of ideas. The main things to be considered in addition to the questions relating to the tariff and banking, above referred to, are the military defense, an auxiliary navy, the public constructive works, and the unlocking and development of our natural resources.

A CONSTRUCTIVE PROGRAM.

Epitomizing what I have said, I urge the following as a constructive program for this session:

1. PREPAREDNESS.

(a) In addition to a moderate enlargement of the Army and Navy, an increase of efficiency by regarding the national defense as a unit through the creation of a national council of defense, consisting of the Secretaries of War and the Navy, and other experts, with authority to formulate and submit plans.

(b) An increase in the military and naval schools, with a view to training officers for the organization and discipline of troops in case of war, and the utilization for this purpose of the schools of agriculture and the mechanic arts, whose fundamental law—the Morrill Act—provides for military training for our youth as a part of the national duty.

(c) National cooperation with the States in a system of public-school education which will train our youth in the use of arms for the national defense; such education, in addition to military discipline and training, to inculcate the fundamental idea that such training and discipline are not for the purpose of aggression or conquest, but for the maintenance of peace and order and in aid of tribunals, both national and international, organized for their maintenance.

(d) Construction of auxiliary ships for our Navy, to be used in time of war in aid of the fighting ships and in time of peace in establishing new routes of commerce and mail to foreign countries, through lease to shipping companies under the control of a commission consisting of the Secretaries of the Navy and of Commerce and the Postmaster General.

2. TARIFF AND TAXATION.

(a) The grant to a tariff commission or the Federal Trade Commission of all the powers of a needed tariff board, including, in addition to the powers of investigation, publicity, and recommendation, the power to protect, under a rule fixed by Congress, American industries against the combination or action of foreign producers and traders intended to unduly displace the products of American industry in our own markets.

(b) An increase in the area of the income tax so as to cover incomes of $1,500.

(c) An inheritance tax which will permit the deduction, to the extent of one-half of the national tax, of similar taxes collected by State governments.

3. BANKING.

Amendment of the national reserve act:

(a) By providing that the Federal Reserve Board, like the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Trade Commission, shall be be nonpartisan and independent of the executive department, eliminating the Secretary of the Treasury and the comptroller, as such, from its membership, and merging the comptroller's office with all its officials, powers, and functions in the Federal Reserve Board.

(b) By doing away with all capital requirements of member banks, except the percentage of reserves now required by law.

4. PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

(a) The creation of an expert board of public buildings, under the Interior Department, which, with the aid of the National Commission of Fine Arts, will take in view the requirements of the entire country regarding public buildings, and, under a rule fixed by Congress, proceed to the expenditure of a fixed sum per annum, not less than $30,000,000, for public buildings.

5. RIVER DEVELOPMENT AND REGULATION.

Providing for the separation of river development from harbor improvements by the creation of a commission composed of the Secretaries of War, Commerce, Interior, and Agriculture, and the cooperation of the services under them, as well as the cooperation of the National Government with the States, in devising and carrying out comprehensive plans for the regulation of river flow with a view to the promotion of navigation, the mitigation of floods through the development of forests and proper methods of cultivation, the storage and control of flood waters for the reclamation of arid and swamp lands and the development of water power, and the creation of an ample fund providing for not less than $60,000,000 annually for 10 years for continuous work.

Mr. President, later on I shall introduce resolutions for a legislative program upon the lines of this speech.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I believe the welfare of the United States requires the establishment of a nonpartisan permanent tariff commission. After the war is over it may easily happen, in my judgment, that unfair practices may be resorted to by manufacturing companies abroad slipping into the United States goods even below cost, and in that way interfere with the normal, proper course of business of our own enterprises in this country.

I wish to say that the establishment of such a nonpartisan tariff commission, which was referred to by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] in his remarks just made, can be carried out upon lines which are entirely harmonious with the policies heretofore pursued by the Democracy. It is not necessary that such a commission should be constructed upon the avowed theory of the so-called "protective" tariff. There are abundant reasons why such a commission should be established regardless of whether a man believes in the protective tariff or whether he does not.

In the first place, every Member of Congress and the executive department should have the opportunity of knowing what the truth is with regard to the factors which enter into the production, the cost of production, and the cost of distribution of any one of the items on the schedules which are important to the interest of the manufacturing establishments in the United States. Every man on the floor of the Senate is perfectly aware that, with the overwhelming volume of testimony poured out before the committee when the schedules are being considered, no man has the time or the opportunity or the ability to completely master the vast mass of conflicting and unreliable testimony submitted, differentiate the truth from that which is false, and arrive at any sufficient knowledge with regard to the items on the schedules.

There are about 4,000 of these items. The evidence taken on the tariff question when I first entered the Senate in 1908, presented to the Members of the Senate, taken on the House side, consisted of 8,000 printed pages. The evidence was taken without the security or protection which would be afforded by a law punishing perjury applied to false swearing before our committees. Men were permitted to come before those committees and state that which was false for the purpose of misleading the legislators. The evidence was in direct conflict with itself, one group of men desiring to have one policy pursued, another the exact contrary, and each giving evidence accordingly. For example, in the bringing in of zinc ore from Mexico, the smelters desiring the lowest possible rate, the miners of zinc ore in Oklahoma desiring the highest possible rate, there was a flat conflict, each one giving testimony at variance with the other, and the legislator, busy as he is with his daily correspondence and with his duties upon the floor and upon his committees, finding it impossible to ascertain what the truth is, justifies a tariff commission which shall accurately ascertain the truth and let the conscientious legislator know what the facts are if he is to pass upon the fixing of these schedules.

For that reason, therefore, a tariff commission is perfectly justified, in order to ascertain the truth with regard to these items on the schedules and in order to keep Members of Congress informed of the changing factors which enter into these questions, because they are going through a constant flux. They are not the same one year with another.

Mr. LEWIS. Will the Senator from Oklahoma allow me to interrupt him with an inquiry at this point?

Mr. OWEN. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senate debated in a most energetic and industrious manner, as was done by both sides of the Senate, in the creation of the Federal Trade Commission. Does the Senator see anything incompatible with the duties of the Federal Trade Commission as now prescribed by law from that board entering into duties such as he has defined and which he regards appropriate and necessary for something called a tariff commission?

Mr. OWEN. I do.

Mr. LEWIS. Then I should like the Senator's viewpoint, if I do not divert him from his line, as to wherein he sees that the creation of their duties is incompatible, serving as such tariff commission.

Mr. OWEN. That incompatibility arises from the fact that it is not humanly possible for the present Trade Commission to perform its present function completely, much less undertake this work, which will require the entire time of laborious and expert men to ascertain the facts and the factors governing the cost of manufacture and the cost of distribution. There is a limit to human capacity.

Mr. LEWIS. I understand the Senator feels that the present duties put upon the board by the law exhaust their capacity, and that to put this other duty upon them would leave it a burden that could not be performed.

Mr. OWEN. Take such a commission as the Interstate Commerce Commission. In my judgment that commission now is burdened beyond what flesh and blood can bear. I think there should be a method pursued which would always keep in mind what can be accomplished by the officials who are charged with a duty and not put upon them more than they can properly and efficiently accomplish.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire, with the Senator's kind consideration at this moment, to say the object of my query was this: I am desirous of avoiding the creation of any unnecessary commissions or further unnecessary officeholders and adding to the list of extra salaries in view of the condition of the Treasury of the Government and the necessity of the large expenditures that I think will be forthcoming for the preparation of national defense and other objects. It was with that purpose in my mind I took the liberty to inquire of the Senator whether he thought the duties were compatible and simply for that purpose only.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, there is another good reason why there should be established a tariff commission. The great problem which should be worked out, in my judgment, for the welfare and happiness of the United States is to keep the productive energies of this Nation constantly and profitably employed.

Our foreign commerce ought to be enlarged as much as practicable. I believe that our imports are paid for by our exports and that our exports are paid for by our imports; that each nation must keep its own gold supply; that there is no such thing in reality as a balance of trade beyond the narrow meaning of these statistics gathered from partial facts and which are likely to mislead the country by making it appear that in some years we do not receive as much as we send abroad. We always receive the equivalent of what we send abroad either in merchandise or in service or in obligations of debt, our own, perhaps, as at present. There is now pouring back a vast flood of American securities paying for the extraordinary shipment of goods which we are now sending to Europe; but as it is an axiomatic truth that the whole is equal to the sum of its parts. When a man ships a hundred bales of cotton to Europe and receives its equivalent and you multiply such transactions by a hundred thousand or a hundred million, the equation is still the same. We receive an adequate and approximately equal return for that which we ship abroad. Therefore, in order to energize our own activities we ought to enlarge our foreign commerce and our foreign shipments. In order to accomplish this end reciprocal arrangements ought to be made with the authority of the United States.

It is extremely difficult and slow to negotiate and have confirmed a reciprocal treaty. In my judgment there should be a
